In order to show the young people that he praying open of a tightly closed gate or door is not an easy matter, a door may be used as an illustration. If the door to your meeting room is not at the front, the chairs might be arranged so as to face the door.

The leader may have on hand a piece of wood or chisel with which he should try to open the door. Perhaps several of those present might also try to do this. Then have some one go out on the other side of the door. Again somebody may try to pry open the door with the chisel or wood, but his time, the person at the other side may turn the knob and open the door just a slit. Then the chisel or wood may be placed in, and gradually the door may be opened.

The parallel may be drawn—that although people had been trying to get into heaven by forcing a way in, it was not until God had moved those on the other side of heaven's closed door in answer to the prayers of the Christians, that the door was able to be pried open. Illustrations and other materials from "God's Dynamite" may be brought in right along.

The Eloquent Empties

Are you looking for a few-minute sketch which will bring before the members of the society or church or Sunday school, the need of money for the denomination? The one below is just that—it brings the on-lookers face to face with the necessity for giving, and it does it in a brief but effective way. You will want to use it.

(Curtain rises to show a sitting room, with screen at one side, and an easy chair ready for occupancy. Enter Mr. Jones.)

Jones: Ho Hum! (Stretches). I'm glad to be home at last. That was a long trying session but I guess we got our work finished. (Stretches again.) Let's see. Looks at watch.) Ten o'clock. That's not so late. Guess I'll read a bit before I go to bed. (Goes to table and is about to pick up book. His eyes light on a line of verses) Hello, what's this? It looks like Alice's bag, and the children's. They must have been in a hurry and forgot to take them upstairs. (He is about to push them aside when he notices that they are all open. He picks up one and looks in) Empty. Hmmmm. That's the way they usually are. (He suddenly discovers the note in bag and takes it out. Reads) "Dear Daddy, bankrupt; class-day coming; positively must have a new tennis racquet; owe three dollars on my church envelopes."

Jones: How cute. Let's see what the others have to say. (One at a time, he takes out notes from purses and as he does so, reads) "Dead broke. Please put money in my purse. How can a fellow hold up his head and look like a gentleman on minus nothing?" "Insolvent.

Needed: hats for three women-folks, $20; dues for my church societies, $2, $3, $1; an ice-cream treat for my old ladies, $5; clothes and fixings, $50; new kitchen utensils, $15; call it $100, dear genie of the gold mine." "Please, dear Daddy, fifty cents will make your pussy very happy. Ask and you shall receive."

(Jones laughs until tears roll down his cheeks. Then he takes out purse and fills each of them, saying) Well, they shan't be disappointed. (He sits down to read, but finds himself uninterested.) How cute they were about it, and how empty those purses looked (musingly). How like my life—before I found Christ. Now he has filled the gap to overflowing. (Tries again to read.) Yes, he filled my life.. I wonder if I can do anything for him. (He gazes into space and then screen in front of him is removed to show a large purse wide open. He rubs his eyes to see if he is dreaming. Then goes over to it and says) I wonder if this is like the family's. Whose is it? (He looks inside—and finds a note which he draws out. Reads) Dear Father in Heaven: Our purse is empty—how can we do anything? There are the Bibles, the missionaries, the ministers, and countless other things. Needed—six million dollars. Won't you help us? The Baptists." (Jones holds the note in his hand and muses) I wonder if God will do what I did. (Looks again at note. Then, with a smile says) Of course, he will. But he is waiting for us to do the filling. He has given us the money—so he must be depending on us to fill the purse up. (Then stops and looks into purse.) Of course, it's pretty large—and I can't do it all. But I'll put in as much as I can and others who are filled to overflowing with Christ will probably do the same. (Takes out his own purse and puts in as much money as he can. He is about to close it when the purse seemingly says "Thank you." He starts back, and then smiles.) Ah, my imagination is working overtime. I thought I heard some one say thank you. No one need thank me—it is I who should give the thanks; out of my gifts from God I but took a little to express my gratitude for his good gifts to me. (Bows head and says reverently) Father in heaven, may thy children on earth fill thy purse for thee with the gifts thou has given them.

(Curtain.)

Need Helpers?

Most churches need the help of the young people, but in many instances, the churches do not get that help. You know, most of you, that the purpose of the young people's society is to train for service. Consequently, most church workers turn to the members of the young people's society when they need help. Unfortunately, however, some of the young people do not always see the need for helping the church in its larger tasks and refuse to take the jobs they are asked to assume.

One church has overcome that difficulty. Cards have been printed giving a list of all the workers needed in all departments of the church. These cards are passed out to all the young people of the church and they are asked to check the items in which they are willing to participate. The church offers to train those who are unfamiliar with some work in which they are interested, thus doing away with the threadbare excuse, "But I don't know about it."

Since this is a fairly large church, the needs are greater than those of a smaller church. For example, one item says "Thirty young men and women needed, five for immediate supply teaching in junior department, others to train in class about to be started;" "Six for Scout Masters and Assistants—weekly meetings;" "Six women for Blue Bird and Camp Fire guardians and assistants—weekly meetings." Many other needs are listed.

Do you see what that church has done? It has listed many jobs and every young person must be interested in at least one of those jobs. Therefore, each person has the chance to indicate in what particular line he would like to work, and so finds his place in the work of the church.

No matter what the size of the church, it seems that this plan might be a good one for all churches to follow—getting the young people to state their interests and fit them thereby into the church. We might find that the girl who refused to teach the Sunday-school class is eager to do stenographic work without pay. Or that the young man who refused to sing in the choir is delighted to take hold of the Boy Scouts. Why not put it up to the individual? It is sure to help.

The Chimney Corner

The Lighthouse Keeper's Philosophy

FULL twenty miles or more at sea,
The captain and his wife Maintained the lighthouse lamp for years,

A solitary life!

Great ships upon the mighty deep,
And smaller craft at night,
With passengers and precious freight,
Depended on that light.
With constant care they made it shine
Across the sea afar,

When clouds concealed the faithful moon
And covered every star!

One day a crowd of visitors

Arrived, and many do,

Were welcomed, and inspected

The lighthouse through and through.

They noticed all was neat and clean,

"Immaculate," throughout;

And praised the captain and his wife

For showing them about!

One caller sensed it more than most,

While gazing out to sea;

And tarried when the rest were gone,

Quite meditatively!

He thought of passing ships, and lives,

And dark and storm, and death!

Of peril on the angry deep!

And fairly gasped for breath!

Then looking in the captain's eye,

Waving his hand about,

Asked, "What would happen, Captain

Burke,

If all your lights went out?"

With scorn as fine as ever put

Ignoble thoughts to rout,

The captain said, "We are not here

To let these lights go out!

We spend our lives in solitude

To keep them burning bright,

That passing ships may safely sail

However dark the night!"

O brother, learn this lesson, too,

Master, and make it thine!

Not here to let our lights go out,

But here to make them shine!

—William Wood in Boston Transcript.

Be Kind to Animals

IT sometimes seems that of Weeks there is no end—yet here is one not to be disregarded; it is such a needed week, with its opportunity to teach kindness toward the good friends and helpers of mankind who cannot voice their own plea. "Be Kind to Animals Week" covers April 12-17, following Humane Sunday, April 11.

This week, set aside for the purpose of centering the thoughts of the world upon "doing a good turn" to the animal kingdom, holds the promise of a peculiar blessing for all humanity, since the "inasmuch" to the least of these brings back to the donor a far greater blessing in the spirit of compassion aroused in his own heart, which makes him a partaker of the divinest thing that can come to a human soul.

Suppose that in every home and school represented we could have emphasized, even for one day, this theme of kindness to every living thing, what a monument of good-will we would be erecting in the hearts of the children of the state, and what a mighty force it would be in lessening "the great sum of cruelty" now with us because of failure in the past to educate our youth to "do justly and love mercy."

There are many things that can be done by parents and teachers to make this week a successful and memorable one. Essay and poster contests on kindness in the schools, organization of bands of mercy, assembly or class-room talks to the pupils upon the subject of fair play for animals as well as humans; emphasizing, perhaps, the injustices to animals forced to perform in vaudeville and circuses, and not forgetting the crime of rodeo, the commercialized shame of western and other states.

For the home, it is suggested that parents have a heart-to-heart talk with the children on what it means to be kind, and that they be encouraged to repeat after grace or for grace once each day of the week the beautiful words of the humane Saviour, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Teaching a child to respect the rights of his pet to its freedom of will to sleep or play may seem a simple matter, but it is a foundation stone in his character building that guarantees in later life this desirable attitude toward his fellow-men.

Abraham Lincoln said, "The one meaning of life is to be kind." Who, then, shall say that one week set apart in the year for the teaching of kindness is not worth while?

What Is Wrong Here?

"I won't take but a few minutes of your time."

"They haven't but two windows in the room."

"They couldn't scarcely understand a word he said."

"I can't pay but half of my subscription arrears."

There's a pat rule that covers such cases. Only, but, scarcely and hardly are often negative in their meaning. When they are so used avoid an additional negative.

Correct:

"I will take but a few minutes of your time."

"They have but two windows in the room."

"They could scarcely understand a word he said."

"I can pay but half my subscription arrears."

From "Little Benny's Notebook"

MY sister Gladdis had a box of candy in her room and I pritty near waisted the whole afternoon trying to find it before I axually found it, proving wat a sispicious disposition gerls have, and wen she came home I thawt I better brake the news to her and I sed, Ware you bin, Gladdis? Ive bin so meny places Im tired out and ixhausted, so dont start firing a hundred useliss questions at me Gladdis sed.

Well wy dont you set down and take it easy a wile, I sed.

Im going to do more than that, Im going to flop down like a sack of flour and wait till Im called for dinnir, Gladdis sed.

Sure, thats a good ideer, wy dont you eat a little candy, thats restfill, I sed.

How do you happen to be aware that I have eny candy? Gladdis sed.

I saw it, I sed.

O, you did, how axidental, Gladdis sed. Well Ill soon find out if you did enything elts to it, because its a bran new box of candy and I havent even taken a peece out of it, she sed, and I sed, O, thats wat I was going to mention, I know you like the chocklit peppermints more than enything elts, so I fixed it so you'll be able to find them easy.

And hows that, if you dont mind? Gladdis sed.

I left plenty of space erround them so you can see them, I sed. G, the box was as crowded as enything, I sed.

Wich jest then Gladdis made a grab for me, ony I was a different place after she grabbed than wat I was wen she started to grab, and in about 5 more seconds I was intirely out of the house

RELIGION is not

A thing to be believed but a way of living.

An attitude of body but an attitude of heart.

A creed to be written but a character to be attained.

An organization to belong to but an ideal to be realized.

A set of opinions
but an interpretation of facts.

A luxury to be supported but a necessity to be enjoyed.

A system coming down from Heaven but an aspiration coming up from humanity.

BOYS and Girls

Easter From Top to Toe, Except—

NO wonder they were startled,
Thinking the choir was saying "Hardly—knew—you!" as they walked into church that Easter Sunday morning, or never were twins so absolutely new from top to toe.

Take the boy twin, for instance;
An Easter cap upon his head,
An Easter haircut on his hair,
An Easter tie inside his Easter collar.
An Easter shirt,
An Easter coat, with Easter trousers, long, this time!
His first. He was so conscious of them.
Easter socks, Easter boots,
Easter gloves, and an Easter overcoat.
You can see for yourself that he was Easter from top to toe, except—
Well, can you guess?

The girl twin, too, was completely Easterized all over.
Easter bonnet
Adorned by Easter posies.
Easter ribbons on her hair,
Which had an Easter curl
Specially done by a Fashionable hairdresser, down town.
Easter dress, an Easter coat,
Easter gloves, Easter hose, Easter shoes, Indeed, she was so new and "Easter" in her looks that she hardly blamed the choir for chanting "Hardly—knew—you!"
or how was she to know they really sang
"Hallelujah! Hallelujah, Amen?"
Because a child
new from top to toe could not help being conscious of it, all the time she wasn't quite so new over, either, to see there was her—
Well, can you guess?

It always seems a pity for one to cover the outside so carefully and thoughtfully and artificially, when all the time there is the—plenty of time, plenty of money, plenty of care, for making the inside attractive and lovely and adorable.
Even on Easter, you know, the Lord doesn't notice Easter garments.

He is walking quietly, softly
Patiently, eagerly,
Tenderly, anxiously
Up and down the aisles of Your church and
My church, saying: "My child,
Have you adorned the inside?
Man looketh on
The outward appearance,
But the Lord looketh
On the heart."
And never were twins more surprised.

Said the boy: "Master, I did not know About this.
I don't know how to Adorn the inside of me!"

Said the girl twin: "Dear Jesus,
Nobody told us!
We would like to know how."

So the Saviour
Put it into their hearts
That Easter Sunday
To open the Bible in their pew,
And this is what
They read: "Adorn
The gospel of Christ our Saviour
In all things."

Now this certainly seemed clear.
In all things!
Adorn the gospel!
But the boy twin said: "How,
Shall we go about it?"
And the girl twin said: "How, indeed?"
But this was Stupid, for those three words—
In all things
Really made it as clear as day.
Said the boy: "Could it mean
In my home-times?
In my school-times?
In my play-times?
In my thinking-times?"
Said the girl: "Yes, of course!
That's exactly what it does mean.
In all things!
So that's clear,
But now what does adorn Mean, exactly?"

The boy said: "Adorn
Means to decorate,
To beautify,
To ornament,
To make something attractive
And more desirable."
Said the girl: "But How could we
Adorn the gospel?"
After thinking, he said: "I Suppose we could do it as I said,
By making it
Attractive and more desirable
To others. Folks
Are watching us."
The girl nodded: "Us,
Watching the real us,

You mean, don't you? And Not just our Easter clothes?
I suppose what we need
Is an Easter mind
And an Easter heart
And some Easter deeds!"

This was all
Such a brand new set of ideas
That they were being Excited and thrilled and surprised at Their own two selves.
Said the girl: "If I had An Easter heart
I would be kinder,
And more loving,
And more generous
With my time and my money,
Because others would matter
To me, just as much
As I matter now to myself."

Then the boy nodded: "And
If I had an Easter mind
I would be more
Thoughtful about what life means,
And what I am here
In this world for.
I would plan ahead,
Adventures for God—
That's it! We Must adorn the gospel
By trying especially Every day to Make Christianity more attractive.
In school, in play, in our own families.
There's the cook, and the laundress,
And the gardener, and our friends.
I think it's sort of a game, really."

Said the girl: "I know
What it is, it's—Exploring!!
It's setting out to Find something new
That no one else ever
Did quite that way before,
Because nobody else has Ever been you!
I think it will take
Pluck and grit and courage,
To explore this way.
We'll have to stick at it,
All the time. It
Will be hard!"

The boy smiled: "But I
Like hard things!
All explorers do!
No explorer explores
In an easy place
Where everybody has been before."

And I should like to add
That it was another Boy-of-Twelve,
Nineteen hundred-years ago,
Who first adorned the gospel
So that the Bible said of Him:
"He grew in stature, and
In favor with God and man."

Briefs about Baptists

By J. H. RUSHBROOKE

Hats off to Canada!

THE news has reached me that the Toronto Sunday schools through their Missionary Educational Union have raised $9066 to further the work in Esthonia and Latvia, where Canada co-operates with the States and Britain. This is a splendid achievement. The M. E. U. is an organization for extending missionary interest among the Sunday schools. Each year an "objective" is chosen: a mission building in India, a college in Bolivia, seven churches in Western Canada, formed the "objectives" of three recent years. Speakers are appointed to visit the schools; the "objective" is expounded in itself and in its relations. Thus Canadian work for Esthonia and Latvia has been studied as an element in Baptist work for the world, and, not only the movement in Europe as a whole, but the spirit and achievements of the British and American Baptists with whom Canada is in partnership have been considered. Shortly after the close of the year a mass meeting is held in the largest hall of Toronto: a pageant is arranged and the gifts of the schools presented. In the course of thirteen years the Toronto schools have collected over $100,000 for their various "objectives." I warmly congratulate Mr. S. J. Moore, the honorary president, Mr. P. E. Roberts, the president, and all others concerned. A city whose young people are so deeply and widely interested in Baptist work throughout the world is a fit meeting place for the next World Congress. Toronto has something to teach us.

How Many Baptists in the World?

The Baptist World Alliance Directory for 1926 has just appeared. One section is devoted to statistical tables. The reported membership of churches in unions and conventions connected with the alliance is 9,308,094. On the basis of this I compute the total membership as approximately 11,000,000, for (1) I have rigidly excluded mere estimates from the statistical tables, and therefore no account is taken of the hundreds of thousands of Baptists in the U. S. S. R. or of many thousands in another land from which a guess—which may be a well-founded guess—was sent me instead of a definite report; and (2) I have also excluded all figures that have remained without revision for over five years, one result of this rule being the omission of nearly 400,000 belonging to miscellaneous, but definitely Baptist, bodies in the States from which no statistics are available of later date than 1916. I have regarded it as better to offer reliable though admittedly incomplete figures than to permit any intermixture of estimates, even where these might be considered "safe."

Of course Baptist "community strength" is vastly greater than the 11,000,000 which represents the probable church membership. Roumania, for example, returns the baptized membership of 224 fully organized churches as 26,314. This is the one definite figure for the country. There would be about 30,000 members if statistics were complete, and on this basis I have assumed, in a newspaper interview, that our "community strength" would be about 100,000 to 110,000. But I find the Roumanian Baptists themselves in their recent petition to the king claim a community strength exceeding 185,000.

Founders of the Baptist World Alliance

I grieve to learn that Dr. W. W. Landrum has passed away. This distinguished preacher of the Southern Convention had served in the pastorate of some of its greatest churches—at Richmond, Atlanta and Louisville. I knew him best as one of the founders of the Baptist World Alliance; indeed, he claimed that it was he who originally mooted the idea during a talk with Dr. R. H. Pitt. Doctor Pitt was the first to give editorial endorsement of it, and some time afterwards Dr. J. N. Prestridge opened a vigorous journalistic campaign in its favor. It secured the adhesion of Doctor Shakespeare, whose organizing gifts proved so important a factor, and whose cooperation with Doctor Prestridge led to the meeting of the Baptist World Congress in London. Here the alliance was called into being with John Clifford as its first president.

Consolidation and Progress in Spain

In Spain our evangelistic efforts were sporadic and isolated until in 1922, under the influence of the Southern Baptists, the Baptist Union was formed. Its formation has been followed by a season of unparalleled success. Our community is relatively very small, but I note that during 1925 Spanish Baptists acquired the first church built and paid for by themselves; that the new seminary at Barcelona has fourteen students; that a fortnightly denominational paper is issued; and that the union is planning an annual assembly, whose first meeting will take place this year.

Anxious Position in Italy

One cannot contemplate conditions in Italy without misgiving. Liberty has many directions been restricted and there is ground for concern lest the religious freedom of non-Romanists may be invaded in the near future. Our brethren will need the utmost discretion and patience. It is noteworthy that in these anxious times many Italian Baptist churches have enjoyed much blessing. In 1924 the number of baptisms was larger than it had been for many years and although the statistics for 1925 are not yet completed it appears likely that the standard of the previous year has been maintained.

"Not slothful in business but"

I have a further delightful report from Finland. The Finnish Baptists have, like those of other lands, justified our assistance by a substantial increase of their own contributions. The amount which they are raising counterbalances the steady reduction of our grant in aid to the pastors. The continental committee has gladly consented to furnish aid to the new preachers' school, as soon as definite arrangements are made and the institution is opened. An extract from a letter may be given in its writers' or English: "The three first are you Christians and gifted preachers. Brother—is a barber shop and Brother—trading in vegetable, and both of them are mighty preachers. Brother—is farmer and leader of the church in large parish. These brethren do all stand to their affairs and preach Christ while they have an opportunity to do so."

The Rev. F. W. Herrmann

The Baptists of Germany have suffered a heavy loss in the death of the Rev. F. W. Herrmann. He was a man of considerable literary gifts, and few had so wide an acquaintance with the history of the denomination, especially his own land. An indefatigable writer, a powerful preacher, and a wise counselor, he has occupied for a generation a prominent and influential position among his brethren. His death was due to a heart seizure in the railway station at Hanover.

Baptists Safeguard Evangelization

Denmark has relatively few Baptists. The editor of our paper in that land

Luke 24:32

By ANNIE S. WALLIS

*ON the road to Emmaus,
Oft the way is lone,
And our hearts are heavy,
With the grief we've known,
Till One walks beside us,
One, whose Word divine,
Quickens, burns as living flame
For your soul and mine.*

*On the road to Emmaus,
What have we to fear
With this One Companion,
Close, beside, to cheer?
Making clear, the truth of God,
(He, himself, the Light);
Comforting the saddest heart
By his love and might!*

ne that the genuine evangelical tone of the Established (Lutheran) church has reduced the apparent urgency of Baptist witness and has thus interposed an obstacle to specifically Baptist development. There is, however, no question that the testimony and life of our denomination has itself been a strong influence in the recovery and conservation of the evangelical note outside our borders. The young people's work and influence are conspicuous in Denmark.

West China Letter

By JOE TAYLOR

JUST how much has been accomplished by the anti-Christian forces in China? It is not easy to determine for all China; but one may venture some estimate for the province of Szechuan. It is safe to say that most of the energy of the movement was put into the attack on Christian schools. These were (and are) regarded as the citadel of Christianity in China. And they have got a good start. Forward-looking missionaries as far back as the beginning of the present century saw the significance of Christian education; and in many instances were ready for the edict of the empress dowager changing the whole system of education in the empire. Here in West China, the West China Christian Educational Union came into being in 1906. Then in 1910 the West China Union University opened its doors and began work. The entering class consisted of nine students; but with its small beginning much was done. The report of the president of the university, now before me, states that during the school year of 1924-1925 (including the summer schools) there were 1025 students under instruction with a faculty of eighty-two. Of this number 268 were enrolled in the university proper. When it is remembered that this school is the only one offering higher education west of the Yangtze Gorges and that it functions in a province with 60,000,000 people, it may be seen that the anti-Christian leaders were by no means blind to the strength of Christian education; especially when it is true that this university is linked with a system of primary and secondary education that cares for over 100,000 pupils. So the "antis" proceeded to attack the schools.

And they were not altogether unsuccessful. In some cities the students in Christian schools went out en bloc, while in other places large numbers "struck" and in one school they burned their principal in effigy. But after all the wreckage has been accounted for, and the lessened attendance for the present school year has been acknowledged, it is not overstating the matter to say that the game has not been worth the candle. This autumn the enrolment in the West China Union University is 228. This shows a decreased attendance; but must not all be put down to the work of the anti-Christian forces. Civil war in the province, the presence of bandits on nearly all the roads leading to Cheng-tung, an increase in fees, and a more careful scrutiny of those wishing to enter—these factors have had more to do with decrease than the work of the enemy.

No, it is not true that this nation-wide agitation of those who are opposed to any and every form of religion, and more especially to Christianity, has been successful.

But they certainly have been successful in calling the attention of the people to the religion of Jesus Christ. Never before has there been so much discussion in China about our Lord. He has become known to millions of the Chinese that were, until this movement came along and helped us, totally indifferent to him and his church. No other one factor in China has succeeded in giving

Northern Baptist Convention, 1926

FOR the Washington Convention, the several passenger associations have authorized a fare of one and one-half of the regular rates, with a minimum of one dollar for a round-trip ticket, available to those attending the convention and dependent members of their families, upon the presentation of the authorized identification certificates.

One certificate for each family, the name of each member for whom a ticket is desired should be written thereon, before being presented to the ticket agent.

Tickets must be used over the same route in both directions, and must be validated in Washington by the ticket agent of the line used in reaching that city, after which they will be good to return on at any time, but must be used in season to permit the passenger reaching the starting point prior to midnight of the final limit as indicated below.

Identification certificates may be obtained from the secretary of your state convention, or from the undersigned.

From Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Michigan, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin, also Julesburg, Colo., the dates of sale are May 21 to 27 inclusive; final limit to return June 4.

From Colorado (except Julesburg), Montana, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming, the dates of sale are May 20 to 26 inclusive; final return limit June 5.

From Arizona, British Columbia, California, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, the dates of sale are May 15 to 21 inclusive, with final return limit of June 7.

From New England, New York state (east of and including Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Suspension Bridge and Salamanca), New Jersey, Pennsylvania, (east of and including Erie, Oil City, and Pittsburgh), Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, and West Virginia (east of and including Wheeling, Parkersburg, Kenova, Orange and Norfolk), the dates of sale are May 21 to 27 with final limit to return of June 4.

Secretaries of state conventions will please promulgate this information in their state bulletins, and call on this office conservatively for what certificates will be needed from your locality.

publicity to Christianity as much as this. One almost wishes that the Christian church in China might pass a rising vote of thanks to the leaders of the anti-Christian movement. What we have been trying to do ever since Morrison landed at Canton has been accomplished in a few years by "our friend the enemy."

So we are not discouraged. Why should we be? Take this fact: Among the large institutions under the care of missions, West China Union University is the second in the number of Christians enrolled, last year enrolling 81.7 per cent. This is exceeded only by the Shantung Christian university which listed 89 per cent of its students as Christian. I suggest that a goodly number of our denominational schools in America cannot beat that. And this result is not gained by any forced methods. A goodly number of our students come to us from Christian schools; others are won for Christ while with us, and still others give themselves to God after they leave. In Yachow, last December, one of the teachers in our boys' school was baptized and entered the church. He was sent down there to teach last summer by our college committee. He had been with us for years and slowly decided to become a Christian. In a new environment, he made the great choice and is as happy as a Christian ought to be.

Two Sides

Now don't think for one minute that all our work is as rosy as this. We have our disappointments and heart-breaking experiences. Only recently I learned that one of our young men, in whom we have invested money, prayers and work, had taken to smoking opium and had to be dismissed from the service of the church. But the point I wish to make is that the anti-Christian forces have, as a whole, done good service to the Christian church in China. Their persecution has shaken loose some whose allegiance to Christ was always weak. They have been the means of strengthening others in their loyalty to our Master. They have published far and wide a lot of information about the church—much of which is untrue. They have criticized us and our work. Well, we are not above criticism. We can learn a lot from what has been said. We need to put all our work on a more Chinese basis. We need to hand over part of our burdens to our Chinese friends. They will make mistakes—just as we have; they will have heartaches—just as we have; they will spend sleepless nights—just as we have; but they will succeed in making Christianity Chinese—and there is where we have failed, and always shall fail.

Our schools must be made more Christian and more Chinese. We must work out a scheme where the best of our leaders can be taken on to our boards of management. They must be taken into council and feel free to be frank in our discussions. This is not easy. The Chinese do not take eagerly to such work. They need to learn even the elementary proceedings of a deliberative assembly. But they will learn—and they will teach, if we are willing to learn.

The university is slowly building up an effective Christian ministry; it is preparing Christian teachers; it is instructing young men to become dentists and doctors. It is fitting others for work in civic and national life. Indeed, it is persistently reaching out into the life of this province and changing the very atmosphere of the towns and villages. We need not be discouraged so far as the work at this end is concerned. If we have any cause for discouragement it is in the indifference of the church in America to its one central purpose—the publishing of the gospel of Jesus Christ the son of God to all peoples.

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. COON
The State Annual

IT is hoped these comments may prompt a portion of Nebraska pastors to make some real examination of this annual publication. Here in compact form are historical, biographical, statistical statements of last year's work; a sort of "Who's Who" for Baptist work in the state. The annual of Nebraska is more worthy of study and more valuable because here only appear the minutes of our associations. At considerable expense and by careful toil the volume is compiled; yet we fear many pastors do not even read it through. One, ignorant of its worth, said: "I am not much of a statistics fiend." Two to four good hours of examination would spell that last word, "friend."

Thirty-eight churches, with over 2000 members report no baptism yet the number of baptisms in the state is among the largest in its history. While nearly 4000 are placed in the non-resident column—lost to the denomination—yet total membership is given as larger than in any previous year; an increase of 2500. While the state is low in the lists of national contributors, and below its own benevolences in recent years, yet there are decided gains in work and members of both Sunday school and B. Y. P. U., a very hopeful showing.

The compilers have wisely omitted full-page photos of men and buildings, thus lessening the volume in number of pages without lessening its real value for reference. In this and previous issues we have in brief a history of Baptist progress in Nebraska during sixty years.

We venture these suggestions: Would the former practice of associational clerks compiling statistics knowing the work first-hand prove of advantage? Would the times of the meetings of the associations be better than May 1, for the beginning of the year's work as shown in the statistics? In the language of the question asked at an annual board meeting: "Can we have the annual published in four weeks?"

Notes

Revival meetings have been held in several churches. At Chambers Rev. W. H. Parker assisted in the work resulting in a number of conversions and church membership. Rev. F. W. Ainslie was with Pastor Kesterson, at Glenvil for two weeks. The church has received twelve for baptism. Mr. Ainslie went from Glenvil to Cairo for two weeks' meeting. Director Ward aided in special work at the Temple church, Lincoln, where a number were converted. Platte Center held a three weeks' meeting, Rev. E. F. Edmunds, preaching. It was a real revival for church and community. Seventeen united with the church by baptism; others are soon coming. A union meeting at Central City, led by Rev. T. D. Franklin, had many converts, ten joining the Baptist church, F. W. Johnson, pastor. He is planning extra meetings before Easter. Veteran Evangelist White has been doing heroic work at Maxwell and Bignell, small places with big possibilities. Such work in somewhat neglected fields is of great importance. But, as Doctor White says: "A good safe man on the field is necessary to conserve the work."

Some pastoral resignations are announced. Rev. Claude Neal closed his work at Fairbury. We lose a good man if he leaves the state. Rev. J. F. Taylor resigns at Loup City. Good increase in membership has marked his pastorate.

Rev. F. W. Benjamin of Chadson is successfully working the field Kenwood, near the city, where conversions have oc-

Two Tributes

By H. L. STETSON

THE deaths of Dr. A. W. Small and of Dr. J. Y. Aitchison have profoundly affected me. I had known both of them for thirty-five years and had learned to hold them in the highest esteem for their many excellent qualities.

One of the earliest plans Doctor Harper devised was the affiliation of colleges and high schools with the university of Chicago. Doctor Small was selected to administer the new scheme. Des Moines College was the first to try out this new movement. It was a very delicate and trying position, but Doctor Small was equal to the difficult task. Always patient, wisely sympathetic, broad-minded, with an exceptionally intelligent understanding of the educational situation in the Central West, he won and held our respect and confidence. It was always a pleasure to meet him, and his advice was always most helpful. He was a choice, cultivated Christian gentleman whose life made the world richer, and whose death left it much poorer.

I knew intimately the father and mother of Doctor Aitchison. He was a happy combination of the best qualities of both of them. His student life at Des Moines College was a great factor in developing the earnest, healthy, Christian life which distinguished that institution. His ideals were the finest, yet he was one of the most practical of men. From the first to the last, with head and heart working in the utmost harmony, he spent his rare abilities for the one supreme purpose of the intelligent extension of the kingdom of Christ. To that he was loyalty incarnate. A finer example of Christian manhood the world has never had. I am sorely missing him.

curred. Holbrook has invited Rev. William Cain to consider the pastorate. Rev. S. W. Brandon becomes pastor of the church at Guide Rock. Rev. W. J. Westover, of Liberty, Mo., moved to Creighton, Mar. 15, as pastor of the church and Pilger.

Indianapolis Notes

By FREDERIC ARTHUR HAYWARD

SUBURBAN problems loom large at the beginning of a church organization. The community spirit is not developed. The petty spirit exists. The financial demand is severe and the "hon starters" seem timid. A few years ago this situation so common to new districts was present in the promising parish of Lynnhurst church. Newly organized and newly housed it made a struggle for existence. The little church made an appeal for coordination. It has won the battle. The days of small things are passed. The days when the question of its existence was challenged are over. It is not now a problem whether the church will live or not, nor is the problem whether support will be given to the church. The problem facing this heroic church, of which Rev. C. H. Scheick, pastor, is how large will the program be to meet the needs of a rapidly growing community? Last week was set apart for a financial appeal for current funds. The budget of $3000 was set up by the official board. Meetings were held with Secretary Hayward present on Thursday and Friday. Sunday morning the budget was presented. The afternoon was the hands of a competent group of teams and the evening service was the victory hour. At the close of the appeal one man came forward and presented himself for Christ. The result of the canvass was $3,025.79 which with other pledges to come will reach $3500. The Sunday school at Lynnhurst is well graded. The attendance of 200 indicates the growth and suggests the grading of this school. Both morning and evening attendances were strong. The music was well given. The B. Y. U. is subdivided into three groups well organized and directed. Lynnhurst is rapidly getting plans ready for the new building. The old building will be moved back in a few days. Excavation will begin. In less than six years the church has passed through the stages of organization, housing and challenging the community. A $20,000 building is in contemplation.

The quarterly business meeting of the Westview church was held Sunday afternoon, Mar. 28. The review of the quarter by Treasurer White was most encouraging; the close of the quarter finds the church with $46 balance in the bank. A series of special meetings began with Easter Sunday night. New baptistry is in the minds of the trustees and a decision will be given soon. The Rev. Clarence Durham recently came to this opportune church and is wisely and steadily leading it toward larger things.

The old Southern Avenue church name has been lost in the renaming process. The new name Garfield Pa-

caused by the change of location to the corner of Shelby and Southern avenue and also by the fact of an enlarging program. Rev. C. P. Greenfield became pastor nearly two years ago and his work has shown the result of his leadership. Audiences and organizations have new goals. Finances have enlarged. The church has relocated its plant and on Easter Sunday held the service of cornerstone laying. This new church, costing about $25,000, will be modern and include among other accessories a pipe organ. The land area permits, when we shall make this necessary, a larger equipment for educational and recreational purposes. This church is making great sacrifice in order to "build a house unto the Lord." Even small donations from friends will help largely to care for this very important work.

New Orleans Baptist Hospital

By ERNEST O. SELLERS

THE Southern Baptist hospital in New Orleans, owned and operated by the Southern Baptist Convention, has opened its doors. It is the central unit of a chain of twenty-six hospitals operated by the convention in the seventeen states included in the territory of that organization. It is the third hospital the superintendent, Dr. Louis J. Bristow, has erected. He is also chairman of the hospital commission which looks after the entire program of Southern Baptist hospital work.

The New Orleans building is eight stories high with basement (basements are unusual in that city) and is built of best brick with gray stone trimmings, strictly fireproof, concrete construction. It has 218 rooms and five wards of six beds each. It is the first unit of a proposed total building program of $2,000,000 and is to be especially a research hospital for the study of tropical and semi-tropical diseases.

There has also been erected a power plant building and a beautiful and commodious home for nurses.

The hospital equipment includes X-ray and pathological laboratories, six large operating rooms, nursery with an electric baby incubator, electro cardiograph, and everything considered necessary for the best-equipped modern hospital and operation.

There is a refrigeration plant, cafeteria and diet kitchens upon each floor and concealed sterilizing equipment. The present staff consists of 177 persons.

The site, one of the finest possible to be had in the city, cost about $90,000 and was donated to the Baptists for hospital purposes by a group of New Orleans business men only a few of whom are Baptists, indeed one or two leaders in the movement to secure the property are Catholic faith.

The New Orleans project began after, it is the direct product of, the 75-million dollar campaign of Southern Baptists and led to the launching of a campaign to erect a Methodist hospital in that city. It has spurred the Catholics to erect a building for one of their institutions at a cost of about $750,000 and to begin the erection of the new St.

Joseph's (Jesuit) hospital. Touro, the Jewish hospital, has also erected a 200-bed addition to their plant since the beginning of the Baptist project.

The Baptist cause in the Crescent City has made prodigious progress during the past six years. The opening of the Bible Institute with its now nearly 275 students, though but seven years old; the new $175,000 St. Charles Avenue church; the new $90,000 educational building for the First Baptist church and the organization of at least six new churches during that period and a numerical growth of more than 300 per cent has caused some who had never heard of a white Baptist to take notice and, better still, the constant stirring of the baptismal waters is evidence of the fact that the truth is taking hold of those who have long followed a false faith or else been indifferent to the claims of Christ.

Linfield Wins Oratorical Contest

ON Friday evening, Mar. 12, Linfield College won the state oratorical contest in which nine different colleges and universities participate annually. Linfield's representative was Miss Carmelita Woodworth, daughter of Rev. M. S. Woodworth, pastor of the First church of Ashland, Ore. Miss Woodworth's subject was "The Challenge of the Modern Woman". She received three first places and two second places and won by a large margin over her nearest competitor. The judges were the coaches of the respective orators, each coach judging all the orators except his own.

These contests have been held by these colleges for the past thirty-two years. In this time the state university has won first place eleven times and Linfield College seven times, standing second in the list. Pacific College, our Quaker Institution, has won first place six times and the other institutions range in with one and three each.

This week Miss Woodworth leaves for Colorado, where she will deliver her oration at the national convention of Pi Kappa Delta, a national forensic fraternity. She will also speak to the Kiwanis Club in Denver.

News Items

Rev. A. M. Mehus, pastor of the First Norwegian-Danish Baptist church, Seattle, and his people are rejoicing over the dedication of their new Sunday-school and social rooms. On this glad occasion Dr. J. F. Watson was the speaker.

On the last Sunday in February, Dr. C. Oscar Johnson of the First church of Tacoma, baptized thirty-one. The next Wednesday night twenty-nine more were received with others yet to come. These are part of the results following the meeting held by Dr. John Bunyan Smith of San Diego, Calif.

Doctor Johnson is expecting President W. J. McGlothlin of Furman University, Greenville, S. C., to supply for him three or four Sundays next summer. It is expected also that Doctor McGlothlin will be one of the lecturers at the Burton Assembly Aug. 3-13. This is good news for the Baptists of West Washington.

The spring election in Seattle was hotly contested this year. The friends of good citizenship, however, are rejoicing over the election of Mrs. Bertha A. Landes as mayor. This election is in part at least the result of the agitation in behalf of better civic conditions conducted during the winter by Dr. Ambrose M. Bailey, pastor of the First church in that city.

In Tacoma there is likewise rejoicing over the election of Mr. M. G. Tennent, who is the candidate of the forces of righteousness in that city.

Prof. G. R. Schlauch of the department of history of Linfield College, was forced to undergo a major operation on Saturday, Mar. 13. He has rallied from the operation and seems now well on the road to complete recovery and better health than he has enjoyed in recent years. Professor Schlauch graduated from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1897. The greater portion of his ministry has been given to the states of Washington and Oregon.

Rev. W. E. Henry of the First church, Yakima, Wash., has accepted the call of the First church of McMinnville, Ore. He will preach the first sermon on the new field on Apr. 18.

Darkness Wanes in the Naga Hills

By J. E. TANQUIST

AFTER four years of pretty close application to the task, I have finished the translation of the entire New Testament into the Angami language. There will be considerable proofreading yet to do before it is all off the press, and probably it will seem best to have a new edition of the Book of Revelation, the first edition of which is nearly exhausted. I feel deeply grateful to God for giving me health and strength for this work. In some ways it seems as if I had been permitted, during this brief period, to do a work that could be counted as a life's task. It is a great satisfaction to know that the most influential of the tribes in these hills will for all time have the New Testament in their own tongue. Then, too, the work has been a most delightful one, and so have been all my dealings with Rev. A. Willifer Young of the British and Foreign Bible Society. His great kindness and sympathetic attitude make a young translator feel that his lot has fallen in pleasant places. The Christian teacher who has labored with me as personal helper all the way through has been most faithful and our work together has been entirely harmonious. He little realizes, I dare say, what a great share he has had in shaping and standardizing the written Angami language on the one hand, and the terminology for difficult scriptural terms on the other.

Part one of "Pilgrim's Progress" is now also ready for the press. Several efficient and enterprising Angami students and teachers have given their time to this work off and on for a period covering several years. In fact it was begun seven or eight years ago. The deputy commissioner has recommended the book for government printing with a view to using it in village schools, and we trust that the answer will be favorable.

But there are other little worlds to conquer. We think of the Rengmas, for instance, with no other literature in their language than the little hymn-book I had the joy of publishing last year. The deputy commissioner has invited me to prepare a primer in Rengma. He also favors my getting out a translation of Luke's Gospel, not only as a help to the Christians, but as a Rengma reader for the schools. The Rengma language is fairly closely allied to the Angami, and the same is true of the Sema.

Semas and Christianity

I used to say that I had not the least desire to touch the Sema language. It has always been the thought that some man should be sent out directly for that work. But now, with an increasing Christian community in Semaland, with no new man in sight, and with my little knowledge of an allied tongue, when I see year after year pass by without anything being done to add to their literature (consisting of a first and second primer published by Doctor Hutton), it seems practically impossible to shirk the duty indefinitely. While out on tour in December I met a band of travelers who told me about the movement among the Semas towards Christianity. In many villages meeting houses have been built and people meet every Sunday for worship. Usually there is no one to preach, no one who can sing, and no one who can read, but still they hold meetings. I felt greatly moved by their story and am convinced that something should be done to encourage them. Linguistically at least they belong to this side.

The work among the Rengmas is becoming more and more stabilized, and the newly converted men and women are continuing to evince real growth and a desire to progress in New Testament ideals. The Kuki Christians in this area are taking an independent and determined stand for church purity and higher standards of Christian living. The Sema Christian communities are scattered about considerably and shepherded very inadequately. But the Spirit of God is at work among them and most of them are persevering in their newly found faith. The news that whole villages are turning Christian and building meeting houses is a heartening thing to those who feel lonely. The progress among the Angamis is as usual slow, but the gospel of Jesus Christ is proving itself, the power of God unto salvation in the hearts of not a few, and the influence of consecrated and zealous Angami Christians goes far and wide.

In the number of baptisms we cannot make as good a showing as during the two years just preceding. But 119 baptisms is a matter for which one may be thankful to God. Twelve years ago I prayed for the faith to believe that, with God's blessing, we should some day see an average yearly ingathering of about a hundred on this field. Thank God, we have lived to see our hopes more than realized.

In a field like this, where distances are great and missionary touring is most difficult ten months out of twelve, it seems necessary to have ordained men in every sector. Therefore we have an ordained man of the Rengma-Sema side, another on the Eastern Angami-Sema side, and just recently the request of the Kukis and Kacha Nagas has been granted and one of their number ordained. With one other evangelist, who is located in the vicinity of Kohima and can be sent out in different directions, we can cover the field. It is possible, of course, to visit at any time of the year villages which lie along the cart road for a distance of more than fifty miles, and we have a growing work in several places.

During the months of December and January it is now possible to get the Christians to supply carriers for the missionary touring, and associational meetings are held in several centers. The change from one annual meeting for the entire field to several in different centers has shown good results and is an arrangement which will be continued. Women and children usually will not come a distance of from twenty to seventy miles. The church that entertains an association does so at comparatively no small expense; but all feel well repaid when they see their brothers and sisters "partaking of their food with gladness, combined with humility of heart, praising God and enjoying the respect of all the people." Many a non-Christian Naga spends as much trying to get merit for himself alone; and many a missionary spends as much on his own family during a single Christmas. We often need to come to these people as learners rather than as teachers.

During the year thirteen evangelists and teachers have received mission support, and their labors have shown good results. All have loyally and enthusiastically taken part in the monthly or bi-monthly Bible classes which have been conducted. Several of the village pastors who do not receive financial support from mission funds have also attended, and so have the teachers in the mission training school. The plan has been to meet two or three days each month for Bible study and conference. Visiting missionaries have on several occasions given valuable help.

It is gratifying to note that Christians are beginning to give more gladly and liberally than ever before. They are also coming to the point where they wish to spend their small church savings for the progress of the gospel and the glory of Christ. Churches that have been content to let their money lie idle for years have become awake to the necessity of doing something with it. One church called a pastor out of its number and supported him while the money lasted. It then came for mission help. Another church took over a disabled missionary worker to find his support. Several churches are contributing towards the support of their pastors, and some are paying part salary to Christian teachers. Several churches have been paying smaller or larger sums into the missionary's hands for use in evangelistic work. Some among the better salaried Christian men have banded together for the support of some worthy work. The churches are beginning to show more eagerness for building substantial and attractive meeting houses. There are all encouraging signs of progress.

Looking to the future, there are certain aspects that give us no small concern, but we need to look at the whole situation over in the right perspective. The hope for strong Christian character, clean living and well balanced evangelistic zeal lies with the rising generation. The older generation of Christians, especially in the Kohima vicinity, has done its work creditably in its way. The day of the older men is passing. No groups of Christians are pressing forward from other centers. From the midst are springing up young leaders with prophetic vision and high ideals. They are the men of the future.

Friend of Mine

(Music: "Dear Old Pal of Mine.")

BY H. R. CARSTENS

I AM always praying
For you, friend of mine, Praying you may know Christ's love;
Why have you been straying
From the path divine,
And answered not the call come from above?—

Chorus:

Oh, how I wish you knew my Saviour too;
Each night and day I'm praying just for you.
May your heart be burning,
May your soul be yearning,
Till you be turning to my Saviour too.

Ev'rywhere there's beauty;
Life is full of cheer,
If you let the Christ come in;
Joy is found in duty,
Days are never drear,
For with him in life's conquest

man knows where the next great movement towards Christ is going to take place in these hills. The experience of the past leads us to believe that it will not be where the missionary preaches the loudest or where his directing authority is the strongest; it will probably be in a sector where little has been done directly, for "Christianity is caught, not taught." The follow-up-work, however, will be ours in obedience to him who commissioned us to teach them to observe all things whatsoever he commanded. We are on the eve of greater experiences.

Baptists in Denmark

By P. OLSEN

(Mr. P. Olsen is the editor of the Danish Baptist organ known as "Baptisternes Ugeskrift." He has enjoyed for many years the confidence and esteem of his brethren in Denmark and beyond it.—J. H. Rushbrooke.)

THE Danish Baptists number, according to the latest statistics, 5667 out of a population of about 3¼ millions. That is only a small percentage, but still they are by far the largest body of Evangelical dissenters in Denmark, where the great bulk of genuine believers, contrary to conditions in nearly every other country, are to be found inside the established church. This state of things is certainly a cause for rejoicing; but it cannot be denied that it has formed a strong obstacle to specific Baptist work.

Baptist growth has consequently been slow in Denmark, and we cannot expect any rapid advance. But with conditions as they are, the prospects for our work are in many respects bright and promising. As a proof of this I may mention that in ten years, since 1915, the number of members in our churches has grown with no less than 1500.

This growth is largely due to evangelistic efforts in all the churches. Probably the statistics for the present year will show comparatively small advance; but that is not because the evangelistic spirit in the churches or among our ministers has diminished. The appeal from the executive committee of the World's Alliance on Soul-Winning was received with hearty approval, and at the ministers' conference this fall the subject was carefully and earnestly studied and discussed.

Another hopeful feature in our church is our young people. I should think about half of our membership may be counted among them; besides quite a number of young men and women are regular churchgoers and attendants at our young people's meetings. Not seldom the young people of one of the churches will arrange a series of evangelistic meetings under their own auspices, and thus attract and even win for Christ and the church young men and women who would not otherwise easily be reached.

I may also mention the attempt on the part of our churches to push their work into new places. Though the Baptists have been in Denmark for eighty-six years still there are regions of the country where they are practically unknown. For a number of years mission work has been carried on in such places by our union as well as by single churches. But the work is difficult, and often for a long time hardly any results are visible. Best results have been attained in the three large towns, Odense, Aarhus, and Viborg. In the first two places there are now quite flourishing churches. This year our union placed one of our ablest ministers as a missionary on the two fertile and thickly populated islands, Lolland and Falster. It is, of course, impossible to say anything about the prospects yet; I only mention the fact in order to show how we are trying to extend Baptist influence to the whole country.

I have tried in this brief article to set forth some of the bright things that may be said about the life and work of the Danish Baptists. There are, of course, things also which are less bright—shortcomings and unsuccessful attempts. But we do believe that the Lord will overrule all such things and make also the new year a year of blessing, with much cause for thanksgiving, to the Baptists of Denmark.

Iowa Letter

THE Roger Williams Memorial church at the national capital has invited the Baptists of each state of the Union to furnish a pew for the fine historic edifice. The name of each state responding will be placed on a pew. The pews are to cost $100. At the February meeting of the Iowa Baptist board of managers for the convention, Dr. G. P. Mitchell brought the matter before the board and the response was hearty in favor of the hundred dollars for the pew. Accordingly Secretary Mitchell sent a check to Dr. Gove G. Johnson, pastor of the Memorial church. In reply Doctor Johnson said that Iowa was the first state to remit the money for this purpose. This memorial ought to appeal to all lovers of our Baptist denomination. The principles for which we stand have been interwoven into the very fabric of our government, and it is fitting that the great civic truths for which our Baptist fathers contended should speak through this imposing and beautiful church edifice so happily located.

Religious Emphasis Week

One year ago Des Moines set apart one week for the purpose of emphasizing religion. Many cities were interested in the project. The New York World sent a reporter to remain through the entire week. Other papers, including the New York Times, made provision for extended reports.

This year March 6-14 was chosen for the same purpose. The Y. M. C. A. sponsored the movement. Mr. Carl C. Proper of the First Baptist church was chairman of the committee last year and this in directing the program. Both he and Secretary George Webber of the Y. M. C. A. gave much time and labor to the meetings. The plan involved an earnest effort to reach every nook and corner of the city with an earnest appeal in behalf of the teachings of Jesus Christ. Much attention was given to public schools, colleges and universities. Of the twenty-one men and women who came to the city, Mr. Cameron Beck of Wall street, New York City, and Mr. "Dad" Elliott were strong and helpful with boys. Miss Jessie Burrall of Stephens College, Mo., was highly appreciated in the schools, the churches, the theaters and wherever she went. She spoke five times a day with burning zeal as an evangelist, and in exceedingly helpful conferences for practical dealing with young folks.

Dr. Bernard Clausen of Syracuse and Dr. S. W. Beaven of Rochester, N. Y., drew great crowds to hear them in the theaters, at the universities and in the churches. Their messages were throbbing with life and power. They were not here to say pretty things or to mince matters. They brought before our people vividly awful conditions that exist because of sin and sins in the concrete, and they appealed constantly to the teachings of Jesus Christ. Men must accept him, believe in him and obey him in order to save our people. Dr. Sherwood Eddy was again heard with interest by very large audiences. There were over 500 confessions, largely in our high schools and colleges. The great object was to awaken all of our churches in order that they might carry the teachings of Jesus into every department of life. Doctor Eddy said that one other city in the East and two or three in the West were ready to put on similar campaigns.

The week brought a great uplift to our city. From 22,000 to 25,000 a day were reached in the various meetings. Much will depend upon activity of the churches in the weeks to come. But the organization itself provides seven committees that strive to carry on the work through the churches.

The Baptist Orphanage and Home for the Aged

Years ago two large mansions on Arlington Avenue served two families in Des Moines. One was occupied by ex-Governor Jackson; the other by Judge Ladd. Spacious lawns and stately trees give quiet and beauty, and the scenery all about is inviting. Dr. J. F. Sanders, who for the past ten years has been serving the denomination in helping our colleges and hospitals, found that these fine homes could be purchased for a reasonable price. The location is all that could be desired for a Baptist orphanage and home for the aged. Men from our Baptist headquarters in New York were in Des Moines attending denominational gatherings. While here they went out to see the houses and grounds and to look into the matter that was under consideration by local Baptists. As a result they gave their hearty approval to the steps that are being taken to found and establish the Baptist orphanage and home for the aged. The property has been purchased and the deed is in the Baptist denomination. Dr. J. F. Sanders is the financial agent. He is a man of energy and fine resources for such an enterprise, and he believes heartily in the work that he has undertaken for the denomination. The experience and the excellent success that he has had in similar work give promise of splendid results in this new task. It is genuine pleasure to the Baptist men in Des Moines who are promoting the plan to see these two homes secured for so worthy a denominational object.

The board has also appointed Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Lapham as publicity directors and solicitors for the home. The district to be cultivated for this object comprises the states of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, South Dakota, and North Dakota.

Readers of THE BAPTIST will be interested to know that the Baptist denomination has thirty orphanages in the United States, and that sixteen of these are in the southland. We have nineteen Baptist homes for the aged, sixteen of these are in the North, largely in the East, though Michigan and Illinois have such homes. The District of Columbia has its own Baptist home and orphanage. Of Baptist hospitals we have thirty-two, and of these all are in the South except one in Boston, one in Illinois, and four in Minnesota—all in St. Paul. Texas has nine of the number. (See Baptist Year Book for 1924.) Is it not time that Baptists in the West gave more attention to this important part of kingdom service, even as our Lord commanded? Do you know that in the last century millions of dollars of Baptist money have gone into such work of other denominations?

In the providence of God the fine property in Des Moines, beautifully and conveniently located, has come into the hands of the Baptist denomination, a property long in the possession of wealthy men, for a small part of what it would cost today to buy such lots and build such mansions. West of the Mississippi no other such Baptist home for orphans, aged people, and worthy, needy ministers can be found. The territory covered in the five states can all easily reach Des Moines. Doctor Sanders is meeting a cheering response wherever he goes, and the board is much encouraged with the outlook for success.

Polk County Inter-Sunday-School Conference.

As I write this body is in session at the First Baptist church. Several hundred young people have enrolled, and a valuable program for young people is being carried out. Such conferences are exceedingly helpful for our older boys and girls, in way of giving them an opportunity for expression, and in the excellent addresses that press home truths to the young people who must soon care for the churches of Jesus Christ. A pageant, "Dawning," drew a packed audience and was well received.

This and That

In a previous letter all unwittingly I added four years to the age of my good friend, Dr. H. L. Stetson of Kalamazoo college. But his mental and physical vigor speak for themselves in the large work for Christian education, to which he has given so many years, and which he still does so well—Pastor H. R. McKee, who has given three years of faithful and successful service to the church at Keokuk, has resigned to become pastor of the church at Everett, Wash. We bid him godspeed in the new call. He has many friends in Iowa who regret to see him go. Mr. McKee hopes to enjoy better health for himself and family in the West—This calls to mind a valuable suggestion made by Pastor C. R. Parker of the First church of Cedar Rapids. It was at the conference at Des Moines university last December. Doctor Parker said that the pastor should lay out a program for several years for his church. The evangelistic spirit may be low; missions may have scant place in the minds of the members; an interest in Christian education may be dormant, and so on. The pastor cannot hope to correct all this at once, but if he lays his plans intelligently, and works to realize them, he will accomplish more for the church and for the kingdom of God than he will by stressing too many things at one time—Many in Iowa join in sincere sorrow over the passing away of Dr. J. Y. Aitchison. He had good friends all over the state, and he had done much valuable labor in our midst for the kingdom of God.

The Greatest of the Pioneers

BY HENRY EDWARD TRALLE

IN the passing of Dr. E. M. Stephenson, we have lost the last of the pioneers in the field of religious education, and perhaps the greatest of them all.

He was unequaled on the platform. When he arose to speak, he carried his audience with him to the heights of spiritual vision and high resolve, and laughter and tears and penitence and prayer. The audience might be a rural one or a down-town city one or a college one, but it was always the same.

While a college teacher in a Midwestern town, the writer was instrumental in securing Doctor Stephenson for a week of addresses and conferences, and no other man ever so stirred the college and the churches of the town. He got beneath the usual pious commonplaces and sounded the depths of psychology and pedagogy and theology and philosophy, and always in the language of the common people. His profundities became simplicities as he presented them. There was music and resonance in his voice; there was beauty and incisiveness in his diction; there was a wealth of story and illustration; there was a play of original humor; there was a convincing sincerity; there was quiet, controlled nervous energy; and there was a persuasive charm of personality in all his speaking that made him positively irresistible.

Doctor Stephenson was a master in the field of practical psychology, a particularly child psychology. He understood and appreciated childhood and youth, both theoretically and practically, as few men have been able to do. He never became impatient with the "younger generation." It provoked him to have anybody ask, with superficial petulance, "What is the matter with the younger generation?" He knew that the chief thing the matter with them was their parents and grandparents, and their teachers.

One of the chief characteristics of this great man was his ability to become increasingly greater during all the forty years of his intense activity as a worker in the field of practical religious education. He began as a colporter, going from house to house, selling and giving away Bibles and other good books, doing personal work, reading the Bible, praying, and leaving a message of Christian cheer. Perhaps no work could be more important than this, but this did not remain of the caliber of a colporter, as some think of it. He was persistent, thoughtful, discriminating, lifelong reader of the best books.

There is not a man among us working in the fields of religious education who is not indebted, either directly or indirectly, to Edward M. Stephenson; the Baptists are indebted to him beyond all computation. This writer here records, with deepest gratitude, a hurried word of appreciation of this great pioneer, and acknowledges his immeasurable debt to him for suggestion and inspiration and encouragement.

With the Board of Missionary Cooperation

Commendable Enterprise

ONE day last week, Doctor Bowler visited the Kings Highway church in Brooklyn, New York City, which has a small congregation of forty-five members. In the course of the conversation the pastor showed him two publications which the church was getting out regularly. One was a weekly church calendar, and the other a bulletin issued by the young people's society. These leaflets were neither of them printed, of course—that would have been too much expense for so small a church—but had been run off on a mimeograph machine. Even a church of this size to issue any sort of calendar, not to mention a young people's bulletin, shows a good deal of vigor and initiative, and we predict that it will not be long before its membership will be substantially more than forty-five.

The local church calendar is so valuable a means of keeping a congregation informed both as to the activities of their own church, and denominational projects in general, that it is unfortunate when any church considers itself too small to have some sort of local organ. Many of the calendars which come to this office from the churches are very attractive and interesting. Several make use of editorial cuts, and pastors have written to the Board of Cooperation asking to borrow some of those in our possession. Others print striking bits of missionary news, inspirational verses or quotations. In addition to the local activities they feature general announcements, such as notices for Self Denial Month, Keep Faith day, etc. A good many churches use their calendar to keep the membership informed as to progress in raising their current church budgets, and in securing pledges on the next year's budget. One of these is the First Baptist church of East Orange, N. J., which sends a very good-looking leaflet. Frequently this calendar contains stories of interesting incidents which have occurred in the church. For instance, one issue contained the following item: "In the collection last Sunday there was a certain contribution and with it this note, 'A little girl saw the picture in one of the denominational papers of the man and the "outline" man going up the Budget Highway, and asked to have it explained, after which she took this money out of her little bank, of her own accord, to contribute toward helping him reach the top of April.'"

Other Churches Please Copy

Rev. Francis W. O'Brien, pastor of the Greenwood Avenue church, Brooklyn, dropped in at the board offices not long ago. He paused in front of the information desk to look at the budget highway poster which hangs just above the stairs. "My church is two steps ahead on the stairway," he said. "We have paid our missionary quota for two months advance."

If a majority of Baptist churches would only approximate this forehandedness, what a vast amount of wear and tear, in last minute efforts to bring in the money, would be saved the denomination!

Brougner Meetings in Kansas

A letter to Doctor Bowler from Secretary Crawford of Kansas says, "You will be interested in a brief report regarding the Brougner meetings in Kansas. He closed here last night in a great way. The estimated attendances at his different appointments were as follows: Cherryvale, 800; Wichita, 3000; Hutchinson, 2500; Topeka, 1300. His wonderful message brought a great uplift and will very definitely help our cause on many lines. We are pressing hard for a careful follow-up."

Staff Notes

Deep sorrow was felt by the entire personnel of the Board of Missionary Cooperation and of the mission societies on learning of the death of Doctor Aitchison. The regular Wednesday morning meeting was transformed into a memorial service and several of the secretaries who had been closely associated with him spoke feelingly of the inspiration of his splendid personality. Doctor Bowler went to Chicago to be present at the funeral.

Mr. Jackson, our secretary of field activities, has been ill for several weeks with influenza and rheumatism, and at the time of writing (Mar. 25) is still absent from his desk at 276.

Judge Witty, secretary of the National Council of Baptist Laymen, who has also been in ill health this winter, is greatly improved. He has been able to continue his series of laymen's meetings and has just returned to New York from conducting several in the Middle West. In Indiana, he was assisted in this work by Doctor Robbins, and in Ohio by Drs. Main and Lerrigo.

Doctor Bowler has also been working with the laymen. He met with a small group in Boston, Mar. 22, and addressed the state laymen's council in New Haven on Tuesday, Mar. 23. On Mar. 28-29 he will speak before a mass meeting and a ministers' meeting in Rhode Island. President Rhoades is to be there for the mass meeting on Sunday and will make an address to the assembled Rhode Islanders.

Doctor Agar has been conducting church officers' councils in Toledo and Columbus, Ohio, and has also been working in Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Beaver Dam. He is planning to spend the next two weeks in Rhode Island assisting Secretary Reid with his Victory campaign.

Women's Promotional Conferences

Two successful women's gatherings were held in New York City the last week in February. Invitations were sent out by Doctor Kunkle to several women in each Baptist church of the Southern New York and Long Island associations, particularly to those women interested in literature distribution, church finance, church visitation, or general missionary work. The Southern New York women met in the Madison Avenue church, and the Long Island women in the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn. The two meetings, which were presided over by Miss Ina Burton, totalled an attendance of 150 women, representing fifty-three churches. At each meeting there was a short devotional service followed by an open discussion of the relation of women members of a Baptist church to Baptist missionary work, and general denominational projects, such as the every-member plan, etc.

Practical ways and means by which women can further such work by helping to carry through a year-round program of church publicity were also talked over and many interesting points brought out. The question of promoting stewardship in the local church was taken up and discussed in full by the women. The conferences were felt to be so helpful that similar meetings are being planned for state groups. Secretary Goodall is sending out invitations for one to be held in New Jersey on Apr. 14.

Here, There and Everywhere

REV. THEO. FIELDBRAVE, director of work for Hindus on the Pacific coast, says that there are six swamis or holy men in Los Angeles alone carrying on religious propaganda among Americans. These Hindu mystics have a Sunday school attended by American children. It is called the Mount Washington educational center. The land and equipment was donated by Americans.

WILLARD TOPPING, son of Rev. Henry Topping, has been engaged as an English teacher in the Mabie Memorial school in Japan. Mrs. Topping, his mother, is a daughter of the late Captain Luke Bickel.

REV. E. H. GIEDT, with his wife and two children, arrived from the South China field, Mar. 24. They landed at San Francisco, having crossed the Pacific on the "President Taft."

THE JEFFERSON AVENUE church of Detroit, Mich., on Mar. 21 launched its campaign for $150,000 for the completion of its plant. Dr. F. H. Divine led the activities looking toward the financial objective. The Sunday-school unit is now complete. The new unit will contain the auditorium. It will seat about 1150. Rev. A. V. Allen is the pastor.

MISS LUCY WIATT of the church in Granville, Ohio, has been temporarily appointed as assistant field secretary to the Burman mission by the Foreign Mission Society.

REV. HAROLD N. GEISTWEIT of the First church, Des Moines, Ia., preached for the Knights Templar of that city on Easter morning.

REV. EDGAR L. MULLINS, pastor of the Immanuel church of Ft. Wayne, Ind., recently held his own evangelistic services. There were twenty-eight additions, twenty-two being by baptism. There have been fifty-seven additions in the last four and a half months.

REV. DOUGLAS G. HARING, with Mrs. Haring and their two children, arrived from Japan on Mar. 24. Their address while in this country will be Newton, N. J.

MR. GARRETT H. DEMAREST, for sixty years a member of the First church of Paterson, N. J., and for fifty-three years a deacon, passed to his reward, Mar. 25.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Vinton, Iowa, Rev. C. E. Riddington, minister, recently celebrated its seventieth anniversary. A modern plant was built in 1915 under the direction of Rev. W. H. Rogers now of Wichita, Kansas.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Indianapolis, Dr. F. E. Taylor, minister, has closed an eight weeks' "winter night college." The average attendance in the classes was 500 and in the assembly lectures, 700. About 200 ate dinner each night immediately preceding classes.

REV. P. A. BRYANT has resigned at Indian Prairie, Ind., and is now located at Paragon in the same state.

ment under the meeting house at a cost of $2,000.

REV. E. B. PARROTT, dismissed by letter from the Eugene, Ore., Baptist church, June 4, 1925, so far as is known has not become affiliated with another Baptist church. The Eugene church at a recent meeting, upon information that Mr. Parrott was preaching doctrines not commonly held by Baptists, passed this statement: "We hereby annul our previous endorsement of Mr. Parrott as a Baptist and advise our churches to receive or reject his ministry upon its merits, as they may themselves determine by the test of the Word."

MABIE MEMORIAL SCHOOL of Yokohama, Japan, held its third annual graduation exercises, Mar. 8. In spite of the destruction by the earthquake the registration runs near 500. A large class of young men was graduated.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Martinsville, Ind., Rev. Roy E. Barnett, minister, observed the Lord's Supper on Easter morning at six o'clock.

DR. WILLIAM P. PEARCE of Bay City, Mich., spent a week with the First church of Battle Creek, Mich., giving afternoon and evening studies on prayer. Pastor Stewart B. Crandell of Battle Creek speaks in terms of deep appreciation of the service rendered.

A CHINESE Sunday school meets regularly in the North Shore church, Chicago. Dr. H. W. Virgin is the pastor.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Corvallis, Ore., Rev. Daniel Bryant, minister, issues an unusual bulletin, church directory and schedule of activities. The six large pages indicate a great ministry in this college community.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Oakland, Calif., has had the largest school of missions in its history. It began with over 250 people divided into six groups, meeting on Sunday evenings.

REV. R. T. GASAWAY of Carlinville, Ill., closed a good evangelistic meeting in which Dr. J. B. McMinn was a helper.

DR. GEORGE W. TRUETT of Dallas, Texas, spoke every noon for a week in a downtown theater in Detroit, Mich., and every evening in the Woodward Avenue church.

REV. CHAS. E. LEE, formerly pastor at Albion, Alpena and Detroit, Mich., died, Mar. 2. He was a member of the First church of Detroit at time of death.

CALVARY CHURCH, Yonkers, N. Y., Rev. Geo. D. Adams, minister, held a dedication and ground-breaking service on its new location, Mar. 21. Short addresses were made by Rev. Geo. M. Stockdale and Dr. A. S. Hobart. Prayer of dedication by the pastor.

THE CHURCH at Robinson, Ill., Rev. W. B. Morris, pastor, recently saw twenty-eight persons confess Christ in one day. The church will occupy its new $60,000 edifice within the next sixty days.

THE ALLEN BAPTIST sanitarium at Robinson, Ill., will install a new oil-burning heating plant and an electrically operated refrigerating system during the coming summer.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. R. P. Pope will be suitably celebrated in the Calvary church of Pomona, Calif., Apr. 18. Mr. Pope has been with the Home Mission and Publication societies in the southwest for thirty-two years. He has organized forty-three new Baptist churches.

REV. H. L. CALDWELL of Roseburg, Ore., has accepted the call of the Calvary church of Pasadena, Calif. This church has erected a building costing $160,000 across the street from the Pasadena high school.

CHAPLAIN FRANK C. RIDEOUT, U. S. A. at Fort Snelling, Minn., has assisted several pastors with their pre-Easter service and on a Sunday supplied the First church of St. Paul in the absence of the pastor, Rev. A. M. McDonald.

appropriate services. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper was widely observed on Thursday and Friday evenings. There were hundreds of churches engaged in special evangelistic services culminating in unusual baptismal services through the week and on Easter.

REV. A. R. TOOTHACRE, Seville, Ohio, read an unusual announcement in his weekly bulletin for Mar. 28, featuring the seven words of Christ on the cross arranged in the form of a cross.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Vallejo, Calif., Rev. L. P. Russell, minister, has baptized fifteen persons as part of the results of an evangelistic meeting conducted by Rev. Edgar H. Gum, evangelist, and Gustavus Schneider, singer.

MR. E. S. NORTON, a layman of Miles City, Mont., has nearly one thousand books of the best authors in his private library.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Framingham, Mass., Rev. A. E. Wheeler, minister, is planning its centennial anniversary in June. The office is being redecorated. On Mar. 26 a dramatic club of the church gave a play entitled, "The Turning of the Tide." receipts went to the building fund of a church recently destroyed by fire.

REV. FLOY T. BARKMAN after seven years as the Baptist representative among naval men at San Diego, Calif., has been appointed a regular chaplain, United States Navy, with the rank of lieutenant junior grade.

A NEW LIBRARY erected at a cost of $1,000 at Redlands University was dedicated on Feb. 1. Dr. O. P. Gifford of Pasadena gave the address.

DR. E. H. RHOADES, JR., president of the Northern Baptist Convention, will speak at Salem, Ore., on April 15 under auspices of the First church, Rev. E. H. Banks, pastor.

THE CALVARY CHURCH of Oroville, Calif., is regularly recognized as a true Baptist church by a council which met on Mar. 10. Rev. D. E. Baker of Gerber was moderator and Rev. Edwin B. Singer acted as clerk. There were fifteen lay delegates and five ministers present.

DR. PERRY J. STACKHOUSE of the First church, Chicago, wrote and delivered a sermon about a year ago. Since then he has been invited to give it on five different occasions. It has been broadcast from station KYW. By many reports he repeated it on Easter evening. The title is "Thomas the Twin."

DR. T. M. HOFMEISTER held a meeting at the church at South Solon, Ohio. After being closed for five years the church is now revived and the future is bright.

THE MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION of Lincoln, Ill., published an eight page preliminary bulletin. The advertising paid for the printing, distribution, soliciting of advertising, and for the rental of a downtown theater for the week preceding Easter. Lincoln is a town of about 12,000 with a considerable Catholic population. Rev. James R. Shanks is the pastor of the Baptist church.

THE DENISON GLEE CLUB sang in the Berwyn, Ill., church on Apr. 3. Rev. F. Paul Langhorne, pastor.

THE CHURCH AT Redlands, Calif., Rev. Norman B. Henderson, pastor, had an attendance of 427 in its school of missions. The trustees of the church have recommended that they proceed with the erection of a new plant for the church school to cost between $75,000 and $90,000. The plans call for a dining-room that will seat 600.

REV. WM. E. SMITH has resigned as pastor at Sunland, Calif., to become evangelistic missionary for the Kern River association in the same state. He will reside at Bakersfield.

REV. E. W. BLOOMQUIST, pastor of the Calvary church of Cleveland, preached on the theme, "Saint Patrick, Baptist or Catholic?" This theme has attracted much attention this year, due to the visit of the Irish Baptist fraternal delegates in this country.

ORCHARD AVENUE CHURCH, Los Angeles, Calif., Rev. F. G. Davies, pastor, conducted a school of missions, Mar. 7-Apr. 11.

FIRST CHURCH, Waterloo, Iowa, Rev. R. E. Williams, pastor, has purchased 125 copies of the "Hymnal for American Youth."

CALVARY CHURCH, Minneapolis, Rev. W. T. Dorward, interim minister, conducts a kindergarten for small children every Sunday morning during the worship period.

SIR BADEN-POWELL, founder of the world-wide Boy Scout movement, will be in Chicago for a monster rally of scouts on May 8. All scouts who can will wear the "shorts" as Sir Robert will wear that type of uniform.

REV. ALEX RHINE of Trinity church, Long Beach, Calif., has a Sunday school of about 300 in twenty-six classes. This could be greatly increased if more room were available.

DR. LEE R. SCARBOROUGH conducted a ten days' evangelistic meeting in the new First church of Pasadena immediately following the dedication of the new building. The church also had the greatest school of missions in its history. John Marvin Dean is pastor.

THE MANCHESTER CHURCH of Los Angeles, Calif., Rev. C. R. Hairfield, pastor, recently added twenty-eight new members of which twenty were by baptism. This church has a promising work among Hungarians.

THE GOAL FOR THE Sunday school of the First church of Lebanon, Ind., for Easter Sunday was 600. Rev. Arthur Cowley, as pastor, conducted a week of special meetings preceding Easter.

CENTRAL CHURCH, Springfield, Ill., Rev. Herbert W. Hines, pastor, will open its school of missions, Apr. 11, with Rev. George D. Josif of Burma as the principal speaker.

PROF. W. H. ROBERTS of Redlands University spoke in the First church of Santa Ana, Calif., on the subject, "A New Day in Latin America."

DR. C. A. COOK of Seattle, Wash., has celebrated his forty-seventh ordination anniversary. He was ordained at Kingston, Ontario, in 1879. His pastorates have been in Toronto, Bloomfield, N. J., Spokane, Wash., Butte, Mont., and Seattle. Five years were given to denominational stewardship and six years were devoted to the joint secretaryship of the Home and Foreign societies in the Yellowstone district. Doctor and Mrs. Cook will motor across the continent this summer, visiting in eastern states and Canada.

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"Good evening, friends. This includes the Jayhawkers. You know Kansas is the 'Sunflower state'. But her people are called 'Jayhawkers'. Out there, these Jayhawkers believe in advertising. One day, says The Outlook, a general-store owner mailed a right-hand cotton glove to each of three hundred men in the community. The farmers were asked to come to the store and get the left-hand gloves free of cost. They came, three hundred strong, and carried away armloads of things bought and paid for.

"Now we would not advise you to tear THE BAPTIST in two and send half of it to your neighbors. But there are other ways of advertising the paper. Sample copies wisely distributed, bulletin announcements, pulpit endorsement, use in women's circles, in men's classes, displays in parlors, reviews by four-minute speakers. The persistent Jayhawker spirit devises its own method.

"The Jayhawker spirit has won in Kansas. We can remember the chinch bugs, the Hessian flies, the cyclones, the hot winds, the long droughts, the Farmer's Alliance, the Populist party, and the bootleggers that have inflicted misery on Kansas people. Did they put the Jayhawkers to flight? We'll tell the world they did not. Listen in.

"The wicked flee when no man pursueth,' says the Good Book—but they develop more speed if the saints are after them,' said some wise wag. Well, the history of the Jayhawkers is one of undaunted perseverance. 'Fight, fight, fight, until the job is done,' is their slogan. The gink who says, 'If you try and don't succeed—quit,' is no Jayhawker.

"We must now get some subscribers for THE BAPTIST,' says some brother, awakening from his Rip Van Winkle siesta. He gets busy for two full days. He gets two subscribers—that is, one renewal and one new subscriber. Then he quits for the next 363 days. 'He enters into rest.' Wouldn't he make a swell football player? One kick at the pigskin and then sit down the rest of the afternoon.

"Wait a minute. Let me tell you about the subscriptions in the First church of Evanston, Ill. Dr. James Madison Stifler is the pastor and a regular full-time friend of THE BAPTIST. There are about 700 members in the church. On Mar. 15 there were sixty-one families taking the paper. Mrs. R. A. Hilton is the agent and much of the success of maintaining a fine list is due to her tactful interest.

"Easter and Easter gifts. Why not? So Evanston church looks around and sees about twenty newly married young couples setting up housekeeping. They all belong to the church. They ought to have the best Baptist paper published. Sure. So the church votes $60 and sends these twenty young couples THE BAPTIST with Missions included for good measure. That puts the list up to eighty-one family subscriptions.

"Then because it is one of the best churches in the country it considers the old ministers and missionaries and the Baptist boys who have slipped and got into prisons, and interested individuals give $87 for gift subscriptions. So forty-four other names are added to the mailing list. That makes 125 subscriptions to their credit. Good for Evanston First. It's a quality church!

"The office boy will now recite the well-known lines by Paul Laurence Dunbar, entitled, 'The Lord Had a Job for Me':

"The Lord had a job for me, but I had so much to do,
I said, 'You get somebody else, or wait till I get through.'
I don't know how the Lord came out, but he seemed to get along;
But I felt kinda sneakin' like, cause I know'd I done him wrong.

One day I needed the Lord, needed him myself, needed Him right away,
And he never answered me at all, but I could hear him say
Down in my accusin' heart, 'Nigger, I've got too much to do;
You get somebody else, or wait till I get through.'

Now when the Lord he have a job for me, I never tries to shirk;
I drops what I have on hand and does the good Lord's work;
And my affairs can run along or wait till I get through;
Nobody else can do the job that God's marked out for you."

"WCOY now signs off. Keep the peppy Jayhawker spirit. Goodnight."

REV. W. EARLE SMITH has entered the sixth year of his ministry at Ontario, Calif. The church has now more than 500 members and has a harmonious constructive program.

THE CHURCH in Hemet, Calif., had the fellowship of Rev. and Mrs. H. Munger before they returned to their work in the Philippines and report a great blessing through it.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Los Angeles,

Calif., Dr. James A. Francis, pastor, conducted a friendship visitation when every resident member was called upon. The women's circles gave great aid and the results are reported as very helpful.

THE ANNUAL SCHOOL of missions in the Immanuel church, Los Angeles, Calif., had an enrolment in six classes of 302; Rev. John W. Craig, pastor.

AS A RESULT of special meetings held with the Lorena Street church, Los Angeles, Calif., by Rev. L. T. Barkman three new B. Y. P. U. societies were organized; Rev. S. W. Gage, pastor.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Bloomington, Ill. Rev. Chas. Durden, pastor, announces school of missions for every Wednesday evening during April. There will be mission book study, stereopticon slides, discussions and refreshments suggested by the country studied will be served.

THE CENTRAL CHURCH of Bloomington, N. J., was organized less than two years ago with eighty-five members. It now has 190 members. The Sunday school number around 290. Has leased the Masonic Temple for five years. Raised $14,000 for purposes first year. Among 250 church in state it now stands in twenty-fifth place in missionary giving. Rev. Harry H. Upton is the minister. He received his A. from Colby College and his B. D. from Newton Theological Institution.

REV. J. A. V. PIETERS of the Hoover Street church, Los Angeles, was assisting in special Bible conference work by W. Leon Tucker.

CITY PARK CHURCH, Denver, Colo. pledged $22,000 in a single service completing a new unit of its edifice; $30,000 will be required for the work. Rev. C. Miller is pastor. He is one of the most sought-after speakers in Denver, of speaking ten or twelve times to as many organizations outside his church in a single week.

DR. WILLIAM MUIR AULD delivered a stirring address in Judson Memorial church, Minneapolis, Minn., on "Scottish Traits." Doctor Auld was formerly associate pastor with Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Brooklyn.

DR. CASSIUS M. CARTER, for many years a leader in our denomination, passed to reward, Mar. 1. He was widely known in the central states and lived many years in Indiana. At the time of his death was a member of the Wilshire church, Los Angeles, Calif.

REV. CARLTON LEWIS KIRK, Alhambra, Calif., recently received 75 members, being baptized.

PASTOR DEAN HAMILTON of Burbank, Calif., has closed his first year with church during which he received 60 members.

REV. F. NELSON BAKER of Camarillo, Calif., was presented with a Ford coupé his church. The church is praying for a great awakening on the field. A rat good car and an awakening committee have frequently been observed.

MR. LELAND STEWART, a boy member of the First church of Sioux City, Iowa, served as mayor of the city for one year. Mar. 13, in recognition by the city of his work of leadership in the pioneer program and in Christian activity among the school boys.

REV. FRANK G. SAYERS, pastor of the excellent church at Hamilton, Ohio, who "keeping faith", accepted its appointment, paid monthly, overpaid, with its "designated," enumerates a number of coincidences that seem to him to be the occasions of disturbance in the Northern Baptist Convention and v.

them to him to have originated with "fellows of the same brand of theology." Such occurrences repeated lead him to "wonder there may be a pre-convention steering committee" which is trying to commit the denomination to "doctrinal negations" and a lowering of Baptist standards. He addresses his questions to THE BAPTIST and deserves an unqualified reply. Such questions come to this office from two opposite reactions and point to two opposite groups "disturbers." THE BAPTIST has no knowledge of any such steering committee other than the regular program committee of the convention, which is created by the convention and responsible to it. One thing is apparent, namely: Pastor Sayers belongs to no such steering committee, and the whole denomination has reason to be proud of his church.

DEACON WILLIAM H. POCKOCK of the first church, Detroit, Mich., a lifelong friend and servant of the church of Christ is passed to his heavenly home.

AT A RECENT "mothers and daughters" banquet in the Park Memorial church, Springfield, Mass., Rev. G. Pitt Beers, pastor, Miss Julia Buxton spoke on "Mothers and Daughters in Mexico." Miss Buxton had lived in Mexico and spoke in Mexican costume.

THE CENTRAL CHURCH of Norwich, Conn., pastor, D. A. Pitt, has received a bequest of $25,000 by the will of Captain James Lennen.

REV. G. W. CASSIDY of Immanuel church, Salt Lake City, Utah, had a service with an Irish flavor. Theme: "Was Saint Patrick a Baptist?" Hymns used, by the Irish poets—Thomas Moore, Thomas Kelly, Joseph Gilmore and W. J. Kirkpatrick.

THE KNIGHT TEMPLAR commanderies of Salt Lake City worshipped in the Immanuel Baptist church on Easter morning.

THE NORTH CHURCH of Camden, N. J., Rev. James D. Morrison, pastor, had an average Sunday-school attendance on recent Sundays of 443.

THE ENROLMENT at the Kansas City Seminary this year is 115 in regular courses and sixty in other courses. On March 24-26 there was an intensive institute of religious education with Dr. T. S. Tung, Rev. A. Lawrence Black, Rev. V. Witter, Mrs. C. M. Philbrick, Dr. C. S. Osborne and others on the faculty.

DR. CLARENCE A. BARBOUR of Rochester will be the speaker at the chapel service at Northfield, Mass., on April 18.

MRS. LUCY W. PEABODY of Beverly, Mass., will be a speaker at the general conference of Christian workers at Northfield, Mass., July 31-Aug. 16. Dr. J. C. Massee is also on the program.

IN THE CONFERENCE for women's foreign mission societies at Northfield, Mass., July 13-21, Dr. A. T. Robertson of Louisville Seminary and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery of Rochester, N. Y., are among the faculty members.

TABERNACLE CHURCH, Utica, N. Y., Rev. Edward Bleakney, pastor, has adopted the group system as worked out by Dr. F. A. Agar and in the canvass for 1926 secured over 200 new and increased pledges for the united budget of the church.

REV. A. P. HOWELLS, pastor at Jacksonville, Ill., for five and one-half years, has resigned to take effect Apr. 11. The membership of the church has increased from 500 to 712 and there have been substantial property improvements and acquisitions, including a new parsonage costing $5300 and ground valued at $8000. Mr. Howells will go to Oakland, Calif., for a period of relaxation.

THE NEW BERLIN, ILL., church, Rev. E. N. Cox, pastor, has added nearly sixty members as the result of special meeting led by Rev. R. S. Kirkland of Urbana.

MURPHYSBORO, ILL., was destroyed by a cyclone last year. The Baptist edifice was a total wreck. This body now meets in a tabernacle and on a recent Sunday had 524 in Sunday school and 400 in the evening service.

PASTOR PAUL A. SHENK of Canton, Ill., received forty-six new members during the past winter.

REV. E. V. GOAD is the new pastor at Berwick, Ill.

REV. A. R. PIXLEY of Utica, Ill., assisted by Rev. G. W. Claxon of Streator, held a revival that resulted in twenty additions.

THE CHURCH at Urbana, Rev. Baldus, pastor, has just subscribed $50,000 for a new education plant.

REV. E. L. KRUMREIG, Bethel church, Carrick, Pittsburgh, Pa., is leading on in the erection of a building to seat 1400 and to cost $150,000. It will be the only Baptist church in a suburb of 40,000 people. The walls of the building are now completed.

Rev. C. T. Garnett, formerly pastor at Bisbee, Ariz., and more recently at Yuma, died on Mar. 21.

"GREECE BAPTIST CHURCH, organized in 1814, has for more than a century been loyal to the Baptist denomination. In justice to our new neighbors of many different communions, as well as in justice to our own spirit of Christian brotherhood, this church five years ago arranged to receive by letter into the full fellowship of our local congregation members of any evangelical communion. At the present time twenty-three of our 200 members have been received in accord with this membership provision. They are among our most trusted officers and leaders. We are fully convinced that where there is but one church in a community, that church, if it be true to Christ, must provide full Christian fellowship for all believers. This we have done. We consider it a privilege to cooperate in our Baptist missionary enterprises. We are convinced that our practice in no way endangers true Baptist faith and order." This is a condensed statement of position adopted by unanimous vote at a morning service. It is published in full in the Greece Community Builder of March 25. Greece is near Rochester, N. Y.

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for April 18

THE BEGINNING OF SIN

Golden Text: 1 Cor. 15:22

The beginning of sin is always the same whether it begins in Eden or in the first conscious sin of a modern boy or girl. There may be a great break in the mountains, but however far removed on range may be from the other the common stratification will determine their relations. So it is with sin.

The Genesis of Sin

Innocence awaking to the consciousness of moral struggle is the first step toward sin. In other words, temptation is sin knocking at the door. And temptation nearly always comes with a question as to the wisdom of some prohibition. "Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of any tree of the garden?" In the case the prohibition was exaggerated suggestion. God had not said any such thing. But both the tempter and the one tempted exaggerated the thing forbidden. The woman added something to the prohibition when she said that God had commanded them not to touch the forbidden tree. In that very fact there already lay the first moral defeat. And that is the way sin emerges. Having dallied with temptation it is easy to take the next step which is listening to the suggestion that the prohibition is an unreasonable suppression of personal liberty and an unjustifiable limitation of the enrichment of life through freedom of self-expression. "Ye shall be as gods" with all the thrill of unbridled activity and with all the experience of evil as well as good. The skids are now well greased for a toboggan slide. "So took of the fruit and did eat." That is the pictorial way of putting the action which lies the guilt of yielding to temptation. This is the history of the human race. We now know that the process of creation recorded pictorially in the first chapter of Genesis is still going on in the universe, and by the same token we know that the beginning of sin is still initiated in the human family whenever a child reaches the crisis of the first moral defeat.

The Growth of Sin

Sin's growth as well as sin's genesis is always the same. Sin is always social. A lone sinner never lived. One leper always has company, because leprosy, common with all other diseases to which flesh is heir, is contagious and therefore governed by social law. Eve ate of the forbidden fruit and gave unto her husband and he did eat. That is the ancient record which sounds as new as the morning headlines in the newspapers. Sin spreads like the "flu," by one person passing it on to another until it becomes epidemic. Thus the graphic story of the Garden of Eden in its permanent moral values is as real today as the latest story of sin and vice and crime which appears in the press of yesterday.

New Books

God's Dynamite, or Changing a World by Prayer, by P. H. J. Lerrigo. Philadelphia: Judson Press. 75 cents.

In this mission study book for adults and young people Doctor Lerrigo gives a panorama of our foreign missions fields through the telescope of prayer. It is a book of illustration for the teacher and preacher, as well as an interesting study book. And by no means least, it will lead you to "that secret place of prayer" with a renewed faith and eagerness.

—FRED E. DEAN.

Advertising the Church, edited by Francis H. Case. New York: Abingdon Press. $1.25.

This book, containing addresses delivered at the church department sessions of two conventions of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, is a storehouse of method and suggestion in church advertising. Instead of simply collecting the addresses, the editor has prepared twelve chapters on specific problems of church advertising, and collected the pertinent paragraphs of each address in its proper chapter. This plan adds unity and usefulness to the book, which is further improved by many illustrations of examples of good advertising.

—FRED E. DEAN.

You Can Learn to Teach, by Margaret Slattery. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $1.35.

This book shows the most recent advances in the fields of psychology and pedagogy. Enlightenment and courage come to the teacher sincerely trying to do her best. An understanding knowledge of the pupil is received, laws of development and the best methods of teaching. This book brings fresh inspiration to the experienced teacher and is a valuable text for teacher training classes. Its wisdom and guidance would prove to earnest teachers that they "can learn to teach".

—GLADYS KILLAM.

The Singers of Judah's Hills, by Charles Arthur Boyd. New York: Revell. $1.25.

Mr. Boyd is pastor of the First Baptist Church of Marquette, Michigan. He has specialized on the subject of artistic expression in religion and is in great demand for summer assemblies and other places where young people gather for religious instruction and inspiration. In his book he has exhibited his talent at its best. In each of the eighteen short chapters one of the Psalms is coupled with an original story and so interwoven that the psalm shines with new light and beauty. The book itself is a thing of beauty.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

Central American Indians and the Bible, by W. F. Jordan. New York: Revell. $1.

The author is secretary of the Upper Midwest agency of the American Bible Society. He describes in graphic style the evangelistic work being done for the Indians in Central America. There are ten chapters, each complete in itself, containing stories of missionary endeavor admirably adapted for use in Sunday schools, prayer meetings and for sermon illustrations. The romance of the early discoverers and conquistadores lives in these modern heralds of Christ. Seven half-tone illustrations and a map of Central America.

—G. CLIFFORD CRESS.

Addresses for Women Workers, by Mrs. George H. Morrison. New York: Doran. $2 net.

Mrs. Morrison is the wife of Dr. George Morrison whose articles of uplift have so many times filled the Devotional Life page of THE BAPTIST. Her book has been compiled to provide material with a wide range of interest including religious and mission subjects, hygiene, temperance, special talks to mothers and to children. Most of the addresses are written by Mrs. Morrison.

—J. T. V.

The Modern Hymnal, by Robert Coleman. Dallas, Texas: Published by the author. Board, 80 cents; limp cloth, 60 cents.

Mr. Coleman has published many volumes of popular religious songs, but this seems to be his best offering. It is adapted to an unusual degree for all of the possible requirements of a church that wants to get along with one book. Its 515 hymns, choruses and responsive readings supply every variety of material from the most dignified and churchly hymns to children's songs. From every point of view the book is attractive and it is built to stand hard wear.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

Fifty Poems, by American Poets. New York: Academy Press. $1.50.

This little volume is an annual of more than ordinary personal interest because it follows the poems with a brief biography of the poets whose verses have been honored by a place in the collection. The poems are of various types on many themes, but in the main they betoken vision and a spiritual sense.

—J. T. V.

To Be Near Unto God, by Abraham Kuyper, D. D. New York: Macmillan. $3.

Doctor Kuyper was late prime minister of the Netherlands. He is a statesman of the highest type and has a fine theological training. In childlike simplicity of faith, mystical insight and sweetness of soul he sets forth this volume of meditations. The work is outstanding in its spiritual uplift taking the reader into the very heart of God, causing him to feel the passion of divine love. The book has been translated from the Dutch by John H. de Vries who comments in

For Play and Recreation

The Playtime Guide Book

By Frederic K. Brown

The aim is practical — to present a graded course in play such as will help church workers to forestall the evils of wrong methods of recreation and capture the play spirit for God. Here very little is theory. The author has gathered his material from the fruits of experience. In the second part of the book nearly one hundred games are named and described.

This course aims to put the child at its earliest teaching age under the influence of play that is religious expression, and to keep it there, so far as the church has control, until adult age. Illustrated. 12mo. 164 pages. Bound in cloth. $1.50 net.

Organization and Administration of the Adult Department, by Wade Crawford Barclay. New York: Methodist Book Concern. 70 cents.

The quality of the book is sufficiently indicated by the fact that it is a textbook in the standard course in teacher training outlined and approved by the International Council of Religious Education, and examination shows that all of the implications of that fact are fulfilled. A compact manual of both how and why to do adult department work.

Saints and Ladies, by Clarissa H. Spencer. New York: Woman's Press. Probably $1.

By a woman, about women and for women and all who can appreciate the glory of true and noble womanhood. It is even dedicated to a woman, the mother of the author. Sketches of women as friends of Jesus, fellow workers with the apostles, saints, martyrs, teachers, preachers, statesmen, mystics and unknown ministers of human helpfulness make up an interesting story. The book is a thing of beauty to look at and handle. It would be a charming present to a woman.

The Saving Sense

Teacher—"Why did About Ben Adhem's name lead all the rest?"

Sarah—"Because it's first in the alphabet."

In Norway, according to a magazine article written by a traveler, a girl must possess a certificate of her ability as a cook before she is allowed to marry. In fairness, then, a young man should be made to have a diploma proving that he has the ability to go out and earn something for her to cook.—Detroit Free Press.

"I will teach you to put your tongues out to one another!" said the stern parent.

"You needn't father. We know how!" responded the children in a chorus.

On a trip through a desert a Chicago woman was carried by four stalwart blacks in a chair suspended on poles. The natives started out with great cheer, but as the journey progressed and the sun beat down upon them, they began to chant a prayer to Allah. It was melodious though a bit mournful. Its constant repetition was soothing, and the lady dozed. On awakening, the prayer, grown more mournful, almost despairing, was still being intoned. Turning to her interpreter, she asked the meaning of the mysterious words. The interpreter pretended not to hear, but being pressed for an answer, finally bowed low and said: "Madam, since you insist, they pray that the great Allah may make you less fat."—Chicago Tribune.

"I can't see what them epicures has got to complain about with this soup," snorted the restaurant proprietor.

"They wouldn't have no grouch coming," explained the waiter tactfully, "if only the cook would admit it's soup. He says it's coffee."

The blacks, he says, want a place in the sun and are beginning to see that they have power to take it. South Africa, he says, "is at the cross-roads, her future is at stake, what is she to do?"

The latest victim of a mob of which report has come to hand is President Emory Hunt of Bucknell University. The report indicates that its members were all respectable citizens, and their picture accompanying the report appears to justify the classification. In fact they were members of the faculty of the university, and the occasion of the uprising was the sixty-fourth anniversary of his birth. They took measures to make sure that he would never repeat it. In token of the state of their feelings they presented to him a beautifully engrossed testimonial bearing sixty-four signatures.

Readers within the Chicago trade area will be interested in the announcement of the bureau of public health that no carcass of an animal slaughtered which has not had ante-mortem inspection by a bureau employe, shall be brought into any Chicago market, except that carcasses of cattle, sheep, swine and goat to which the head and all viscera other than the stomach, bladder and intestines, are held by the natural attachment, may be received for inspection at an official establishment where there is a food inspector assigned. After receipt every such carcass shall be inspected and if found to be free from disease and otherwise sound, healthful, wholesome and fit for human food, it shall be marked with an inspection legend. Calves under the age of ten weeks are exempt.

Wilkesburg, Pa., Sunday school hit upon a novel and interesting program. Members of the Leopold Bible class told when, where and under what circumstance they were baptized. The story was an epic. Experiences recalled Llenelly, South Wales; the Kennebec and Androscoggin rivers; a line of happy memories running clear across Pennsylvania; the sunny South and St. Louis; Virginia, Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin; cutting holes in the ice, and many another treasured remembrance of places and incidents of blessing.

Secretary Work cites as an example of the failure of public ownership the fact that the government railroad in Alaska does not pay expenses. Then he gives the reason why it is a failure, namely, that there is not enough business to make it pay, and that people are leaving Alaska. Is it to be understood that under such circumstances private ownership would succeed? Secretary Work has stated ample reason why he has not been able to make the railroad pay. All that the public asks of him is that he manage it as well as if he were serving a private corporation. He certainly would not have us understand that the deficit is due to a lack of faithful and efficient administration in his department.

Moody Bible Institute will conduct an international Bible conference in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York City, May 2-7. The list of speakers includes men widely known as Bible teachers. The announcement states somewhat significantly, that "so far as known, none of these speakers and teachers are connected with the fundamentals or any other movement, nor are they known as pre- or post-millenarians, both schools of teaching being represented among them." The precise objective of the conference is also matter of note. It is not the promotion of a better understanding of the scriptures, but specifically, "the reaffirmation of the historic creeds of Christendom, including the personality of God; the authority of the Bible as a divine revelation; the Godhead of Jesus Christ; the fallen condition of mankind; the efficacy of the atonement of Christ; regeneration as the basis of righteous conduct; the church as the great missionary society of the world; the doctrine of future punishment and rewards and related truths." The two notable items about this conference, as being under the auspices of the Moody Institute, are its express dissociation of itself from the fundamentalist movement, and its adoption of a program of Christian dogmatics rather than of Bible study and promotion.

President Mullins is writing for the Baptist Times of London a series of articles upon "The Great Affirmations of the Baptist Faith." It is understood that he will tour the world next summer with the special purpose of visiting the Baptist fields.

A black week is what the Christian World of London calls the week in which the political explosion occurred in the assembly of the League of Nations. It lays the blame largely on Sir Austen Chamberlain. It thinks that "any patch of work that may be framed up will leave the league a battered wreck" and will "thrust back for years the likelihood of America seeking admission."

The World League against Alcoholism is not only not disposed to take any backward steps in the United States, but has set out definitely to make the world dry. And the task is not so hopeless as it is large. For there is a vast body of sentiment in the various nations already pledged to prohibition as a principle, that sentiment is growing. The people of other nations are not trying to breathe down prohibition in America; the effort comes from predatory producers and vendors of liquor.

Japan has a highly organized and active League of Nations Association. It carries on lectures in universities, holds popular meetings, conducts special schools of instruction, maintains study circles, gives dinners, issues live periodicals and holds a peace congress every year on Armistice day as an occasion to make propaganda for peace. It has an organization in both houses of parliament, as well as many local branches. Its president is Prince I. Tokugawa, and the chairman of its board of directors is Viscount E. Shibusawa, with headquarters in Tokio.

Who killed Cock Robin? Mussolini's government has issued a decree which practically outlaws Masonry in Italy. How did it happen? A Baptist exchange says that Baptists in Italy were supposed to hold friendly relations with the Masonic Order, and because they so hated in Italy the Order has suffered from that supposed friendship. But a Methodist exchange says: "It is hardly possible that an article a Methodist bishop had in a Masonic periodical touching on our collegio on Mont Mario, which article was a red rag to the Vatican, determined the Vatican to measure its strength at once against the Masonic order, and this may have been the fuse in the dictator's mind."

Shall We Have a General Assembly

BY SHAILER MATHEWS

THE proposed by-law for the Northern Baptist Convention defining a Baptist church, raises a fundamental question: Is the local church to remain supreme, or is the convention to become a General Assembly?

One of the essential characteristics of the Baptist denomination has been the autonomy of the local church. Associations came later than the churches that composed them. For years the original Baptist churches in and about Philadelphia hesitated to organize the first American association of Baptist churches. The reason for the hesitation was the fear lest there should be superimposed upon the local church, some authority like that of other religious bodies then existing. Baptist churches have always recognized this danger. While it is true that the entrance of a church into a Baptist association has been determined by the association itself, membership in an association is not essential for a body to organize as a Baptist church.

When state associations or conventions were established, the same principle held. A convention was the meeting place of messengers or representatives of the local churches, but it had no control over them. State conventions have exercised the right to admit or exclude Baptist churches, but such excluded organizations have remained Baptist.

When missionary societies were formed they were intended to be simply the agencies for the cooperative activity of individuals and local churches. They never exercised authority over those churches and never possessed any judicial or legislative power over the churches. Francis Wayland, and many others, some even to the present time deny that Baptist churches can appoint "delegates" or "representatives" with power to represent them without a church vote on specific matters involved.

When the Northern Baptist Convention was organized it was wholly in the interest of increasing the efficiency of the churches already expressed in the societies. I was associated with the movement which resulted in the Northern Baptist Convention, from its very inception, being a member of the committee of three appointed by the Chicago Association to propose reorganization of the cooperative work of the denomination. The first draft of the constitution proposed by the committee dealing with the matter was published in the Standard under my name. At the meeting in Washington I presented the tentative constitution drawn up during the all-night session of the committee appointed for that purpose. The first sentence of the constitution in which the independence of the local church is expressly recognized, was proposed by me.

In view of these facts, I think I am in a position to state what the purpose of the convention was, and what its relation to the local church was conceived to be. By every means possible the successive committees engaged in dealing with the final shape of the constitution endeavored to protect the churches from anything like a centralized form of government, and to leave the independent local churches precisely where they had ever been, self-determining, independent democracies.

For more than a decade this conception of the convention was religiously observed by those of us who were members of the executive committee and various general committees like the $3,000,000 campaign committee, the missionary education movement, and the five-year program committee. As a member and chairman of several of these committees, I know how carefully the independence of the local church was conserved and how anything like legislation on the part of the convention was avoided.

Of late years a decided change has come over the convention. On the part of certain of its members there have been repeated efforts to destroy its character as a means of effective cooperation in the activities of the denomination, and to make it more of the nature of a General Assembly. Several attempts have been made to have it adopt a confession. These were unsuccessful, but were avowedly made for the purpose of excluding certain persons or groups of persons from the denomination. The convention also passed upon the theological status of the educational institutions associated with the denomination. It also appointed a committee to investigate the operations of the societies in matters which constitutionally and legally belong to the societies exclusively. It is now proposed that the convention, as a basis of its representation in the convention, shall define for itself what constitutes a Baptist church. This, it should be remembered also, carries with it a definition of the churches which are eligible to send representatives to the meetings of the various cooperating societies, membership in which is largely identical with that of the convention itself—according to the by-laws of each of these organizations.

Without recanvassing the questions submitted to the law committee, let us look the facts squarely in the face. The proposed by-law establishes a test which must be met by every church that would be represented in the administration of the cooperative work of the Northern Baptist churches. If the by-law were adopted the convention and the societies would of necessity be compelled to examine the status of every church represented. If a church were not composed exclusively of immersed persons, it would have no right to have representation in the convention, or to vote on any subject before the convention or, except in certain cases, the societies. Should the representatives of any church have unimmersed members vote in a meeting of the convention or of any one of its societies, any action resulting might come subject to legal investigation. In view of the fact that the convention societies are constantly obliged to deal on large business operations including the borrowing of money, the necessity of legally correct representation in voting bodies becomes of the utmost importance.

But how is the convention to proceed upon the eligibility of thousands of churches now represented in and contributing to the societies? In the nature of the case it would either be itself liable to illegal action, or obliged to set up an elaborate method for testing the status of every individual member of a church with the right to exclude from its membership and from that of the societies a very considerable number of churches that have regarded themselves as possessed of self-determination relative to their membership. It is true that such excluded churches, if cooperating, might send representatives to the societies, but is it likely that such churches would continue to support either the convention or the societies? As Baptists do we wish the convention to have such direct and indirect control over the local churches?

Such a question is far more fundamental than the denominational status and affiliation of any single church, matter how large a role it may play in the activities of the denomination. The real question is whether the Baptist nomination of the North proposes to go further in the development of a type of organization which subordinates the local church to a national body. It is, of course, true that churches which did not meet the definition of the Baptist church could withdraw from the convention society and if they saw fit, could organize another convention and other societies. That such action would be an unqualified misfortune, I think all would agree. That it would cripple the work of the societies is beyond question. But this, incalculably serious as it would be, is less important than the structural change which would come over the denomination. We should no longer have a free association of independent churches.

If the denomination really wishes such a sort of change it should go about it intelligently. The Presbyterian have the sort of organization which those who wish an overhead national authority should adopt. The Presbyterian General Assembly is a genuinely representative body, possessed of powers, judicial rights and authority. It is not of the nature of a convention, but of congress. Its members are selected from the various subordinate judicatories and brought together possessed of delegated powers which must be respected and obeyed.

Neither Jew nor Greek

CHANGES in the missionary landscape within the last fifteen years, although not unexpected to careful observers, have been marvelous. When John R. Mott wrote his appeal for "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation," the common working idea was that the favored nations and groups should carry to the less favored nations or groups the good news of personal salvation through faith in Christ. Incidentally also, there was the benevolent purpose to carry to the less favored peoples the blessings of the civilization enjoyed by those who undertook such missionary work. We took great pride in what America was doing for China or India. We cherished high anticipations of what a nice world this would be when those lands should be brought up to the standard of "Christian America." They were our wards. We would enlighten them, lead them, control them, mold them, make them like ourselves and ultimately welcome them, perhaps, into the family. When they really found out what we were trying to do for them they would rebound in boundless gratitude for the deliverance which we had brought to them.

Suddenly something happened. They had discovered themselves and found out uncomfortable things about us. India, China and Japan rose up to declare that their own institutions, their own civilization and their own nationality suited them very well. They appreciated what we had been trying to do for them; but they would thank us to dismiss all talk of being their patrons, guardians, civilizers, and, especially, exploiters. Christianity they would appropriate, but not American or English Christianity. They would interpret, organize and administer it in their own way, according to their own national genius.

This has brought a halt for a friendly reconnaissance. And a hasty survey has brought into view some obvious necessities and some tremendous problems. The old vocabulary of foreign missions is likely soon to become a dead language. The expurgation of missionary hymns has already begun. Much of the coming change is still beyond our comprehension, but some items are becoming clear. The missionary enterprise itself, while retaining its genius for personal appeal, must be transformed to an extent yet unknown from the character of denominational and national propaganda to that of interdenominational and international cooperation. It must assume the task not only of calling individuals to personal faith, but of turning groups, classes, nations and races on a world-wide scale to collective righteousness.

Let no man shrink from such an undertaking as being beyond the capacity of Christian statesmanship. It has been a current boast that the most statesmanlike understanding of international and interracial problems is found in the missionary body. Be it so. That is the measure of missionary responsibility for moral leadership. The missionary has set himself against the slave trade, against atrocities in the Congo country, against foot-binding, against the opium traffic, and in every case he has won or is winning. This discipline should prepare him for the greater task of expelling exploitation, imperialism and war from the world and creating social competency in the human race on the Christian basis of brotherhood. If moral guidance for the adjustment of international and interracial relations is beyond the practical capacity of the Christian religion, the failure of Christianity is only a question of time.

The capacity of Christianity for becoming the universal religion is involved. Heretofore it has been assumed; now it is to be tested. But it can stand that test only by showing its power to vitalize and assimilate those cultural elements among all peoples which can serve spiritual and moral purposes. It cannot compromise with falsehood and sin, but it can discriminate between the good and the bad among different peoples and cultures, and it can exhibit itself as the hospitable center of assemblage for all of the good there is in the world. To this end and in this attitude it must claim and exercise the right of ethical criticism upon peoples and institutions by the standard of the righteousness of Christ. And this right must be impartially exercised without either economic or political fear or favor. Unless we can insist on practical Christianity in the United States, why urge it on other nations?

Problems of the most grave and fundamental sort are involved. A resurvey of the relations of church and state is inevitable, and the churches must determine anew how far their activities shall subserve the policy and interest of the nation, especially in war, and upon what ethical limits of patriotism they will insist. In the light of the experience of the world with a Romanized church and with a feudalized church in the past, it is inevitable that in the near future the problem of a capitalized church shall come up for study. Indeed papal investments are already open to serious consideration as an international question. A third but not the last of such problems is how far the enterprise of world evangelization is to be shifted from a denominational base to one of interdenominational management.

Of course any attempt to launch some sudden great, world-wide revolution in missionary method would be futile if not foolish. But the more perfectly we comprehend the nature, factors and tendencies of impending change, the more intelligently we shall be able to make successive adjustments as occasion arises.

Denominational Day

HOW far denominational day is signalized among Baptist churches by any special notice is not known, but it affords a peculiar opportunity for assessing anew our denominational origin, history, principles, problems, contribution and mission in the world. April 18 is the day, and the committee of the Northern Baptist Convention whose special function is to remind the churches of the occasion, has already sent out a circular to pastors.

This is an appropriate time and place to call attention to a little book prepared by Dr. James S. Kirtley and just issued by the Judson Press. The title of the book is, "The Baptist Distinctive and Objective," and perhaps there is nothing in print which comes so near as the book itself does to telling just what principle distinguishes the Baptist denomination and accounts for it. The heart of the whole discussion is a single luminous, fundamental and revolutionary sentence, namely, "Any person who ever lived or ever could live, has as much inherent right to deal personally with God as any other person who ever lived or could live."

A moment's reflection will show how this principle sweeps aside all traditional, creedal, ritual, sacerdotal, sacramental and ecclesiastical salvation, and reduces the essence of religion to the naked experience of personal union with God through faith. It is the creative principle of all of the pleas for religious and civil liberty Baptists ever made and of all the loyalties in either religion or morals which they have ever consistently urged.

Here is the answer to the question that is somewhat satirically asked: "What distinctive thing do Baptists stand for that other denominations do not also claim?" We need not assume an exclusive attitude and deny the right of anybody else to assert this principle also. But we may without presumption say that our steadfast assertion of it has been the fundamental reason why fellowship with us has not been historically accorded to us by other Christians generally. Our insistence upon it has antagonized too many ecclesiastical practices and teachings to make our companionship agreeable to those who held them. Hence we have been and are today naturally to some extent a separate people, not so much by our own choice as by that of others.

If Baptists themselves had clearly conceived in common this fundamental principle, it would have saved them many a divisive internal controversy, past and present. For if this principle is valid, fundamental and creative, it defines all fellowship in Christ. All who have experienced and do experience personal union with God through faith in Christ have fellowship with the Father, with the Son and with one another, and all of their associated life ought to grow out of that fellowship and to express it. Within the bounds of that fellowship there is room for all of the differences of interpretation and of activity that can arise among the children of God. Its recognition would save us from a disposition to dictate to one another what one must think and say and do on penalty of exclusion.

Owing to a lack of full and common understanding of the mind of Christ, however, difficulties arise in the practical application of the principle. Our ability to work together is limited by the degree of our ability to see together. Consequently we form cooperative groups on the basis of our common understandings. The Baptist principle commits us to entire freedom in such grouping. On this ground THE BAPTIST accorded and is prepared to defend the legitimacy of the Baptist Bible Union, as a group of Baptists formed on the voluntary principle for the propagation of the gospel. But our task is so to form our group fellowships that they will coincide as nearly as possible with the fundamental fellowship of the kingdom of God.

If Baptists have any distinctive contribution to make to the world it lies just here. And if we move together intelligently and in harmony to give to the world this principle with its easy and obvious corollaries, history will never forget what Baptists will have done for the world in the twentieth century.

What Will Victory Mean?

SOUTHERN Baptists as well as northern Baptists have been straining every effort to clear up a deficit and provide for the current budget. At the date of this writing the outcome of the effort in either section is not known. In both sections it depends upon the extent to which the local churches raise their annual portion. Especially, it may depend on the way in which the stronger churches meet the emergency. For there are churches in considerable number whose financial ability is exceptional and which have undertaken exceptional allotments. A failure of 20 per cent in the case of a church that has undertaken $5000 or $10,000 will subtract from the general success far more than in the case of a pledge of $500. And in case of the necessity for going the second mile such exceeding generosity will count towards the total from a strong church more than from a weak one. Of course, in point of spiritual values, the principle of the widow's mite always holds, and the poorest church in the land has the opportunity for spiritual enrichment and approval through sacrificial giving equally with that of the wealthiest one. But we are dealing now with the specific question of raising a needed and pledged sum of money and it is at this point that a failure of our stronger churches would be specially disastrous. Their strength is the measure of their responsibility.

What will it mean to the denomination and to the common cause of Christianity if within the next two weeks the word shall be flashed across the continent and around the world that both the northern and southern Baptists have met the present emergency successfully, have ended the danger of debt and retrenchment, and have started on a new period of expansion? It will put new heart into millions of harassed and anxious Christian workers. It will chase away misgivings, soften criticism, remove misunderstandings, heal wounds, close gaps in fellowship, set in motion a new wave of encouragement and faith and put into the halting march of world evangelization the swing of victory.

The World in Transit

A Primer Lesson About Modernism

The dispute about modernism arose in the Roman Catholic church and it does not really belong anywhere else. The question was this: In matters of religion must we be guided by what the church says or by what we find out for ourselves through experience and scientific investigation? The pope said: Take the word of the church. The modernists said: Find out for yourselves. The pope won. The modernists had to keep still or get out. How that controversy shifted over to Protestant churches is an interesting subject for study.

Defining Democracy in Terms of Plutocracy

Mr. Judson G. Rosebush, a capitalist and an avowed imperialist of the ethical sort, defines democracy as an order of society that provides "an open road for talent and a due reward for talent." The definition is perfect for the man who knows that he has talent, has an opening for it and is making money out of it. But according to that definition every despotism in the world, according to its lights, was democratic. Moses and Joseph rose under the pharaohs, Daniel under Nebuchadnezzar and Richelieu under Louis Thirteenth. But if the definition be modified so as to mean an equally open road for all of the talents of all of the people and an equally due reward for the use of all of their talents, then it is acceptable as a test of real democracy. Here are two young men, as often happens, of equal talents, one of whom, after demonstrating his ability, finds that social circumstances beyond his control have made him a bankrupt, but the other finds that social circumstances which he did not create have made him a millionaire. That is business: is it democracy? Under the present order of things one has a talent for exploitation and profiteering and he rises thereby to wealth and power, another has a genius for discovering truth or teaching righteousness and he may be fortunate to keep out of jail. The present choice seems to lie between a sham democracy with plutocratic technique and a real democracy with the technique of a mob. The task of Christianity and education is to create a third option; namely, that of a democracy with the technique of a true community life.

Age the Ku Klux, for the Papal Guards Are Coming

Just as the newspapers begin to report the passing of the Ku Klux agitation, and there is hope of a return to a rational discussion of religious matters, Cardinal Mundelein announces for this summer a great eucharistic congress to be staged in Chicago and to be attended with all possible publicity, pomp and pageantry. One of the striking features will be an escort of Noble Guards, a picked, permanent military organization in the pope's service at the Vatican and all of them officers in the Italian army. This military company of a foreign power, uniformed and armed will be the special guard of honor at the great parade and at the celebration of the eucharist in the presence of a vast multitude of people. Essentially it will be as harmless as a troop of Boy Scouts. But it will be felt as a challenge, and it may be meant as a challenge, to the suspicions and fears of more than half of the American people. If the Roman Catholics had wished to awaken into new life some form of the perennial anti-Catholic agitation they could hardly have chosen a better device for the purpose. Again they raise the old question whether they seek the political and military control of this country by the pope, and start the pot boiling anew.

These Corporations Exhibit Pure Generosity—Perhaps

Two hundred corporations in the state of New York are reported to have granted their able-bodied male employees thirty days leave of absence on full pay. Who said that corporations are "soulless"? But wait a bit. There are conditions. The conditions are that those employees are to spend those thirty days in military training camps. Why? Mull that question over until you arrive at an answer. That answer when you find it will be something that deserves serious thinking, especially from employees.

Has War Profiteering Cut The Nerve of Benevolence?

Changed economic conditions in England are crippling the hospitals, according to the Christian World, and its explanation is startling, namely: "Since the war wealth has passed from the hands of those who gave largely to charities into the hands of those who are far less generous. Many hospitals which were being maintained by voluntary subscriptions before the war have been driven to make desperate efforts—such as enormous lotteries—which, in some cases at any rate, have ended in disastrous failure." It sees no solution except the nationalization of hospitals. But can it be possible that while the noblest Englishmen were dying on the battlefield the baser ones were grabbing profits at home? And are the base new-rich now revealing their true character by starving the hospitals?

Why Be So Critical Of Things American?

Occasionally to the mind of some reader, occurs the question whether these paragraphs are not over-critical of things American, and why they should be so. That they are critical in some degree there is no doubt, and they are intended to be so. Why? THE BAPTIST is an American journal. The writer of these notes is of purely American ancestry running back to the Revolution, and himself never lived in any other country. He is saturated with primitive and fundamental Americanism. His patriotism is a passion. He wants to see his own country lead the world in all that belongs to true greatness. Other nations have their own critics and teachers. Americans must teach America. The more one loves America the more he is bound to strive to make America Christian in the spirit of the people, in its internal order and in its external contacts with other peoples. To do this it is necessary to remember that there is a strong strain of political and commercial Phariseism running in the blood of Americans. Our patriotism is mingled with conceit. We are a nation of "go-getters." The eagle habitually screams. In order therefore to make any progress in the Christianizing of the nation as a whole, it is necessary to remind ourselves that we might be a lot better than we are, and to show wherein and how. This is a first charge on American Christianity. If anybody can perform the task better than we are doing, let him proceed. There is ample room.

VIII—Heaven

BY FREDERIC C. SPURR

OUR first business is to discriminate very sharply between the vague and sentimental ideas current in our time about heaven, and the express teaching of Holy Scripture—particularly the New Testament. Many of our popular hymns about the life beyond are full of exaggerated imagery drawn often from suspicious sources. A misunderstanding of the Apocalyptic symbolism of the Book of Revelation has supplied many of these. No attempt has been made to get behind the images to the ideas which they seek to express. The harps, the golden streets, the pure river and the white garments are only the drapery of the picture. Most of our hymnaries require drastic revision in the sections dealing with death and the future life. Many hymns are non-Christian, both in the pagan conceptions of death and the Moslem conceptions of heaven which they set forth. Having said that we have the right to appeal to intelligent Christians and bid them separate the wheat from the chaff and not throw to the void good and bad alike.

The New Testament on Heaven

*The New Testament has really very little to say about heaven; far less than most persons imagine. The details it gives are surprisingly few. But the principles it enunciates are unmistakable and they penetrate to the very quick of life. Here we must face the fact that the word "heaven" in the Bible does not invariably stand for one and the same idea. It is used in several senses. It is a name for the firmament, "the windows of heaven were opened up" (Gen. 7:11). This, of course, is pure poetry, a picturesque way of describing a storm. Heaven is also a general name for the spirit world, at the heart of which God dwells, and where our Lord Christ reigns. Our Lord has "gone into heaven" where he abides. The word is also used to indicate a progressive spiritual order, "In my Father's house are many abiding places." The idea is that of gradation, of progress. The Bible, again and again, speaks of a succession of heavens, "Heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee." St. Paul, writing of a mysterious psychical experience, says that he was "caught up to the third heaven." The thought contained in these phrases is that of a progressive order. And this is exactly in line with what we know of life hitherto. The order here below is progressive, from the minutest forms of life, visible only through the most powerful microscope, to man, who is the crown of terrestrial creation. Man himself is subject to the same order. Progress is the mark of his life. He is made to go from strength to strength. A progressive order, on the other side, fits in exactly with what we know to be God's will for mankind as revealed in his past dealings with our race. These indications of a progressive order "beyond," are certainly not very precise, but they open a wide door for thought.*

Another important thing to be considered is the fact that everywhere in the New Testament heaven is treated from a practical and not from a theoretical point of view. Our Lord related heaven to our mortal life in three ways. He meant that the thought of it should become an element in the formation of our character: "lay up treasures in heaven . . . do not lay up for yourself treasure upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt." Which means there is nothing material in the life beyond. We cannot send on in advance or carry with us our gold. The only thing we can take across the frontier of death is ourselves, our character. To relate the present life to that which is to come is our business. It makes us worthier beings upon the earth plane.

A second practical result upon life is that the idea of heaven raises our estimate of human values. "See that ye stumble not one of the least of these little ones, I say unto you their angels do always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven." It is a mysterious world but it is severely practical. We are to treat people here below the more tenderly and humanly because of their relationships in the world beyond. A third thing is that Jesus connected heaven with the idea of a perfect social order upon earth. "Thy will be done upon earth as it is done in heaven." In that higher life spirits obey a perfect order. Earth must take its pattern not from below but around, but from above. In our Lord's own personal life that same practical note is sounded: "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." So that with Jesus "heaven" was no hypothesis; it is the higher sphere which is to be a model for our own. This idea possessed the minds of the early Christians. Heaven for them was the sphere from which the living Saviour directed and inspired his church. The power flowing from him redeems, energizes and directs all human spirits that are harmonious with him. They believed in a real presence of Christ. Heaven, to them, was not a distant star but a homely realm quite close to them. The modern church will have to believe in heaven more heartily than it does, in the reality of that spirit world and especially in the near presence of Christ, not as poetry but as power. Heaven, also, for the early church stood for these divine principles by which human society should be governed. "Our citizenship," says St. Paul, "is in heaven." "We are a colony of heaven" (as Moffatt renders it) (Phil. 3:20). As Philippi was a Roman colony the life of which was governed by Rome, so the world is a colony of heaven and its prosperity lies in the adoption of the principles which operate in the higher sphere. We express this thought in our daily prayer: "Thy kingdom come." The Bible closes with a survey of the new social order under the emblem of city life perfectly organized, every evil element being consumed, and God dwelling among men. All falsehood is utterly abolished and truth is completely enthroned. This new social order is not an evolution from below but an invasion from above. The city of God "comes down from heaven." The superior order governs the inferior order. It is to be that the world must eventually come or be ruined by war and an ungodly civilization. These practical effects produced by the contemplation of the heavenly order should once for all, dispose of the common sneer that "reflection upon heaven is a waste of time." Everywhere the New Testament regards heaven as influencing earth life for the building of the kingdom of God among men.

Where Is Heaven?

The question where is heaven troubles many. Time was when "freethinkers" sharpened their wit upon this question. They spoke learnedly of what the telescope reveals and declared that never had heaven swum within the range of vision. Speech of this kind is entirely irrelevant. The spirit world does not come within the range of the telescope. Spiritual forces are not discoverable by material instruments. All the great spiritual forces are invisible.

to mortal eyes. Material instruments can trace only material things. Thought, love, honor, truth are mighty spiritual forces, but they cannot be visualized. A world of spiritual beings may, while interpenetrating our own denser world, be quite beyond the cognizance of its dense inhabitants and yet be far more real in itself than is the denser world. The ether, that vast ocean in which we are bathed, and which penetrates even mountains, passing easily through them, gives no direct report of itself to our senses, yet without it we could not exist. We know it through its action, but itself we do not know. And so it is with the spirit world. The mass of men are not aware of its existence. They might be were they willing to be still and to fulfil the conditions for obtaining contact with it. There are numerous cases on record of dying people suddenly waking up to greet the friends long since gone over who, apparently, return at the supreme moment to welcome the new emigrants. Mr. D. L. Moody in his last hours had such an experience. It is experience alone that convinces finally. Why then do men refuse to fulfil the conditions in which experience comes to birth?

Physical science can give us no precise information concerning the reality of that spiritual world, yet it has done not a little to clear the way to belief in it. The thesis set out fifty years ago by Professors Balfour Stewart and F. A. Tait, in the "Unseen Universe" that the material universe we behold by us is a temporary manifestation of an invisible spiritual universe into which it will eventually be reabsorbed, is now accepted by many as likely to be scientifically true. But this belief carries with it certain nearer consequences for ourselves. For what is true of the macrocosm is true also of the microcosm. We, who are little human worlds, have proceeded from an invisible universe. Here, upon earth, we are incarnate beings during the short span called life. When the body has finished its work here below it changes its form, being resolved by chemistry into its component parts. It disappears as a body. The "whole" from which it came calls it back again, while the invisible self, always belonging to the spirit world, passes into its true home. In the light of modern scientific thought that the basis of all matter is electrical or spiritual, it is no longer possible for educated men to scoff at the idea of a spiritual world in which human beings live under super-mundane conditions. We may not be able to conceive what that world is like, but we cannot in the name of science deny its reality. That world is represented everywhere in the Bible as being quite close to us. The two men on the Mount of Transfiguration did not descend from the stars. Stephen, lying on the streets of Jerusalem, all bloody with mortal wounds cried, "I see heaven open and Jesus Christ." What he saw millions since his day have seen. The experience is too common to be seriously denied. Our Lord himself taught the nearness of heaven: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Elsewhere we read of the "cloud of witnesses" watching us as we run our race. Heaven then is the name for that great spiritual world, on its brighter side which is, not far away in space, but close to us.

When we inquire into the conditions of its life we have no help to us in any imaginative way. The Bible makes no dogmatic pronouncement upon the matter. It points out the heavenly life by means of imagery. The throne, the crown and the harp stand for spiritual ideas and not as a photograph. We may be sure that on the other side we shall still remain human, but our humanity will be completer than it is while we are enveloped in flesh and handicapped with an animal inheritance. The Bible points itself to two main ideas about the heavenly life. It represents heaven as embracing a complete social and personal life. It is the "kingdom of the Father." A kingdom stands for order and a corporate life. Heaven is that in perfection. It is an empire under divine Fatherhood. In this it stands in contrast with the empires of this world, which consist of heterogeneous elements kept together by police and soldiery. They are artificially established and artificially maintained. The heavenly kingdom possesses a real solidarity which is not artificial but affectionate. Its people work, not against each other but for each other because all are loyal to the Father who is the central bond of all. With the idea of a kingdom is combined that of a home . . . heaven is "the Father's house." A home and a kingdom stand at the two extremes of the social order. The kingdom is the grand whole; the home is the unit. The two ideas are necessary to complete a life which unites individual liberty with corporate action. In these the dream of mankind is at last realized. Our Lord reveals a state which morally unites the kingdom and the home; the social and the personal fused in perfect love.

Beyond this general representation of heaven, our Lord reveals certain principles which govern its life. For example, all conventional relationships disappear. "In the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage." Spiritual affinities alone will bind persons together. The human ties which unite us upon earth are often accidental and conventional. Yonder they are all real, hence indissoluble. Further, there is a genuine human life in heaven. "The Son of Man" has gone thither in his perfect humanity. Around him will be gathered his brethren. Human here, we shall be human there; personal here, personal there; responsible here, responsible there; moral here, moral there. This involves progress. Heaven, as earth, is still a school where we advance. The goal of our life is expressed by St. Paul "till we all come to a full grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13). God's work goes on in the soul after death: "He who hath begun a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ." Thus there can be no dead level in the heavenly life. "Heaven is not a vast circus where each one remains fixed to his place, hypnotized by the contemplation of the divine beauty" (R. P. Monsatré). There will be progress in knowledge: "Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known" (1 Cor. 13:12)—progress in love, in science, in holiness. There will be plenty of occupation in that life: "His servants shall serve him." Every gift of God to every personality will at length attain its fulfillment. We go "from glory to glory."

Completion of Human Life in God

This, then, is the New Testament account of heaven. It is infinitely more exalted than the common conceptions popularized in jingling rhymes, and it harmonizes with the entire scheme of things. It offers a genuine completion of human life in God. These principles make clear to us the kind of preparation that is necessary for that life. Here, traditional religion, both Catholic and Protestant, has often been at fault. Entrance upon the heavenly life has been wholly divorced by many from any spiritual preparation for it. A ghastly charlatanism is asked for, and performed, by many in the name of Christ. One who has lived an evil life for many years sends at the very last for a clergyman to perform the hollow miracle of obliterating the past and preparing him for heaven by means of prayer or sacrament. And it is all futile. We cannot pass in a moment from raucous speech to finished singing, nor from physical corruption to perfect health. Nor can we by any trick pass from a life of sin to perfection in holiness. Our "citizenship" is in heaven or hell

now. Every man now gravitates towards or away from God. In the beyond that same gravitation continues, quite uninterrupted by death. Heaven must be first within us before we can be in it. At death we pass into the sphere for which we are spiritually fitted, and no magical acts can reverse the operation of this law. The faith that saves us is not a momentary exercise of belief in something done; it is the perfect surrender of the human spirit to the Lord of life—the Saviour of the world. Those who are or with him here below go at death to be “with him,” because, and only because, their spirits are harmonized with his. For them this is heaven.

A Baptist Three Hundred Years Ago

It is not a bad thing occasionally to recall the lives of unsung martyrs.

BY JOHN CROSBY

THACKERAY in one of his books says that he would rather have history familiar than heroic. If we want to get at the interior spirit of any age, to know the mind of any period we must go to the records of the every-day life of the people. The seventeenth century, in which the subject of this memoir lived, was a period of reconstruction and spiritual upheaval unexampled in the history of the Anglo Saxon races. It knew the death pangs of an autocratic monarchy, the last convulsive writhings of ecclesiastical tyranny and saw the dawn of civil and religious liberty rise in a red cloud of intolerance and persecution to a glorious noon-day of untrammelled freedom. Between Archbishop Laud and Roger Williams there is a great gulf fixed and yet in those few years the spirit of England and her American colonies broke the chains which an erastic, servile and persecuting church would have riveted upon her neck, and made possible the emancipation of the New World and the wording and signing of our glorious constitution, the greatest charter of religious freedom that the world had ever seen.

The Second Reformation

The struggle lives for us not only in the bald facts as related in the historical textbooks, in the sonorous English of Milton and in the philosophical and theological works of the period but, as recent historical research has shown, in a mass of material which will, when codified, edited and published, throw a flood of light upon the psychology, lives, trials and persecutions of the common every-day men of the street whose upheaval made the new era an accomplished fact and not a utopian dream. The records of the courts, the registers of the parish churches, the tax rolls, the discovery of contemporary correspondence, diaries, are daily throwing a flood of light upon the inner life of the people and showing us that this second and greater English reformation was a movement having its origin in the heart of the common people and not in the schemes of statesmen or the brains of liberal ecclesiastics.

Benjamin Foster, the subject of our memoir, was born in the town of Maidstone, in the county of Kent, England, July 17, 1630, two years after his fellow sufferer, John Bunyan. Unlike the inspired tinker of Bedford, Foster's family appears to have been one of eminent respectability. His father was a corn merchant and farmer of good but not noble family, and appears in the records as having held responsible positions both in town and church. He was three times church warden, once mayor and an alderman and common council man of the borough. His mother, curiously enough, was a member of an old Catholic family, the Cliffords of Hythe, but seems to have adopted her husband's religion on marriage. Benjamin was christened at the parish church at the mature age of three days. The accounts of his christening feast have been preserved. His proud father kept open house for twenty days and appears to have supplied enough strong drink to have incapacitated the inhabitants for the next week. In 1636, being then eight years old, Benjamin was pupil at the grammar school, where he remained until the age of sixteen. He seems to have been somewhat of a scholar as we hear of his delivering an oration in Latin hexameters on the occasion of a royal visit in 1642. He was nominated for a sizarship at St. John's college, Cambridge, but never joined, preferring apparently to be bound apprentice to a certain John Nesbitt, a scrivener, of Aldersgate street, London, probably the father of Rev. John Nesbitt, the nonconformist Baptist preacher, referred to as Mr. Nisby in the Spectator (No. 317). Be that as it may, he certainly frequented various independent meeting houses in the city of London and figures as a member of a church meeting in Leather lane, under the guidance of a pastor named John Spillsbury, which, according to Crosby in his “History of the English Baptists,” became an independent Baptist church on Sept. 13, 1648. There can be no doubt of his strong Baptist principles. In 1648, being then of the mature age of eighteen years, he was arraigned at Maidstone for denouncing infidelity, expounding the Scriptures without a license and inciting to riot. He appears to have been set in the pillory for the space of three hours, fined fifty marks and imprisoned for an indefinite period. In the same year, having been released, he proceeded to Leyden university where he devoted himself to the study of the Scriptures and the promulgation of Baptist views, especially on immersion. This attitude not appealing to the faculty of the university, he was directed to cease from public propaganda and finally found himself an inmate of the university prison, being finally expelled in the following year.

Troubles of a Baptist Pioneer

In 1650 he turns up in the Papal States and was expelled from the country for insulting a religious procession during the feast of Corpus Christi. The penalty would probably have been more severe had not Cromwell and the Papal States been sharing a mutual policy of opposition to Spain. Returning to England, he married Elizabeth Kiffin and settled down in the city of London as a scrivener, being apparently in very comfortable circumstances. At the restoration, with the passing of the Act of Uniformity, his troubles began and we have in his diary and a series of letters which have fortunately been preserved an instructive picture of the troubles of a Baptist pioneer in the days of the Merry King.

The whole diary is manifestly too long to be given here. The following extracts are of interest as showing the every-day life of a Restoration nonconformist. “Feb. 2nd, 1660. Heard this day that Mr. Laurer was cast into the common gaol at Maidstone for refusing of the Sacrament. Mary Auden having di-in church bed was buried by night in a common field, her husband, John, having denied Mr. Simpson to baptize the child. He being apprehended lies in the Common clink where those who go to give him consolation are much browbeaten.

"March 8th. Paid 20 pounds fine to the Court for noncompliance thus making three hundred pounds in sum total for not bowing our heads to Baal.

"May 16th. One Thomas Withers, said to be an informer found dead in St. Mary Axe. Pray God that the faithful be not accused thereof. This day to Newgate where great numbers of the brethren lay in chains. Brothers Lynch and Powell like to die of putrid fever. Mem. To jailer for easement of Brother Lydick. 5 s.

"June 2nd. This day walked in St. Pauls heard Dean Mansell (?) preach against the brethren. Breathing forth abuse and scurrility. The Lord reward them according to their works.

"June 9th. Rode to Greenwich there to meeting of the remnant. Brother Desmond testifying. The men of the Lord Justice being sent against us, by the mercy of God we scattered none being overtaken.

"Aug. 2nd. This day died my father being of the age of full three score years and ten. God be thanked that he saw the way to free salvation but was spared the tribulations of the Saints."

After this he seems to have disposed of his London business and entered upon his father's estate. He was fined for non-attendance at church by the Kent justices no less than sixteen times and, as an evidence of his love for religious freedom, was indicted at the quarter sessions for harboring a mass priest, being acquitted, however, on account of his known Protestantism.

A Vigorous Writer

About this time he began to figure as an author. His tract comparing the Anglican church to Aholah and Ahiolah is a vigorous piece of work but is in such exceedingly plain English that it cannot be quoted here. "The lament of the Persecuted Saints commonly called Anabaptists" published in 1663 and "The groans of the Afflicted Church of Christ commonly called Anabaptists now meeting in Wych Lane, Near the towne of Maidstone" are in terse and vigorous English and breathe a determination to defy the oppression of church and state that brought down upon his head swift and inevitable punishment.

His trial took place before the Lord Chief Justice in London on June, 1664, and was a travesty of justice. The sentence which was carried out in its entirety was as follows: "Benjamin Foster, you are here convicted for writing, causing to be printed and publishing a most damnable, seditious and schismatical book against the religion of our Lorde the King, the church of this Realm of England as by law established, and to the scandal of all loyal christian people in this realm for which the court doth award; That you shall be committed to jail for the space of one month, without mainprize or bail, and on the next two market days to stand upon the pillory at Maidstone, in the open square for the space of two hours from twelve o'clock until two, with a board over your head inscribed 'For the publishing of a malicious and blasphemous book against the religion of this Realm as by Law established and here your book shall be burnt before your eyes by the common hangman, to the disgrace of your false and damnable doctrine. And you shall forfeit to His Majesty the sum of fifty pounds, and shall remain in jail until surety shall be found for you to appear at the next Quarter Sessions, there to openly renounce your most damnable teaching and doctrine."

The result of this prosecution was that he was utterly ruined both in purse and reputation. He seems to have led the life of an itinerant preacher for the next few years, although never called to the regular ministry. He was imprisoned at Halifax, Bedford, Oxford and Leeds. At the last place being whipped as a "confirmed rogue and vagabond," his offence being that he preached in the churchyard. From the church account of the Leather Hill conventicle, we find he was employed at ten shillings a week as species of colporteur distributing tracts and prescribed literature to the Faithful. We catch a glimpse of him in Gloster disguised as a traveling barber and once as a fugitive from justice taking refuge with a persecuted Roman Catholic family at Wroxton near Banbury.

As was to be expected, despairing of justice or any prospect of a modification of the persecution under either Charles the Second or his brother James, a number of the Baptists in common with other Protestant nonconformists joined the attempted revolution under the Duke of Monmouth. Foster seems to have been at Taunton as chaplain or exhorter to the Kentish contingent of the rebel army and to have been captured while fleeing from the fiasco at Sedgemoor. He figures in the general indictment at the "Bloody Assizes" before Judge Jefferies and was sentenced to be hung, drawn and quartered, according to the cheerful fashion of the time. The batch of criminals was purchased by a Bristol speculator named Peter Quale and sent into slavery on the American plantations according to the custom of the period.

While awaiting embarkation the irrespressible Benjamin was soundly flogged for holding meetings in the common jail and put into irons for heading a meeting of protest to the governor of the prison. On arrival in this country he is shown as sold to a John Carroll of Maryland, and from then until eighteen months afterwards the history is lost. In some unexplained way he turns up in Boston in 1687, apparently engaging in business and doing well. There is a letter to a friend in London directing that ten pounds be sent to a Mr. Charles Clifford of Maryland, so it might be possible that he came across a relation of his mother in Maryland who helped him to escape. With the Declaration of Indulgence he returned to England and settled down to the ordinary life of a London citizen. He died on the tenth day of January, 1710, at the ripe age of eighty years and was buried in the churchyard of the Collegiate church at Maidstone. In his will he left his property to the Rev. Benjamin Kiffin, his nephew by marriage and pastor of the Baptist church at Lewes in the county of Sussex.

Baptists Are Debtors

It was to men like Benjamin Foster that we Baptists owe our position as a free church in a Christian commonwealth. They were whipped, imprisoned, enslaved and suffered even unto death that we might receive the priceless heritage of individual liberty in Christ, the glory of a Baptist church.

When brethren are despondent about the future, worrying about the present, talking of giving up the fight and seeking other affiliations, I often regret that we live in days that have grown soft, when the path is too easy. The renewal of persecution would probably revive the spirit of the church, and, though God forbid that the old days should come again, it is not a bad thing occasionally to recall the lives of unsung martyrs and sufferers who fought for freedom 300 years ago.

Church Music

The first of several articles on this important phase of worship.

BY FREDERICK MAXSON

IT IS assumed that the minister is the spiritual director of the church, and therefore vitally interested in the character, quality and fitness of the words that are sung by the choir and congregation, as well as the music. To this end the weekly conference of the minister and choir director is of the greatest importance; so that not only the music for the coming Sunday may be discussed in detail, but also plans made far enough ahead for the director to select and rehearse appropriate choir music, so that nothing is left to chance.

This planning naturally implies that the minister must be constantly looking ahead for his subjects, from two weeks to a month in advance. It is even well for him to plan tentatively in advance for several months, so that the choir may have ample time to prepare difficult music and get it well in hand. When a service goes smoothly and harmoniously, it is inevitably the result of such careful planning and execution.

Some degree of musical education is indispensable, so that in his conference the minister will not expect the carrying out of impractical ideas, musically. Some of the denominations are now bringing the need of musical education of the clergy into more prominence, and giving more opportunity to obtain a practical knowledge of music, which should include both vocal and instrumental, to a certain extent.

The more the minister actually knows about music, the more harmoniously can he and the director work together. One who is frankly unmusical would do well to rely on the musical knowledge and judgment of the organist and director.

There was once a minister of this class who came to his organist with great enthusiasm, with the suggestion that when the musical service from Handel's "Messiah" should be given in that church, the congregation should all sing the "Hallelujah Chorus." To him, it seemed to offer an opportunity for a big and inspiring rendition of this noted chorus. To the organist, who knew the necessity of much careful rehearsal by any body of singers who would expect to sing it effectively, it was an impossibility. Result, the minister was peeved at what he considered insubordination, or at most, lack of cooperation. This condition of affairs could not have occurred had he had the proper musical equipment and practical judgment. Organists as a class, are glad to work out practical musical suggestions.

The Congregation

A congregation should not be content to be sung to by a choir, however fine, but must also be allowed the opportunity to participate heartily in the various parts of the service assigned to them, musical and otherwise. These should include not only the singing of hymns, doxology, Gloria and familiar chants; but also participation in certain responsive singing, even in non-liturgical services, if they are willing to devote time to rehearsing the music properly at a convenient time and place, until it is familiar.

If the congregation could individually sing the parts suited to their voices in the music of the service, it would add materially to the general effect; as contrasted with the prevailing custom of all singing the melody only. Unfortunately, as a class, our people are not trained to sing readily from note at sight. I remember the inspiring effect of some congregational singing in a church in London some years ago, where in my immediate vicinity the vocal parts could be heard distinctly sung with much vigor. In some English churches the congregation rehearses and sings the anthem.

Some of our American hymnals provide for special services consisting of responsive readings, prayers and appropriate musical responses, which would be very effective with a congregation of note readers. Service of this sort, as well as new hymn tunes and chants could be rehearsed and learned however, under proper conditions.

A congregation should be alert individually from the very start of the service, prepared to take part promptly reverently and heartily in every part of the service assigned to them. This includes the prompt finding of places in the hymnal, careful listening to the organ and choir for leadership, and equal promptness in rising and sitting down together.

A Theory—Not a Fact

BY H. L. STETSON

ONE of the reasons, probably the main one, why, in many cases, there is so much opposition to evolution is the dogmatic manner of its presentation. By many teachers it is taught as a fact, a demonstrated law, when in reality it is still only a theory. Stewart Young, professor of physical chemistry, at Leland Stanford University, says that "popular science teachers of evolution are in danger of becoming as dogmatic as priests of the Middle Ages" by declaring evolution is a fact or a law. He says: "Unless there is a change in the attitude of instructors in popular science, scientists will become laughing stock for the more educated in the years to come. . . . Doubtless we shall cease believing in the scientific when they allow themselves to lose sight of the fact that nothing can ever be an absolutely proved fact. . . . The original theory of evolution provided a basis upon which scientists and men of learning could work in the future. . . . All they do is to lay down a series of rules which will work very well for practical purposes, but which may be disproved at any time. Evolution should be taught as this and nothing more—as a theory which seems to be true, but which may be upset with new developments. To the same effect is the recent declaration of another scientist who stands in the front ranks as a very great research man, when addressing a convention of chemists."

Evolution explains many things, but it does not yet explain everything. The attempt, so often made to force it upon everybody as a law as well established as the law of gravitation is unscientific and rightly meets with more or less opposition. If all teachers of evolution and anti-evolutionists would treat the doctrine as theory and not as a fact most of the hostility now existing between them would disappear. Theories are opinions which need to be tested to the utmost; otherwise we would never have some of the best things we now possess. Let the testing go on and let both pros and cons remember that they are dealing with a theory and not with a fact.

True greatness does not undervalue small things. It dares to stoop to conquer. It is a sign of a small man who is afraid to lose himself in a small task lest man should think him unfit for the larger task. There is no small task that may not be done sublimely.—The Expositor.

The Devotional Life

Bound in the Bundle of Life

The soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with Jehovah thy God.—I. Samuel 15:29

BY DAVID E. ADAMS

IF YOU would read one of the most fascinating short stories in all literature, turn to the twenty-fifth chapter of the First Book of Samuel.

You will find there a beautiful piece of literary work—a clear-cut little plot admirably narrated, in a setting described with masterly simplicity. It is a story of the eternal triangle—two men and a woman—incomparably told, the story of Nabal and Abigail and David. Seeking to smooth over the consequences of rude and churlish behavior on her husband's part, and to placate a man thoroughly angered and bent on destroying her husband, a tactful woman says to him: "The soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with Jehovah thy God."

A pregnant phrase, which has endured through the ages in the memory of man, because in it there lies implicit a whole philosophy.

The Universal Experience

Any man who is conscious of having a soul—a something within him greater and deeper than his mere animal instincts and desires—must be conscious at the same time of a mysterious bond which binds him to the unknown past whence he came and to the unseen future whither he goes: a bond which draws him in some dimly comprehended way into fellowship with others whose feet are likewise treading that same pathway, and which opens to him somehow a sense of relationship, dim and uncertain, but nevertheless real, to the great, loving, creative Father Spirit of whom we think as standing within the shadow, keeping watch above his own. Just in so far as he has a soul, man is bound in the bundle of life with other souls, partakers together of a universal experience, voyagers hailing from

"that immortal sea Which brought us hither," and bound together for that eternal sunset where, in the light of the evening star, every man must answer the one clear call as the flood bears him out across the bar to meet his pilot.

"Bound in the bundle of life—with God"—that phrase expresses the deep awareness of the Christian man of his oneness with the fundamental common experience of humanity.

As members of families we realize it, for within the experience of the smallest family circle we see epitomized the profound experiences of the race. We are all born into the world: we all live in our day and generation as we may: we must all die.

Those are the ultimate verities of human existence.

Yet within the narrow compass of one home in a single generation the universal cycle is exemplified. There is the beginning of life: there is the living of life: there is the cessation of life—what we call death. We are poignantly reminded of this cycle as the family festivals, the anniversaries, come around. There are the birthdays, with their numbering of the time that is past—and of that which remains. There is Thanksgiving, with its glad homecomings—and its empty places. There is Easter—when unseen fingers touch the muted strings of faith once more into celestial music. There is Christmas—the birthday of the Christ—when the song of the herald angels once more thrills our hearts, reminding us that we are bound in the bundle of life not only with men, but with God.

And there is the New Year—marking the passage of another stage in the earthly journey, and touched for us with the deep significance of the inexorable passage of our years—good or evil as we may choose to make them. "Bound in the bundle of life!"

But being bound in the bundle of life implies sharing the sorrow and sufferings of life.

The possession of the highest joys inevitably involves the deepest sorrows. We are all familiar with that fact. The deeper your affection for a beloved friend, the keener your sorrow at the inevitable parting. The greater your love for a father or mother, the deeper your grief when they pass from your sight. The more you sympathize with your companions on the journey of life, the more do you enter into their pain and their sorrow and their suffering, as well as into their joy and their triumph.

The Test

And the final test of whether the soul of a man is bound in the bundle of life is twofold—is he, like Jesus, touched with the feeling of the infirmities of his fellow-voyagers—does he enter into their deep experiences because he cares for them so much that he just can't help it: and does he so interpret the experiences of pain and of evil which he shares that by this darker element in life he is drawn nearer to God, and not driven away from him?

That is to be bound in the bundle of life not only with men, but with God: to feel oneself a part of a beautiful and reasonable plan, in which even suffering has its final explanation, a plan that makes a place for every human soul who turns his face for a single moment upward—

"Since the first man stood God-conquered
With his face to heaven upturned."

The Chimney Corner

The Ox-Cart of Lydia Rogers

IT WAS seventy-five or eighty years ago. That town of Manchester was then, as it is now, just plain farming country and the people just plain country folks. David Rogers was a widower; middle-aged; a large, bearded, bearish-looking man. Any gentleness that belonged to his nature had remained decidedly latent. It was the common opinion that his first wife had worked herself to death—without any opposition on his part.

There was a flock of children, of the old-fashioned size—upwards of a dozen, I believe—who were utterly unkempt and without “bringing up.” Rogers was shiftless, and therefore poverty-stricken; his house a tumble-down place, and his farm the poorest in the county.

Lydia Morton was about half his age. She was a little woman, mild in her ways, sweet, quiet, refined, and if not pretty, at any rate good-looking, especially in the better sense that she looked good.

The gossip of the countryside fairly had its breath taken away by the announcement of their marriage. Her father and mother were so angry that they would not speak to her for years. It isn't at all likely that she married David because she saw an opportunity thus to make her life a useful one. In that case she certainly would have picked out a more promising “opportunity.” It was probably mere fancy, or impulse, on the part of both. In other words, it was a match that was made in heaven.

Marriage can and does make of the twain one; but which one is it going to be? This is what we always ask ourselves when we see our friends and acquaintances joined in holy wedlock, and this is what people began to wonder in the case of the newly married David and Lydia.

Lydia had always been an inveterate churchgoer. As a little girl of eleven or twelve she would pray and speak in prayer-meeting. Her home had been a long two miles from the church, over bad country roads, but she had rarely missed any of its services. Now when she married David Rogers there was no question in the minds of the people about her getting him to go to church; that was unthinkable; but, would she let him and his irreligiousness break into her faithful practice of the Christian life?

David Rogers had never been seen inside a meeting-house, with just two exceptions—and they were both funerals! The whole Rogers tribe were notoriously “down on churches,” as they say in the country. David was not a “drinking man,” and was not dishonest; but that exhausts the catalog of his virtues.

*“The common problem, yours, mine, every one's,
Is—not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be—but, finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means.”*

—ROBERT BROWNING.

He worked more on Sunday than on week-days; he was profane; he was in general what folks out our way call “ungodly.”

This is what happened.

In the country the start for church is made in liberal good season. Young and old are glad of the half-hour before service as an opportunity to visit, and arrange various sacred and worldly matters in which they are mutually interested.

The Sunday morning following Lydia Morton's marriage to David Rogers, long before the last bell sounded, of all vehicles in the world! Rogers' old ox-cart came slowly along the dusty road and up to the church—it was a warm day late in June—and in it was the man himself, with Lydia and the children!

That very Sunday David hired a pew. I could point it out in the old church. It was filled by the Rogers family every time the church was open, for years, and the husband and father was himself not often absent. At a later time in a revival season he joined the church. He was made a deacon and a trustee. His grandchildren and great-grandchildren are today faithful-workers in that and other churches. In short, the family name is synonymous out there in Manchester with unswerving loyalty to Christ and the things of Christianity.

How did Lydia Rogers accomplish this miracle? One of the daughters told my mother all about it, years afterwards.

Lydia broached the matter of going to church to her new husband Friday morning. The very suggestion amused him. She did not cry, or get mad, or tease, and in especial she did not give up; she just smiled, though reproachfully.

That afternoon she walked to the village, four miles, and bought gingham for new sunbonnets for the girls. She sat up half the night to make them. The next day she washed and ironed their dresses and mended the boys' clothes. David looked on, but said nothing. Determination succeeds—almost always.

Sunday morning was a critical time in the life of that Rogers family, from a religious point of view; from many points of view. Lydia understood well enough that if she could not take her husband to church with her that Sunday, the chances were she never would.

After breakfast David inquired whether they calculated to walk to town to meeting. Her answer was, “No, we're going to ride.”

“But with whose horses?” for he had no team.

“Yes.”

“You wouldn't go like that?”

“You will.”

“I won't.”

Remember that she said this smiling and gently, but with a pronounced cent of feminine decision. There is old saying to the effect that if a woman makes up her mind to do a thing, usually does it. Does she? That depends; depends upon whether she backs up her will and word with scolding, fulness, and nagging, or with a sweet and gentle patience and love. So the ox-cart of Lydia Rogers became verbal and traditional in our town.

The woman had many another battle to fight out before she subdued the rough character of her husband and gained the mastery of that home. For her stepsons she received at first no insult and abuse; she answered them never a harsh word, and loaded them with kindnesses. After a couple of years they literally worshiped her.

The home had been wretchedly kept and untidy; day and night, unaided, she slaved to make and keep it clean and pleasant. After a while neatness became contagious; the old began to be ashamed of their sloveness; her bare example gained that power. Before she died the Rogers home called all others of the neighborhood the matter of good housekeeping. She made the children love books and study. As they grew older some of them were sent away to higher schools, two of them to college. Her husband was by nature lazy, and no one will ever know what it cost her, of infinite pains, trial, prayer, to transform him into a good industrious farmer. Years after Rogers' decease I used to tramp and hunt that farm, and on every hand were evidences of his careful and wise husbandry.

My mother told me how Lydia Rogers looked when she was an old woman. She was old before her time, of course; she had white hair, hard, bony hands, and a wasted figure. You cannot accordin' to Jesus' teaching both lose and save your life. To the last, however, Lydia retained her smile and cheer and love; their inspiration—her Christian faith. BOYS and Girls

A Miss Is as Good as a Mile

ONCE upon a time there were ten little girls and nine little boys who held their noses in the air. And if there had been ten little boys, no doubt the tenth boy's nose would have been poked upward snobbishly too. All because Beth and Seth had joined their class. For Beth and Seth, you must understand, had black faces; and for some odd reason his made nineteen white noses rear off in self-pride; as if white noses were superior—somehow or other!—to black noses; as if the Lord God did not like black noses, in spite of having made so many millions upon millions of them.

Well, Miss Stanhope took one look at those nineteen white noses, and decided to cure them with shelf paper and paste and advertisements. It was the greatest fun the class ever had, and quite the most unusual event of the year, for when they came into the room that day there was the wide white shelf paper stretched across the room; and there was Miss Stanhope smiling; and there was Beth (with the paste pot) and Beth (with a box of pictures) all ready to begin.

"This is to be a true story about the road to Happiness leading to a Palace of Delight," said Miss Stanhope, "but I think the real title might be 'A Miss Is as Good as a Mile,' for at any point along the road to happiness Janie could so easily have missed the way. Her real name was Janie Barrett. Now Seth and Beth, please paste in place the first milestone—"

"Miss-fortune smiled on Janie!" they pasted on the shelf paper, while Miss Stanhope told how Janie had been desperately poor, her mother a widow, with not a cent to spare to buy her anything new. And then, like a fairy godmother, along came a lady from the North, a white lady, with a little white girl. She asked Janie to come to live with her and be a playmate for her daughter. She did every thing for Janie: "Seth and Beth, please paste in place pictures of the hats, the dresses, the lovely hair ribbons she gave Janie. You can guess what fun this all meant for Janie. But life went on until both little girls grew older, and the white woman said one day: 'Oh, I've wasted your life!' You see, she was afraid Janie would keep right on wanting such things, and yet when she offered to adopt Janie both Janie and her widowed mother decided not to accept. Next, please paste in place the topic—'Miss-fit? Not a bit!'"

Miss Stanhope now went on to tell how Janie heard of Hampton Institute, a place where poor colored girls and boys could earn their way through, and she decided that was the place for her! You might have supposed she would feel a bit too grand, after all her nice clothes. But not a bit of it! "Just paste on my shelf paper, Seth and Beth, the pictures of broom, pail and mop, to show how gladly Janie learned to do well the necessary housekeeping tasks which are taught at Hampton. Then one day she read a book (paste on the book, please!) called 'All Sorts and Conditions of Men,' and from reading this book she decided to choose the most backwoods school in all Georgia as the place where she would go to teach after she graduated! Next, paste on the label—'Miss-cellaneous; or Pleasures; Palaces; Home, Sweet Home!'"

"For Janie married; she had always loved pretty things and now she had a chance to have them, so please paste in place the picture of her little home, sweet home, also the pictures of the silver spoons, knives and forks which she had, and the attractive curtains. She called it her 'Palace of Delight.' But instead of being selfish about this gem of a little home, she shared it with all her colored neighbors, so that they could have the fun of it too. The next label to go in place is 'Miss-givings!'"

"Underneath that label paste the picture of a bathroom, for I shall have to tell you how Janie had always longed to have a bathroom in her home, moreover she had saved and saved and saved until there was plenty of money for a bathroom. Oh yes, plenty! But Janie began having misgivings: was it fair to spend all that money on a bathroom just for herself? Wouldn't it be better to do something all the neighbors could enjoy? They didn't have as nice a home as hers, so wouldn't it be very fair and friendly to build them a community room on her house, a special room for all of them to enjoy? It was a beautiful thought, and I leave it to you boys and girls to decide whether her neighbors didn't appreciate Janie Barrett! Next label is to be 'Miss-judged.'"

"For Janie's next big, hard, stiff question was, 'Who needed happiness most?' And the answer was—negro girls! Janie had heard some things which made her see that down in Virginia a group of misunderstood negro girls needed a home and a school and a good, big slice of love. So Janie decided to go down there to help them. This meant that Janie must give up her Palace of Delight! She must give up her precious silver forks, her dear new friends; all to be with unpopular and unwanted and misunderstood girls.

"Janie Barrett was a worth-while negro girl. She was a worth-while negro young woman. She was a worth-while negro founder of the Industrial Home School for Girls at Peake, Va. And Janie Barrett is making other Janie Barretts in that school. Beth and Seth, did you ever see Mrs. Janie Barrett?"

"Oh yes, Miss Stanhope," said the twins. "Oh yes, indeed, we've seen Mrs. Janie Barrett."

And that is how it came to pass in that school for nineteen pairs of eyes and nineteen pairs of hands to become kinder, friendlier, gentler. All because Janie Barrett had once done it! "A miss is as good as a mile," and Janie had never once missed—never!

They even made a game of it, for recreation hour. It was a relay race, the eleven girls on one side, the ten boys on the other. There were two hats, one for each team, labeled "Janie's hat." There were two brooms, labeled "Janie's broom, at Hampton." There were two spoons, labeled "Janie's spoon." There were two cakes of soap, labeled, "From Janie's bathroom." There were two notebooks, labeled "Janie's Industrial Home School, at Peake, Va."

At a given signal one member from each team put on the hat, took it off and passed it to the next in line, where it was again put on and taken off, etc., on down the line. Meanwhile the first member on each side had taken up the broom, swept with it and passed it on; with the spoons, team members pretended to eat; with the soap, each made believe to wash his or her hands; in the notebooks each member wrote a Bible verse as a lesson in friendliness to all races and all colors. Miss Stanhope had written:

"Of one blood God hath made all men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

The boys and girls themselves had written:

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

"Bear ye one another's burdens."

"This is my commandment unto you that ye love one another, for my sake, even as I have loved you."

You can see that Janie Barrett's life was spreading its usefulness and making nineteen foolish boys and girls become sensible, friendly, normal children.

Dear Madam: :

I have been reading your stories in THE BAPTIST and have been wondering whether or not you have a club for boys and girls, called the "Explorers' Club." If you have I would like to join it. Will you please tell me something about it.

Respectfully yours,

Wendell Burcham,

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topics for May 2

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meetings Helps" will be to the following books: "Modern Discipleship and What It Means" by Woods; "Twelve Tests of Character" by Fosdick; "The Man Nobody Knows" by Barton; "Gates and Keys to Bible Books" by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible" by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church" by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers" by Miller; "God's Dynamite" by Lerrigo. The books may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society. A few others may be added later.

One form which our influence takes is told in the seventh chapter of "Modern Discipleship and What It Means." Beginning on page 103 and continuing on through page 119 you will find a great deal of help with this topic.

In order to show the young people how our lives will influence all those with whom we come in contact, a little chemical "stunt" may be used in meeting. From your druggist you can procure a little phenolphthalein (a quarter's worth is plenty). Baking soda and vinegar you will probably find in your pantry at home.

In meeting add some vinegar to the phenolphthalein, which will immediately turn from a colorless transparent liquid to pink or red. Then take a little of the baking soda and add it to this red mixture. You will find that it is again colorless and transparent. While you are doing this, perhaps you can be explaining about the lesson. You may tell of how we come in contact with people who may not have high ideals, and our lives become affected by theirs. Then tell how, if Christ were present in both lives, they would be spotless.

Or if you prefer first to add the baking soda to the phenolphthalein, you might explain that sometimes we come in contact with people and both lives remain to all outward appearances the same, yet are so harmonious that they become as one.

If you cannot get the phenolphthalein, perhaps you can explain or illustrate the lesson by means of iodine and starch. Into a glass pour a little starch and water (mixed up) and then add a little iodine. The iodine will immediately change the mixture to blue or purple. Then the parallel may be drawn that our lives coming in contact with others always have some effect, which sometimes can never be undone. It is up to us, therefore, to make our contact of real help rather than a hindrance.

Perhaps personal instances from the experience of the leader or of those in the audience can be cited as concrete examples of good or bad influence. Tell of Christ's influence on all those whom he met and who believed on him. Tell of what influence he may have today—if we once meet him and know him.

Gleanings

Hush! They are singing "I Would Be True," the institute hymn. Picture yourself singing this hymn, a part of a large group of young people all ready to "give of themselves in service true." Does it not seem like a real inspiration? If you were a delegate at the institute, you would have been privileged to participate in such a program.

Those who attended the institute of the Central District B. Y. P. U. of Philadelphia can tell about the high lights of the institute. I could never enumerate all that went on there, but I will tell you enough to make you be the first registered delegate to the next conference.

Supper was served at the conference church at six p. m. daily to those delegates who cared to attend. That hour was one well spent. Songs were sung, the faculty was introduced, acquaintances made, and a fine talk was heard. Each talk had a lesson long to be remembered.

At seven o'clock the classes convened. The society presidents were privileged to study the new B. Y. P. U. manual. This class lasted both periods. The other delegates had the choice of two classes—dramatization, or the discussion of methods and problems. Both classes were well attended. The meaning of dramatization was changed for many of us. Its value in teaching biblical truths seems unsurpassed, especially when flavored with vicarious experiences. Solutions to many difficult problems were gleaned from the talks on methods and problems. We hope to practice many of them shortly.

With the bell as the signal, classes ended at 7:45. A recreation period lasted for fifteen minutes. We played many "ice-breakers" under capable leadership. Fun? Of course, we had fun. Everybody played, and played hard. Our leader certainly knew how to keep the ball of fun rolling. After such relaxation we were ready for the next class.

The second study period offered us another choice of classes. A class on the C. L. P., or Christian Life Program, and one on social and recreational work drew the crowds. Judging from the laughter in the class room of the latter, there was a very enjoyable program going on inside. The C. L. P. class room was overflowing with seekers of knowledge, eagerly listening to the many valuable suggestions. No one will ever regret those moments spent in those class rooms.

From the classes we assembled as one group in the main auditorium of the church for the evening devotional services. On Tuesday evening Mrs. Elizabeth Finn, of the American Baptist Publication Society, talked to us and suggested that we be at all times our best selves. Her talk was "just like Mr. Finn."

At the close of the devotional period the speaker of the evening was introduced. On Monday night the message certainly fired us with ambition as Christian young people. On Tuesday night we were challenged to accept the responsibilities of Christian citizenship. We learned of the many responsibilities which are really ours if we would be true Christian citizens. Chief Strong, wolf of the University of Pennsylvania, came to address us on Wednesday evening. Can we ever forget the beautiful thoughts he left with us? We were told how to be friends in the truest sense, the real Indian way. He pleaded that we would not trample on the person who makes a mistake, but rather take him by the hand, and lead him to the trail of success. His text was, "He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone."

On Monday and Tuesday nights a song was sung after the address and the delegates were dismissed with prayer. But the program on Wednesday night was quite different. Between the devotion period and the address of the evening the president of the district presented the silver loving cup to the society having the largest average number of registered delegates in attendance the three nights. Lehigh Avenue and First Italian ran a heated race, but Lehigh won with 33½ and First Italian second with 30.

The climax of the whole program was interwoven into a beautiful service of consecration. It was most impressive. As we all bowed our heads in silent prayer, the presidents of the locals were asked to stand, pledging themselves to loving service, kind and true. The vice presidents were asked to stand next, signifying their willingness to serve with the presidents. And last, the delegates were asked to stand and offer a silent prayer for themselves as they desired to serve Christ throughout their lives. No one faltered, for they had received the inspiration there and were willing to accept those challenges. A beautiful attitude of prayer existed throughout the quiet moments which made us feel that God was very near. The benediction was pronounced upon a group of enthusiastic Baptist young folk who vowed to do their best to further the cause of Christ in their societies, in their community, and in the world. And the institute was over.

Among Ourselves

A British Causerie

BY FREDERIC C. SPURR

A New Hymnal

THE appearance of a new hymnal, especially a new Sunday-school hymnal, may be an impertinence or an event. For many years the majority of Sunday schools in connection with our Free churches in England have used the beautiful and valuable collection of Mr. Carey Bonner, the circulation of which has gone into millions. It will still be used, for its work is by no means done. But place must be found for a newcomer which has just appeared. "School Worship" as it is called; is published jointly by the Congregational Union and the Baptist "Psalms and Hymns Trust." It appeals therefore to a wide constituency. It is a remarkable collection in every way. It is based upon the fundamental fact that life, both natural and Christian, has well-marked stages from childhood to maturity, and it seeks to meet the needs of each stage by appropriate hymns and tunes. The transition is beautifully one. There is not an age which is not provided for. The book is particularly rich in hymns of the kingdom which will appeal powerfully to adolescents. It is a great idea to bring together under one cover hymns which naturally connect the church and the school. They are linked largely by means of tunes which belong to both, and by a class of music which has entered deeply into the heart of more than one people. Scholars singing these tunes will be prepared for the music of the church in after life. A most valuable part of the book consists of a number of orders of worship, with prayers, psalms and responsive devotions. Some of these might with advantage be used in ordinary church services, so comprehensive and popular are they. The idea of worship permeates the entire volume, and in this consists its greatest value. We shall not be surprised if this new book is generally adopted in England when its worth is understood. It may find its way across the Atlantic and serve as a new link between the churches of America and this country, for it gives us in measure, some of the things we have all been seeking. The publication of the new hymnal is an event.

French Protestantism

One of the most interesting weeklies coming into my home is the organ of French Protestantism Le Christianisme. It enables one to understand the tremendous difficulties under which our French brethren labor in pursuing their work. Against gorgeous cathedrals and churches they can only set, in many places, small and bare temples. The French love color and ceremony, and the lack of this is offered them in the Protestant temple. Since the war Catholics have represented their church as, in a way, synonymous with love of country, just as in England certain people represent the state church as a patriotic symbol, and "dissent" as being in some manner unpatriotic. Of course it is ridiculous, but it is a folly which half religious people are often guilty of. That fine writer and Protestant leader, M. E. Doumergue, has been writing in Le Christianisme on the "Attrait Catholique." Inquiry and correspondence have revealed to him some of the reasons why the younger generation is yielding to the attraction of Catholicism, and he asks whether French Protestantism responds to the present needs of the French soul. In no case known to him have persons gone over for reasons of conscience. In every case the reason has been social or aesthetic. Thus a girl belonging to a great and old family, marries a Catholic avowedly for the social status it will retain for her. The father of the girl declares that it is vexatious to be "cut" by society folk simply because one is a Protestant, hence he sacrifices the daughter. A young Protestant officer becomes a Catholic in order to harmon-

To the Executive Committee,
Northern Baptist Convention.

The undersigned member of the law committee of the convention desires to modify his minority report upon the four questions submitted to that committee by the executive committee, insofar as that minority report refers to the fourth of those questions.

Obviously my report was based upon facts assumed therein. If such assumed facts are true, I would adhere to that report. Discussion in the denominational papers and other information that has come to me, causes me to doubt the truth of the assumed facts. If, as is claimed, immersion is not the prerequisite of membership in the Free Baptist churches and that denomination consolidated its missionary enterprises with those of the regular Baptists before the organization of the Northern Baptist Convention, then I am of the opinion that while the answer to the fourth question would still be "No," that answer should be qualified by adding "because it is not within the power of the Northern Baptist Convention to affect vested rights by any action it may take." The adoption of the proposed amendment, however, would be nugatory so far as the Free Baptists are concerned and churches of that denomination, otherwise complying with the requirements of the articles and by-laws of the convention, would be entitled to send delegates to its meetings.

ize his religious and his military conceptions. Another remarks that we live in an age of functionaries, and that the Roman church which is essentially functionary offers the necessary attraction. All this strikes us as exceedingly odd, but it helps us to understand the situation. The only remedy for it is a genuine revival of spiritual religion, under the influence of which conscience and truth will take no heed of the baubles dangled by baptized worldliness.

A few minutes after writing the above a second article by M. Doumergue reached me. In this he offers another reason for the Catholic attraction for certain Protestants in his country. It is contained in a letter written by one of his correspondents and runs thus: "in the general upset of the world after the war, it is undoubtedly true that Catholicism alone has emerged as being the only power which has preserved intact the principles of order and of discipline. In this it stands alone. Protestantism by its divisions has neither method nor discipline. It remains isolated, and those of our brethren who desire to restore civic order are compelled to turn towards Catholic organizations . . . some of our pastors are true Bolsheviks, anti French, and international politicians"—This is quite amazing, and I believe entirely incorrect. It will be news to many that Rome stands for the promotion either of any national unity or of international order. That has not been her history hitherto. The fact that such a view can be held by any Protestant clearly points to the need of a more fundamental teaching as to the real meaning of evangelical religion. It also carries a warning, as M. Doumergue points out, to those pastors who confound the kingdom of God with political propaganda, to stick to their proper business and not to commit their churches to any political party. The warning is salutary for others as well as Frenchmen. Doctor Denney was right when he said that some preachers confound the gospel with social reform. One is involved in the other, certainly, but the two are not the same.

The Breakdown at Geneva

All lovers of peace are profoundly disconcerted at the turn things have taken at Geneva. The triumph of Brazil over the League of Nations seems almost inexplicable. At the very moment when the great nations were about to welcome Germany into the comity of peoples, and so end the strain under which we all have lived for eight years, comes Brazil and offers checkmate. Everybody wants to know what it means, and there is open talk of the hidden hand. The Italian papers of today's date acclaim the result as due to Mussolini, who lately has been talking war, and offering threats to Germany. The London Daily News of this date has an inspired article from a correspondent of whom it speaks with great respect, and who charges the Vatican at Rome with responsibility for the fiasco at Geneva. According to him it is a Jesuit move against Protestant influence in Europe. Rome, he says, wants representation at Geneva, and, failing to obtain it, is determined to wreck the whole movement. In other words it is a new attempt to regain the Temporal Power. This is a grave charge, and it cannot be left unanswered. It is time for the ending of secret diplomacy once for all. The people have the right to know what is going on behind the scenes. Ugly stories are afloat as to bickerings which are unreported in the daily press. The Geneva affair may result in a general demand for "all cards on the table." There must be no more room for sharpers.

General Booth's Memories

General Bramwell Booth has just published a racy volume of echoes and memories which many will be glad to read for the insight it gives into the work of the Salvation Army, and especially for the revelation it offers of the inner life of his father, the founder of the army. I shall not attempt anything like a review of the book, but merely content myself by saying that the leaders of all our churches will be able to learn a good deal from it. General Booth's apology for the Salvation Army attitude towards the sacraments is the weakest part of the volume, and I cannot help feeling that history will have something to say about it. His defense is very weak, as was his father's before him. I will pass on one good story however that will do duty at more than one public meeting. In the early days of the army, when ruffianism was rampant, a woman officer was pelted with eggs. Her tormentors believed the eggs were rotten, but it happened they came from the wrong crate and they were good eggs. The smart officer, perceiving this, deftly caught some of the eggs, took them home and made omelets of them. There's a theme for you; how to turn your enemy's insulting eggs into omelets.

Pastors' Retreat

DURING the spring vacation Wayland Academy again opened its dormitories, class rooms and heart to the Baptist pastors of Wisconsin. Ideal weather, quiet and stately surroundings, inspiring messages and good fellowship all conspired to give the pastors a most delightful rest before the last great effort to make our Easter services the best ever.

Special mention with thanks is due for the work of Dr. Hugh Heath, Dr. C. A. Brooks, Dr. F. A. Agar, Dr. Wm. Chalmers, Rev. Walter E. Wiatt of the A. B. F. M. S. of the Burma field, Dr. G. Clifford Cress of THE BAPTIST and Doctor LeGrand of our own state convention. The days were full of good things early and late. Seventy-seven pastors enjoyed the retreat.

There was no committee on "findings" but had there been one, undoubtedly they would have found among other things the following: That the retreat began with an unusual report of conversions in almost every field represented. Pastors were aglow with the joy of winning men in their pre-Easter campaigns. Many of them had just held their decision days and others had had special meetings. When the reports are all in it will appear that it is a rich harvest of souls. One thing kept coming to the front in discussion and address of whatever kind, that is the increased emphasis which our churches must place on religious education. Whether we discussed the cooperative program with Doctor Heath, or pastoral leadership with Doctor Brooks, or religious education itself with Doctor Chalmers or the press with Mr. Cress, or the devotional life with Doctor LeGrand, repeatedly we came back to the need for education and the teaching ministry of the church.

A Pioneer Sunday

All kinds of "Sundays" clutter up our church calendars but one of the most unique services was that designated "Pioneer Sunday" at Waukesha, Wis., Rev. A. L. Drake, pastor, on Mar. 21. Honor was paid to all who had been members of the church for twenty-five years or more. Fifty-three pioneers were present. The oldest pioneer sent a letter telling of sixty-four years' work in the church. Dr. W. E. Chalmers, pastor of the church 1903-06, was the speaker of the morning and held an informal reception at the close of the services. This church also reports increasing attendance at services and that a building program is about to begin. Fifty prepared for membership at Easter time.

Down-town Strategy

The church at Sheboygan which has been hampered because of the location and type of its building for some time has sold its undesirable property and the man who bought it gave them a lot in a good church location. This nets the church $23,000 as a nest egg for the new church. What has been the experience of many another church bids fair to come to Sheboygan. The church feels the throb of new life in contemplation of its better location and building. Rev. A. O. Protsman, pastor, is greatly encouraged. Sixteen conversions recently were reported.

The German church of Sheboygan is also alive and active. Rev. Mr. Bartel, pastor, and his people will entertain the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Jungbund, organization of the young people of the German Baptist churches.

Rev. E. H. Otto of Watertown is available for engagements with either German or English-speaking churches, preferably the latter. He has done a good work at Watertown.

Pastor-Teacher at Ripon

By arrangement with Ripon college at Ripon, Wis., Rev. Harris M. Barbour gives part time to the faculty of that college and part to the pulpit of the local Baptist church. He publishes a fine parish paper, the Common Hearth, which features both school and church activities. A most valuable piece of work is being done. In a recent issue they gave the picture of the thirteen students "Just before exams—but they survived!" The personnel of the group is interesting from the fact that five of them are the children of ministers. Pastor and wife hold open house every Sunday night at their "Common Hearth" hour when all Baptist students are gathered in social way and some study classes.

Milwaukee

A pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross," was given at Tabernacle church, Palm Sunday evening. The theme centered in the text, "Whosoever would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." At the climax the invitation was given and a score of young people came to kneel at the foot of the cross, dedicating their lives to the Christ. This pageant was given at the South Side Christian center, Apr. 11, by the Tabernacle caste of characters.

A series of meetings in which Milwaukee churches united in four groups and held three meetings in each group resulted in a deep stirring of the young life of the churches. Conversions were registered at each service and the total of the campaign runs to about seventy-five. Rev. C. C. Browne of the young people's department of the State Convention and the Milwaukee Baptist Union committee on evangelism under Rev. Geo. B. Davis of South church cooperated in promotion of the meetings.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

Doctor Truett's Ministry

THE Protestant Christian forces of Detroit meet each year in pre-Lenten services of evangelistic spirit and fervor. This is done under the auspices of the Detroit Council of Churches. The program includes a noonday preaching service in a great down-town theater, and evening service in some prominent church edifice. The Baptists have happily joined in these services, and this year Dr. George W. Truett, of Dallas, Texas, came as their contribution to the spiritual welfare of this great city. Our hopes were high, and Doctor Truett more than met every expectation. He preached from Mar. 8 to 18, the evening service being held in the Woodward Avenue Baptist church, where a fifty-voice choir supported the preacher. It was a wonderful two weeks for Detroit. The clearest persuasive sermons of Doctor Truett attracted capacity audiences noon and night. Never has Detroit received finer exposition of biblical truth. Out of his rich experience Doctor Truett drew pertinent illustration that reinforced his telling points as he drove home to every heart the great basic truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Our pastors have been greatly strengthened in their messages and purposes. Doctor Hoag and his deacons made the most of the opportunity; as a result there have been many baptisms and accessions by church letters from other states.

"We must build!" "We must build!" This is the insistent demand in many churches in our Baptist fellowship. Where all the money is coming from to make possible all the plans proposed, we do not know, but as formerly, we go forward as a people to meet the growing needs, trusting that the Great Head of the church will open undiscovered resources for us as he has in times past. Almost every day Doctor Gleiss is heard to exclaim: "If we only had some money!" and then he leads the Baptist forces forward in a new enterprise and to victory. What we lack in wealth we Detroit Baptists make up in faith and consecration. We are strong believers in cooperation. Our churches do not all experience the building need at the same time, and so unitedly we work out the various problems as best we can, one by one, and press on to the next great need.

The Maranatha Baptist church has voted to change its name to the Dexter Boulevard Baptist church, to take effect when the congregation has moved into its beautiful new house of worship on Dexter boulevard at Davison road. It is expected that this will be early in May. Rev. W. W. McMaster, the pastor, is proving to be a God-sent man for this important task.

The Detroit Association, formerly known as the Michigan Baptist Association, the first to organize when Michigan was yet a territory, will observe its hundredth anniversary in October when the First church will entertain. A three days' program, largely of a historical character, is in preparation. This has been a wonderfully eventful centenary to Michigan, Detroit and the Baptists. It is well to take a backward perspective, and then a look ahead. The First church will entertain the Michigan Baptist Convention in 1927, when this church will celebrate its centenary.

The Detroit children's home has already outgrown its present building and a new and more modern housing is imperative. The board of managers is struggling with the problem and will probably present the whole situation before the denomination in the metropolitan area soon.

Rev. C. Frank Vreeland, pastor of Grace church, River Rouge, has been holding evangelistic meetings, assisted by State Evangelist Curry of Lansing. Results have been gratifying. This progressive church is planning for a new church building on a new site in the better residential district, to be built in the near future.

Royal Oak church is going forward under the leadership of Rev. F. B. MacAllister, who recently came from Pennsylvania in answer to a call to become pastor of this reborn church. Royal Oak is a city now and is growing rapidly in population and all that makes for a modern suburban city. This affords a challenging opportunity and responsibility, which is being made the most of.

The Baptist churches within the metropolitan area have received many splendid members from southern churches, people who have come from the southland to make Detroit their future home. We are happy indeed to receive these accessions, but there are numerous evidences that thousands have not made the letter and fellowship transfer that they should for their own good and for the advancement of the kingdom here where every possible recruit is needed. Church letters in trunks are not very efficient.

So many people think of Detroit as a one-industry city—the making of automobiles. But this is far from the truth. There are more than twenty industries in which Detroit leads the world. It is now conceded that Detroit has already attained world leadership in these newer industries: air craft, busses and iceless refrigeration, all of which are certain to develop into major industries. Detroit has not yet reached its apex. It has many industries of giant size that have not reached the world supremacy class. With a growth in population of 331 per cent in twenty-five years, and growing stronger each succeeding year, Detroit Baptists bespeak the cordial cooperation of our brethren in other cities and other states that we may worthily meet the stupendous problems that confront us in kingdom building, in a city where the forces of evil find a most inviting field and are organized in remarkable phalanx. Send the names and addresses of incoming Baptists to Baptist headquarters, 810 Ford building. We are here to serve in the largest and best possible manner. Your neglect makes our task doubly difficult.

Dr. F. H. Divine of New York is leading a new building campaign calling for $150,000 for the Jefferson Avenue church, Rev. A. V. Allen, pastor. This church of 700 members has grown out of two older congregations, the Clinton Avenue Baptist, crowded out by the influx of foreign-speaking groups and negroes, and the Jefferson Avenue branch of the Woodward Avenue church. Jefferson and Lakeview is a strategic site. Five years ago a Sunday-school unit of four stories was built. Now an auditorium proper is greatly needed, and it is to this end this campaign is on. Architect Merrill, of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, has suggested plans that probably will be adopted. When this unit is built the whole property will have a value of $350,000. The location is about six miles from downtown, in a well developed residential section. We are confident the enterprise will succeed.

The Swedish Baptist General Conference of America

BY OLOF HEDEEN

THE Swedish Baptist Annual for the calendar year 1925 has lately been published. It contains the statistics of that branch of our Baptist brotherhood up to Jan. 1, 1926. There are twenty state conferences with 341 churches connected with the General Conference. 1350 have been baptized during the year. Of these 766 came from the Sunday schools. The total membership is 33,340. There are 317 Sunday schools with a membership of 31,466.

The financial reports are quite satisfactory. For local work, $905,129.77. For benevolent purposes (old people's homes, children's homes, etc.), $56,746.69. For missions: for American Baptist Home Mission societies, $32,302.42, for Foreign Mission societies, $41,672.01 (the greatest part of this amount has gone to the A. B. F. M. S.). The state conferences have received $29,139.92 and the General Conference, $36,599.88. The total expenditures for local, home and foreign work are more than one million dollars, viz., $1,101,590.69.

During the year the General Conference offices have been moved to new headquarters at 912 Belmont avenue, Chicago, where also the publishing department is located. The weekly published by the conference, Standaret (The Standard) has nearly 11,000 subscribers, and the weekly Sunday School and the Home has about 8000.

What I Discovered at Grand Island College

BY H. C. WHITCOMB

PROBABLY one of the greatest defects in our denominational life at the present time is lack of accurate knowledge on the part of our people concerning Baptist enterprises. Surely I had reason to believe that I knew pretty accurately concerning affairs at Grand Island College after seven years of residence in the state where it is located and an unusual intimacy with its administration in relation to the Nebraska Convention. But a week of residence there has disclosed to me many things in a way both new and vital. I had been invited to deliver a series of chapel lectures that might stimulate and strengthen religious faith. Incidentally I was kept busy meeting student groups and holding personal conferences throughout the week at all sorts of hours.

I doubt if a cross-section of any college in the land would disclose in an equal-sized group, any more vigorous, attractive, keen-minded, earnest-purposed student body than that which crowded the college chapel each morning of the week. Most of these come from rugged physical stock, their parents are first or second generation settlers of Nebraska farm lands and ranches. To them work is natural and sacrifice in the interest of accomplishment the keenest joy. A number of them are earning their own way, in some instances at almost too great, too pathetic, a price. Not a student did I discover that was not interested in religion. Not that they are content to accept without questioning traditional statements, but that they are deeply and vitally interested in building for themselves a working faith with which they can go out and serve their generation in the largest way. The spiritual responsiveness of almost the entire student body to the uniqueness and claims of Jesus Christ was the thing of greatest significance. A Life Service League numbers in its membership thirty-five young men and women who are prepared to devote their lives to Christian work. Of this number eleven or twelve are young men who expect to enter the Christian ministry.

In the faculty I found a consecrated, well-prepared and self-sacrificing group of men and women, with a president, Dr. John M. Wells, who enjoys the esteem not only of the student body and faculty and pastors and churches of the state, but also of the leaders in secular education throughout the state. From without it is impossible to judge the burdens which these men and women are carrying, some of whom have received national recognition and might quickly relocate at larger salaries but for their consecration to this college. Funds are insufficient, more professors are needed. I found one day that President Wells had been in his study until three o'clock in the morning preparing for extra classes which he was obliged to take that day to relieve another professor. Are matters being taught in the class room to undermine religious faith? No! On different occasions textbooks are subjected to reanalysis in order to discover whether or not they might be subversive to faith. One such book was discovered last year, I am informed, and out it went. One must appreciate, however, the difficulty today of selecting first rate textbooks, outstanding textbooks in their sphere, without now and then a sentence or paragraph being found which one could wish were more constructively worded. The earnest effort put forth by President Wells and many of the professors to lead every member of the student body to an open confession of faith in Christ, and the encouragement to Christian activity, in addition to the example which they personally are setting in Christian living, seems to me to answer the question as to the spiritual contribution which the institution is making to the life of the denomination.

While the present buildings present a good appearance, they are totally inadequate. Dormitories are overcrowded. A new science building is needed. Library facilities are hampered through lack of books and suitable quarters. A new chapel and gymnasium must be had immediately. Gymnasium classes are now being held in the open air and a downtown gymnasium must be rented for basket ball. Had only our New World Movement succeeded better these needs would have been met. Now they must come through slow hard effort. Perhaps by fall, if funds can be properly stimulated, the new gymnasium will be ready for occupancy.

It is such a work as this that is being jeopardized by lack of accurate information and by the threatened failure of the denomination to reach its quota and make good its promises for the year. Realizing the fact that every Baptist college lying west of the Mississippi stands in similar jeopardy in the event of denominational failure, realizing the effect which this must have upon the spiritual heritage of generations as yet unborn and the resultant influence upon Baptist leadership in this great Mississippi basin, let us determine within ourselves to meet sacrifice with sacrifice, and let us see to it that the money is forthcoming to meet the crisis of this year.

The Mabie School's Third Graduation Day

By J. H. COVELL

BECAUSE of a gratifying address by the mayor of Yokohama, Hon. C. Ariyoshi, Mabie's third graduation day on Mar. 1 will stand out in the history of the school. Mr. Ariyoshi was the governor of the prefecture in which Yokohama lies when the school was founded, and it was through his influence that the mission acquired from the government the present school site. Since that time he has been governor of the prefecture in which Kobe lies and also civil governor of Korea. He is a member of the church in Kobe.

ect and forceful manner sketched the history of the school and had spoken of our double motto, "Be men, and serve." In closing he had urged the graduates to return to the school whenever they felt the need of warm companionship or help of any kind, saying that not all of them would find their future lives easy. The spirit of the institution is to continue to help the sons who need it most, he said. After the message of the governor, read by the head of the prefecture's education department, he introduced the mayor and spoke of his intimate and notably helpful connection during our early history.

The mayor likened his special interest in the school to his special liking for a certain famous wrestler whose every catch he follows with interest, even though he knows little about him except that he had been a student. He had been particularly struck by Mr. Sakata's appeal to the boys to remember the school in times when they felt the need of friendship. This he contrasted with the attitude of schools which are likely to boast of the fame of their prominent graduates but to forget about the rest. He congratulated the members of the class on having been under such good influences for five years.

Then the speaker took the Bible in his hands and said that the spirit of service which distinguishes Mabie is like the spirit exemplified in the stories of the Lost Sheep and the Prodigal Son. To him this had been a great inspiration. He commended the study and practice of the principles of Jesus.

This message seemed to us to have been ideal for the boys of the whole school. There was no toning down of the Christian stand. There was unqualified approval of the spirit we have been trying to impress on the minds and hearts of the students.

Sixty-seven were graduated. Several of them would have entered our college department if it had been in existence, and for that reason we look forward with joyful anticipation to next year when we hope to see the new school ready to action. It will surely be a great addition to the strength of Japanese Baptists, and will fill an important place in the educational life.

Theology Building Dedication at the University of Chicago

By C. T. HOLMAN

A DAY to which the Divinity School of the University of Chicago has long and eagerly looked forward occurred Monday, Apr. 5, when the new theology building was dedicated. For over thirty years the Divinity School has carried on its work without a building of its own. It has been housed in very crowded quarters in the Haskell Oriental Museum. Now, however, it occupies a noble and beautiful building which provides probably as adequate a physical equipment as that enjoyed by any theological seminary anywhere. The dedication program which occupied the entire day began at 10:30 with a meeting of the united ministers of Chicago, attended by over three hundred, the various Protestant ministers' conferences of the city adjourning their own meetings, regularly held on Mondays, in order to attend. At noon a luncheon was served to the ministers in Hutchinson commons. In the afternoon at 2:30 a general meeting was held which filled Mandel hall. At 4:30 the services of dedication were held in the new building, followed by a reception in the common room. The program was brought to a close with a banquet in Hutchinson commons for the alumni, students, and faculty of the Divinity School. Representatives from all parts of the country were present, and telegrams of congratulations were read for many others who found it impossible to attend.

At the ministers' meeting in the morning, after prayer by President Frank L. Anderson of the International Baptist Seminary of East Orange, N. J., an alumnus of the Divinity School, Vice President F. C. Woodward of the university, in the absence from the city of President Max Mason, gave the address of welcome. Fraternal greetings from other seminaries and from the ministers were conveyed by Pres. J. G. K. McClure of McCormick Theological Seminary, and Pres. Ozora S. Davis of the Chicago Theological seminary. The main address of the morning was given by the distinguished church historian, Prof. Dr. Gustav Krueger of the University of Giessen, Germany, on "The State of Religion in Germany Today." Three addresses were given at the afternoon meeting, the first by Prof. T. R. Glover of St. John's College, Cambridge University, Cambridge, England, the well-known author of "The Jesus of History"; another by Pres. Allan Hoben of Kalamazoo College, an alumnus and former professor of the Divinity School; and the closing address by Dean Shailer Mathews. In the course of his masterly address, President Hoben paid a moving tribute to those men who had been his teachers, and who had built themselves into the institution so that they are forever a part of it, but who have "slipped through the silent portals into the city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." In the following terms he characterized these great leaders:

"George Washington Northrop: Philosopher and theologian, executive, preacher of power, herald of the day when dogma should bow to certified knowledge, constructive thinker.

"Galusha Anderson: Champion of those primary truths inherent in the older thought structure of the Christian faith.

"Franklin Johnson: Relator of the art of preaching to all other arts, discerning critic of form and order, sympathetic counsellor to young preachers.

"George Stephen Goodspeed: Scholar of fine taste and far outlook, unfolding the nature and worth of ethnic faiths and so broadening our horizon toward the world-wide presence and work of God.

"Charles E. Hewitt: Pastor of amateur ministers, interpreter of the school to the Baptist denomination, liaison officer for the new formation.

"Eri Baker Hulbert: A soul knowing sorrow and the unquenchable fire of love, reviving history with dramatic power, startling students into mental action and letting them have the truth straight from the shoulder—but loving them always.

"George Burman Foster: Apostle of ultimate reality, pioneer beyond strange and forbidden borders of religious speculation, target for superficial zealots, saint to all who knew him, at home in the unmeasured spaces, God-conscious and sure of love as the final solvent and of personal religion as an end in itself.

"Charles Richmond Henderson: Humanitarian, follower of Jesus of Nazareth, champion of the lowly, the imprisoned, the maimed, the overburdened, the deranged, the unfortunate; by virtue of both life and teaching, the greatest spiritual force in the University of Chicago.

"Those of us who attended the great memorial meeting at the Auditorium theatre felt that the quaint words of Bunyan applied to our hero:

"And so Great Heart, having finished the work that was given him by his Master and having strengthened many that were faint with his Christian faith and comforted many of the sorrowing with his rich sympathy, crossed over amid the welcome of the trumpeters and pipers, of singers, and players on stringed instruments, and was taken through the beautiful gate of the city, while the redeemed chanted: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

"William Rainey Harper: Superman in scholarship, imagination, faith and power of execution; both seer and doer; founder of a new era for American universities and of a new method for American biblical scholarship; maker of the chart, the compass and the ship itself; the engineer who built and launched the vessel, the captain who held it to the course, staying at the wheel night and day until found dead at his post.

"Ernest DeWitt Burton: Exact scholar, statesman in the kingdom of God; tireless in toil, making his body a living sacrifice to spiritual purpose; exponent of truth and justice by careful logic; competent equally in small detail and comprehensive plan; forecaster of educational development, director of the second main episode of the university's history, and, at the last, amazing leader from the cloister, daring enough even for Chicago and blazing white in the consuming flame at the summit of his service so that we who stood by could only say as he rode full-tilt into glory, 'My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof!'"

Dean Mathews' address was an interpretation of the spirit of the Divinity School as seen throughout the course of its history. The address was lighted with his characteristic humor, yet deeply serious in its main purpose and occasionally touched with pathos as he affectionately mentioned the men who have contributed and passed on.

The service of dedication at 4:30 was a brief and simple, but reverent and beautiful ceremony, participated in by Vice President Woodward, Dean Mathews, Professor Soares and Dr. W. C. Bitting, who offered the prayer of dedication. A hymn of unusual appropriateness and fine lyrical quality, especially written for the occasion by Professor Soares, was sung as part of the service.

Address of the Evening

At the banquet in the evening addresses were given by former Pres. Harry F. Judson for the university; Pres. Ozora S. Davis for the affiliated Chicago Theological Seminary; Messrs. S. V. McCasland and David McKeith, Jr., for the student bodies of the Divinity School and the Chicago Theological Seminary, respectively; Dr. A. W. Wishart of Fountain Street Baptist church, Grand Rapids, for the alumni; and Dean Mathews. It was a very happy occasion. Mrs. William Rainey Harper, the beloved widow of the great first president of the university, was seated at the speakers' table. A message of greeting was sent by Mrs. Ernest DeWitt Burton. Professor T. G. Soares who, besides being professor of religious education and head of the department of practical theology is also chaplain of the university, made an admirable toastmaster. In calling upon the dean to speak the closing words of the day, Professor Soares called attention to the undoubted fact that in a large degree the erection of this building was the personal achievement of Dean Shailer Mathews. Just as Mr. Rockefeller's recent gift of $1,000,000 to endowment was so largely based upon personal confidence in Dean Mathews, so this generous gift of the new building for theological instruction was in no small degree an expression of confidence in the far-sighted wisdom and soundness of his administration.

The services of the entire day were marked by a spirit of genuine consecration. While great satisfaction was felt by all members of the university in this splendid addition to the equipment of the institution it was also felt and expressed in nearly every speech that the greatly improved facilities provided by this building really represented a vastly increased responsibility. All of this splendid equipment must be brought under the dominance and made to express the spirit of Jesus. In Doctor McClure's address in the morning, Doctor Glover's and Doctor Hoben's addresses in the afternoon, Dean Mathews' speech at the banquet, and in the service of dedication itself this was especially stressed. And the final words of Dean Mathews' afternoon address were a very earnest appeal—an appeal in such terms that it was perfectly clear that this was no mere uttering of a conventional phrase—for prayer, that God might guide in such use of this building that it would be made an effective instrument in building the kingdom of God.

The Building

The new building is of Tudor Gothic design and constructed of Indiana limestone. It completes the south quadrangle of the university. While not slavishly copying any other building it is, in general, modeled after the Gothic college buildings of Oxford University, and is completely harmonious with the other splendid structures on the campus. With its great beauty it combines utility; it is admirably useful and convenient. There are, in all, fifty rooms, providing adequate offices, class-rooms, seminar and exhibit rooms, library, a great and splendidly furnished common room for social purposes and club gatherings, on the walls of which hang many portraits, including recently completed portraits of the late Dean Hulbert and Dean Shailer Mathews, and a tastefully furnished ladies' room. Altogether, in all of its equipment and appointments, the building is admirably suited to the needs of the school.

The new theology building completely furnished has been erected at a cost of $600,000. Frequent reference was made to and words of sincere appreciation spoken concerning the anonymous donor through whose generosity the building has been erected. The spirit of the day was well expressed in two paragraphs spoken by the dean in the service of dedication.

"In this day of the fulfillment of our long hopes we consecrate ourselves and to our great task as we dedicate this noble and beautiful building to the high purposes for which it has been erected by the generosity of its donors and the confidence of the university.

"With reverent gratitude to Almighty God, who has led us onward from a day of small things, who has enlarged in numbers and power, who has granted us gifted and devoted leaders, who has raised up generous friends to be our helpers—we unite in the dedication of these halls to his glory and to the service of men."

Pioneer Preacher of Idaho Centenarian

By STANLEY A. GILLET

ON Wednesday, Mar. 31, Rev. Benjamin Franklin Morrow, a member of the First Baptist church of Caldwell, Idaho, celebrated his 100th birthday. In siring to pay a tribute of respect to Morrow, the Masonic Lodge and the First Baptist church united in a service on Sunday morning, Mar. 28. Mr. Sherman M. Coffin, Past Grand Master, A. O. U. W. & A. M., Idaho, gave an address, "Rev. Morrow as a Citizen." Stanley Gillett, pastor of the church, gave a biographic sketch of his life. A concluding address on "Our Debt To The Pioneer" was given by Rev. W. A. Shanks, Boise, executive secretary of the Idaho State Convention.

Mr. Morrow was born in Missouri, Mar. 31, 1826. He had little chance to get an education, but his talents were recognized by Mt. Zion Baptist church of Adair county, Missouri, which licensed him to preach on Apr. 4, 1857; on Mar. 25, 1860, he was ordained by the First view church of the same county.

Soon afterward he moved to Iowa. In the spring of 1864 joined a wagon train at Albia, whose destination was Walla, Wash. He was put in charge of this train, which went across Iowa along the Council Bluffs road, striking the Trail eighteen miles west of Omaha. Mr. Morrow related to me his experience in passing through Winterville where I was formerly pastor, an important place on the trail. Reaching Idaho he stopped at Dixie Flat, Aug. 27, and set up a home among settlers who were living in tents; there was no cabin in the valley. To the best of his knowledge he married the first couple in Idaho, on Oct. 19, 1864, at Dixie. He says, "I preached my first sermon the Sunday before Christmas, 1864, in a dance hall, on a dirt floor." Late reached the funeral of Mrs. Wilson, the saloon-keeper's wife, in a saloon, which was so crowded that he had to resort to the use of a box which he stationed in front of the door. "There was a down-pour of rain while I was delivering my sermon, but fortunately a man held a big umbrella over me and so I kept dry."

"I was pretty lonely," he says. "It was three or four years before I ever heard anybody besides myself pray."

He had goodly numbers to preach to, for over seven months he preached in a dance hall, but so many moved away that he gave up his work and went to Walla Walla. He returned to Dixie Flat in 1869 and began to preach in a schoolhouse. He worked up and down the river, preaching in schoolhouses and private dwellings, riding horseback thirty to fifty miles to perform these services. He organized a number of Sunday schools. In the Dixie schoolhouse within a few miles of Caldwell he organized the Dixie Baptist church in 1868 with seven members. The first baptism that he knew of in Idaho was in the winter of 1866-1867; at that time a young man by the name of Ed Brannon was baptized by Mr. Morrow.

This church was admitted to the Mt. Pleasant Association of Oregon in 1874. For several years its membership increased rapidly, but dissensions arose and the church declined. Because of this trouble Mr. Morrow moved to Wingville, five miles west of Baker City, Ore., and served the people there until June, 1872, when it was decided by the Mt. Pleasant Association to extend the missionary territory so as to take in a part of Idaho. Mr. Morrow was made a missionary to work in this territory.

He organized the church at Bluffs Station on the Payette river, and preached there for eleven years, during which time he missed only three meetings. He received nothing for his services.

The rest of his labor was along similar lines. He organized the present church at Caldwell, and always manifested a great interest in the work. He helped not substantially in a financial way; had not been for his gifts and labor the present building would not have been possible. He labored from the mouth of the Boise river all the way to Boise City, and his life has been a benediction to all the people in the valley. We shall never be able to calculate the good he has accomplished. Until December, 1925, he was out practically every day, but is now confined to his house. He is in fairly good health, and on the occasion of his 100th birthday he received great many friends, talked with them, recalling former experiences and joking frequently. We thank God for such a noble example of service and devotion to the work of Jesus Christ.

Dwight J. Harris

R. D. J. HARRIS died at his residence in Evanston, Mar. 23. He was one of the men who have figured largely in local church progress but in affairs of the denomination at large.

He was born of good New England stock in Becket, Mass., Aug. 24, 1838. He took the course in medicine at the University of Michigan going straight from medical college to serve in the U. S. Navy. During this service he was often under fire. During the latter part of the Civil War he served with the U. S. Sanitary Commission.

For a while Doctor Harris practiced medicine at Madison, Ohio, but soon joined his brother, N. W. Harris, in the work of building up the great financial house that bears their name, the Harris Bond and Trust Company of Chicago.

Doctor Harris was first a member of the Second church, where Dr. Wm. M. Lawrence was pastor, and later joined the First church, then under Doctor Henson. A quarter of a century ago he moved to Evanston and joined the church there in connection with which he has served in many capacities. He retired from active business while still vigorous and gave his attention to various benevolent projects. It was his custom to give himself with his benefactions. He spent several winters in Berkeley, Calif., and became interested in the local situation. The present fine church building and organ of the Baptist church there are largely due to his gifts. He made the Baptist seminary at Berkeley possible by his repeated gifts. The welfare of the negro was always near his heart. He made the first great gift to the Piney Woods School at Braxton, Miss., that gave that institution its start and made repeated gifts to the colored Y. M. C. A. at Evanston. The work of the Illinois Children's Society received munificent support from Doctor Harris more than once. The list is a long one, and nearly always with a gift Doctor Harris gave his keen business judgment and counsel, frequently as valuable to the object as the money.

He was a loyal supporter of his local church and his pastor. Until the weakness of old age overtook him, he was practically never absent when the church was open. Such laymen are the red corpuscles of the church. Doctor Harris leaves one son, Arthur M. Harris, now at the head of our ministers and missionaries board.

Mrs. A. B. Meeker

An Appreciation

BY THE WOMAN'S HOME MISSION SOCIETY

WE ARE all inheritors of the past. Too often it happens that we put forth our hands and partake of the blessings that come to us without a thought of the valiant workers who through sacrifice and tears have made a pathway for our feet.

The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society is nearing the fiftieth anniversary of its birth, and it is but natural that the majority of those who witnessed its beginnings should have passed on to their heavenly home.

A year ago when we passed our forty-eighth anniversary we found but two of the society's constituent members living. Mrs. R. R. Donnelly of Chicago, and Mrs. A. B. Meeker alone remained of that company who faced opposition and prejudice to organize our Baptist women into a society. Now death has taken again its toll of these pioneers and Mrs. Donnelly only remains to recount those early struggles.

Mrs. Meeker passed from earth Mar. 25, 1926. It is fitting that those of us who are rejoicing over the accomplishments of our Woman's Home Mission Society should pause to render tribute to her long years of service. Mrs. Meeker was present at the first meeting held in the Brevort House in Chicago.

In November, 1876, when a company of women met to consider the need and the call for such a society, she was present, and when the organization was finally accomplished, in February, 1877, she was elected a member of the first board of directors of the society. Her interest, her service and her gifts were faithfully given to the cause from that time until her death. She was never a conspicuous figure among our women but many a missionary will testify to the blessedness of her ministry, for her home was always open to every servant of the society and many times her generous gifts added to the comfort of our too poorly paid workers.

It was through Mrs. Meeker's influence that our Baptist Missionary Training School secured its first beloved house-mother, Mrs. Whalley, and it was often due to her generous gifts that the school owed its power to give a few luxuries to its students.

Mrs. Meeker was one of a group of 200 members who, under the leadership of Dr. George B. Lorimer in the fall of 1881, went out from the First Baptist church. She remained a member of that church until her death. Until age placed limitations on her service she was active in all its efforts. For years she has been content to watch as younger hands lifted the burdens that she had carried. Surely when we have entered upon the fruitage of such a life of devotion and service it is meet that we should thus acknowledge our debt. "Their works do follow them." May God give us grace to follow in their train.

Ada F. Morgan

Ada F. Morgan had rounded out thirty years of service under the Woman's Home Mission Society when she died in Nashville, Tenn., Apr. 1. Twenty-three of these years she gave to work among the Negroes. At first she was with Selma University, Selma, Ala., but since 1915 she has been superintendent of the Fireside Schools. From 1908 until 1915 she was at the Baptist Missionary Training School.

Her work and leadership among the Negroes can never be fully measured. The magazine, Hope, which the Fireside Schools produced, touched more than 30,000 Negro homes. Many families were bound closer to their Christian interests through this agency.

Training classes for men and women who craved more knowledge of the Bible and methods of Christian work were another Fireside School enterprise. As a follower after Joanna P. Moore, the founder, Ada F. Morgan gave her life in Christian service.

Eclectic Baptists

By E. L. KRUMREIG

RELIGIOUS controversy during recent years has brought into being three groups—"fundamentalists," "modernists" and the "middle-of-the-roader." This controversy in our Northern Baptist Convention has become a sort of an annual arena in which two of these three groups, the modernist and fundamentalist, meet as gladiators in combat, each determined to deal a death blow to his opponent. If this conflict is brought into the Northern Convention at Washington, D. C., in May, it will be a disgrace to the Baptists both North and South and dishonor the cause of Christ. It will divide our forces, and the average Baptist will turn his back upon all denominational organizations. Why not, heeding God's Word: "Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." (I Thess. 5:19-21.)

Eclecticism in theology or conservatism is not a "departing from the faith" but to "prove all things" and to "hold fast that which is good." There is good in both fundamentalism and modernism. Prove, choose, hold fast the good.

There was a time when the medical world was divided and at swords' points over therapeutics. The allopath and the homeopath each claimed the right and only method of treating diseases. One claimed his pills were the sure cure, the other liquid medicine the only thing to cure. But now both schools accept eclecticism and use both pills and liquid remedies with good results.

Since the beginning of this theological and doctrinal controversy the study of the Bible has been greatly stimulated and is read more than ever. The most scholarly translations have appeared, and why not accept "that which is good" even though it is new? Why contend over things not vital and that tend not to salvation?

It sometimes happens in matters of reason, as it does in material objects: That which at first appearance makes a fair show, upon examination proves to be worthless. Some fruits which allure the eye most, can the least bear the test of the palate; they may be admired by the traveler who passes hastily and sees them only at a distance, but when they are served at the table, the taste soon rectifies the mistake of the eye. So in matters of reason; some arguments strike the fancy of one side or the other immediately and judgment is pronounced before it has had time to examine the merits of the case. If time is given for reflection, the positiveness on the part of either the modernist or fundamentalist will dwindle, and leave both sides admiring each other in the spirit of Christian fellowship.

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good": be an eclectic Baptist. "Brethren, abstain from all appearance of evil." Come to the convention at Washington, D. C., as brethren in the Lord, with a determination to strengthen our forces rather than to divide and weaken.

Who Goes to the Convention?

An Illustration

By R. R. COON

I have made it my privilege, and duty, to attend about twenty of our national conventions, formerly called the "May Anniversaries." These privileges have proved a source of real information, a constant pleasure to memory and many a helpful illustration in after speaking and writing; perhaps next to denominational papers a prominent factor in promoting religious intelligence. The renewing of friendships when "sundered far by faith we meet" has given added satisfaction.

I have been surprised beyond measure to meet those who have been long years pastors who have attended no such meeting. Some years ago present at such a convention, to my amazement, it was found not another pastor in the state came expressly as a delegate. At the same meeting were thirteen or fourteen from that state representing some state or national position.

Recalling this illustration, "while I was musing the fire burned," I slept and dreamed. I saw in my dream a large company of well dressed, highly educated men, state and national officials, who had met to consider the problem: how can we secure the attendance at our conventions of a larger number of our pastors, some of whom have never come? After a statement of the object of their meeting, silence reigned. Then I saw in my dream Doctor—of my native state arise. He said: "Brethren, I have in mind a plan that will, in great part, relieve the condition we face; a plan that this body can put through. Let the hundreds of officials here gathered pay their own expenses, in toto, to the next convention and let the many thousands of dollars thus secured be wisely devoted to sending to that meeting pastors who seldom or never are found there." He sat, and there was a moment of silence. Then I saw in my dream my old friend from California rise and firmly second the proposal; and then one and another voice his approval, and a strong unanimous vote was given. Then I saw in my dream that stately assembly rise as one and like the voice of one did they sing and I awoke. The fire in the grate had burned low, but looking at the dying embers I thought might that dream become true?

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear,"

We hear something nowadays about "the autonomy of the local church." Will somebody say something about the autonomy of the pastor, at once also the leader and under-head of the local church? Such a movement as dreamed of would bring new life and action to many common toilers. What a new view of the whole denominational work it would give, what an impetus to increased fidelity to the home work after returning from such an uplifting privilege. More than that. We hear distant echoes of serious questions and possible division of sentiment that may be in Washington in May. If that lone pastor above referred to "should become 1000 or 2000, there might be then true representatives of autonomous churches to help secure "the unity of the spirit and the bond of peace."

A Call to the Colors

IN THE closing two months of the previous fiscal year, the Board of Missionary Cooperation collected nearly $2,000,000—to be exact, the sum of $1,944,576. What we must do in the same period this year, in order to raise our full budget of $5,360,000 is to bring in $362,365 more than we did during March and April, 1925—the sum of $2,306,941.

By Mar. 1, 1926, we had raised 57 per cent of the year's budget, or $3,053,059. There remained two months in which to do nearly six months' work. Surely the old negro preacher spoke more truly than he realized when he said, "Procrastination am one ob de fundamental principles ob de Baptists."

But there is a certain stimulation in working under pressure, provided the task attacked is not too hopeless. This year it is not hopeless at all. We have very little more to raise than we actually did raise during the same period last year, and what Baptists have done once Baptists can do again. The fact that the complete budget is so nearly in sight should add the necessary zest for raising the additional $362,365.

This will be our last chance to take "budget" to the churches through the medium of the denominational press, for by the time this is printed April will be well under way. So we are making it general invitation to all Baptist churches at this eleventh hour to put their shoulders to the wheel and help push the denomination "over the top."

They can do this by collecting and sending in to their state offices, before Apr. 30, the full amount of their missionary goals. Strong churches which have practically raised their quotas, can swell the general fund by sending "over-and-above gifts" out of their generosity and enthusiasm for missionary work.

What tremendous satisfaction it will to a local church, if it can be announced at Washington that the Northern Baptist budget for the year is fully raised, know that it has played its full part bringing about this victory! And how greatly it will quicken the spiritual life of the local church membership to know that they, through their contributions, have played a vital part in the splendid work which is being accomplished on our off-Baptist mission fields, and on our own continent.

Iowa Church Applauds Its Finance Committee

Two calendars from the First church of Sioux City, Iowa, have just come. One is dated for Feb. 7, shortly after the church had begun to secure pledges on its 1926 budget. This issue shows a drawing of a thermometer marked off in divisions of a thousand dollars, and indicates the point which the pledges had reached at that time.

The calendar for Mar. 14 records the pledging of the last dollar on this budget, and assigns the credit as follows: "For the victory we have won, we are indebted to the loyal consecration and fine team work of the members of our church and to the wonderful work of the finance committee. We have the hardest working finance committee any church could possibly have. No hours have been too late, no tasks too hard, but that the committee has tirelessly carried on until victory has come, and the full budget been subscribed."

Fuel for Baptist Fires

"Fuel for Baptist Fires" is what Rev. George C. Alborn, pastor of the First church of Superior, Wis., calls an interesting mimeographed leaflet which he has put out. In terse and vivid paragraphs, he has outlined the principal achievements of the Baptist denomination since its beginning many centuries ago. To arouse a well-justified pride in our Baptist heritage we recommend the perusal of these eight brief pages, and pastors may find many ways in which they can use the material. Copies can be obtained by writing Mr. Alborn at 143 John avenue.

Mr. Alborn's mimeographed church calendar is also interesting. It is decorated with a cover-page design and drawings illustrating the text, which have apparently been made directly on the mimeograph stencil. This adds greatly to the calendar's appearance and makes it a most attractive leaflet.

Eighty-Five Per Cent Effective

Eighty-five per cent sounds like a large proportion, but our educators tell us that we learn that per cent through our eyes. The stereopticon makes this method available for our churches. More than 1,000,000 people see our Baptist work each year, through our stereopticon department.

To help the churches still more, two leaflets have recently been prepared. The first is "Improving Our Stereopticon Service," and answers the common questions about the use of such material. It deals with the materials to be used and the equipment necessary.

The second leaflet was written at the request of an important firm and tells "How the Stereopticon Helps the Church." This leaflet contains the results of experience in more than 500 churches. Both publications may be secured from any stereopticon depository.

February Honor Roll

The honor roll of state conventions which exceeded their contributions for last year up to Feb. 28, 1925, during the first ten months of the present fiscal year, is as follows, arranged in order of the percentage by which they surpassed their last year's record: East Washington, North Idaho, South Dakota, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Southern California, New Jersey, Idaho, Montana, Missouri, New York state, Colorado, Vermont and Ohio.

Utah deserves especial recognition from the denomination. It has already paid in $1100 more than its full quota for the fiscal year.

Next Meeting of the Board

There will be a meeting of the Board of Missionary Cooperation at 2 p. m. on May 24, 1926. The meeting will be held in the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C.

director of religious education in Idaho, is also acting as pastor of the church at Caldwell. He is very happy in his work.

THE JUBILEE NUMBER of the Telugu Baptist, edited by Mallela David of Ramapatnam and published by Rev. V. George of Bezvada, is a creditable work of ninety pages. It is printed in the vernacular. It is the greatest publishing venture by our native Indian brethren. The paper is both edited and managed by them and has been for some years. It has a growing circulation.

REV. D. McMASTERS of Wenatchee, Wash., recently received a gift of $400 from his church toward the purchase of a new auto.

REV. WM. JACKSON of Kalispell, Mont., has accepted a call from the Central church of Spokane, Wash. He began his work Apr. 1.

DR. M. ASHBY JONES was the noon-day speaker in the Orpheum theater of St. Louis during the pre-Easter week under the auspices of the Federation of Churches, sixteen denominations cooperating. In the evening he spoke in the auditorium of the Third Baptist church with five other churches supporting the meetings: First Christian, First Presbyterian, St. Peter's Episcopal, Union M. E., Washington-Compton Presbyterian and Third Baptist.

DR. HERBERT W. HINES of the Central church, Springfield, Ill., will devote five or six Sunday mornings following Easter to review the work done by the organized forces in his church: Sunday school, young people, men's group, women's organizations, neighborhood groups.

DR. JOHN M. MOORE of Brooklyn is delivering a series of Sunday afternoon addresses over the radio, station WJZ, New York. The time is from 2:30 to 3:30 o'clock. These are under the department of the Radio Forum of the Greater New York Federation of Churches. Recent subjects were, "Personality," "Brotherhood," "Service," "Fellowship," and "Mary Magdalene" for Easter Sunday.

REV. AND MRS. H. LEE McLENDON of Centralia, Ill., will be sent to the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington by their church. The tides are running high there with prayer meetings that tax the seating capacity of the church, many conversions, no special services, thirty baptisms at Easter and everybody happy.

REV. JOHN W. PAYNE, Jewett City, Conn., died on March 22. He was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1848. He was a graduate of Rochester seminary and held pastorates in New York. He was a Semitic scholar of some ability and was associated for several years with Dr. William Rainey Harper.

RECENTLY A BRIEF news note was released conveying the information that Dr. John A. Earl, editor of THE BAPTIST, had gone to the hospital for treatment. The operation to which he was subjected was a serious one and it created anxiety among his friends. A telegram of Apr. 9 says that he is making a phenomenal recovery, said by his physician to be in fact unprecedented. He expects to leave the hospital within a few days. He received treatment at Mounds Park Sanitarium, St. Paul, Minn.

THE CHURCH AT CALDWELL, IDA., Rev. Stanley A. Gillett, minister, joined for the pre-Easter evangelistic effort with the Methodist, the Christian and the Presbyterian churches.

REV. JAMES GOODMAN, oldest living graduate of the divinity school of the University of Chicago, has been very ill for many weeks in Chicago. His last active work was with the Immanuel church there.

REV. ROBERT V. MEIGS preached in the Immanuel church, Chicago, Apr. 11.

THE UPPER ALTON CHURCH, Rev. A. A. Hobson, pastor, has thirty-two candidates for baptism on Easter. Sixty-six have been received since Oct. 1, of whom thirty-eight have been baptized.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST Publication Society has appointed Rev. Frederick W. Tomlinson director of religious education for Pennsylvania jointly with the state board. Mr. Tomlinson was four years director of town and country church work in New York.

DR. JUDSON ALLEN TOLMAN, newly elected president of Alderson Junior college, Alderson, W. Va., will enter upon his duties on June 1. The announcement says, "He holds the A. B., A. M., Ph. D. degrees from the University of Chicago. He is a member of the Baptist church and votes the Democratic ticket."

THE FIRST CHURCH, Lebanon, Ind., Rev. A. E. Cowley, pastor, has a vested choir.

PREACHERS at THE UNIVERSITY of Chicago for the spring quarter are Dr. Henry Van Dyke, Princeton University; Pres. Bernard I. Bell, St. Stephen's College, N. Y.; Bishop Hughes of the M. E. church; Dean Willard L. Sperry of Harvard Theological School; Rev. Harold C. Phillips, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., and Rev. Ralph W. Sockman of New York City.

REV. H. E. ORSBORN, formerly of Minneapolis, and now of Waterford, Calif., has tendered his resignation due to ill health. The church at Waterford, serving the entire community, has had a marked growth under the closing pastorate.

IT WAS RECENTLY erroneously announced that the dedication of the edifice at Parsons, Pa., Rev. Grover C. Walters, minister, was held on Jan. 31. We apologize for our error and will state that the dedication will not take place until the new organ is installed, probably about the middle of May.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Portland, Me., "Maine's largest Protestant church," Rev. Wm. S. Jacobs, minister, held a Nea Do Memorial service recently with Judge Ben F. Cleaves as the chairman and the address by Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, secretary of the World League against Alcoholism.

DR. HERBERT S. JOHNSON of Boston, Mass., is completing two months as pulpit supply in the First church, Oakland, Cal. Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher is pastor-elect of this church and begins his work there on May 1.

DR. JOHN M. MOORE, on April 4, began his tenth year with the Marcy Avenue church of Brooklyn; 688 have been received into the church under his pastoral care.

"BAPTIST NIGHT," was observed recently in the First church of Terre Haute, Ind. Five chosen speakers presented the Baptist work in Indiana. Judges awarded prizes to those presenting the best picture. First prize was one year's subscription to the Baptist Observer, the state paper of Indiana.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Elmira, N. Y., Rev. Hugh Chamberlain Burr, minister, has an usher who has served, not as reported recently thirteen years, but for forty years. On the anniversary of beginning his thirty-first year he presented the church a generous check, as he said, "in appreciation of the privilege of service which the church has extended to me through these years."

THE FIRST CHURCH, Hammond, Ind., Rev. J. C. Oranger, held a pre-Easter service resulting in sixty-six conversions. Twenty united with the church, thirty-five being baptized on Easter. The Sunday-school attendance was 650.

NORMAL, ILL., Pastor Geo. Sneath organized fourteen on Easter. Seven others have been accepted for baptism. The pastor conducts a class for instruction and preparation for church membership. The church at Normal, Ill., made a special effort to cover the balance due on its parsonage this spring. The cost was $7500. Pastor Geo. Sneath rejoices in a loyal church in a growing community where 100 new houses were erected in 1925 and contracts for sixty already let thus far in 1926.

PASTOR H. M. WYRICK of the First church, Grand Forks, N. D., baptized twenty-two on Easter, making eighty-four additions for the past year. Of these fifty were by baptism. No special meetings have been held.

AT FLORA, ILL., Pastor J. H. Martin has received thirty new members in nine months. The church edifice will be given extensive repairs soon.

PASTOR EARL RINEY, Coffeyville, Kan., received forty-eight new members over Easter, thirty-one being baptized Easter night; 724 attended Sunday school, Apr. 4.

THE CHURCH AT LA GRANGE, ILL., pastor E. B. Freeman, received twenty-four new members on Easter, seventeen by baptism.

DR. F. KING SINGISER of Troy, N. Y., was the principal speaker at the annual men's banquet in the Tabernacle church, Utica, N. Y., April 16.

THE CHURCH AT BERWYN, ILL., Rev. F. P. Langhorne, minister, has received twenty-three persons by baptism since Mar. 1.

THE COVENANT CHURCH, Chicago, Rev. W. W. Chandler, minister, had sixty professions of faith in a meeting held by Dr. J. C. Dent, pastor of the Judson church, Oak Park, Ill.

THE IMMANUEL CHURCH, Scranton, Pa., has a Sunday school of 330 average attendance. Apr. 25-May 2 is designated as children's week, the aim being to help parents, teachers and all adults in the church to realize the importance of true religious education for the young.

JUDSON CHURCH, Oak Park, Ill., Dr. J. C. Dent, pastor, received ten new members on Easter, five being baptized. The church has been organized forty-eight months and has had additions every month. The present membership is 312.

THE IMMANUEL CHURCH of Marietta, Ohio, was regularly received into the Marietta Association at a regular council held Mar. 19; Mr. J. A. Okey, moderator, and Rev. Edward Derbyshire, of Marietta, clerk. The church has ninety-three members and is fully self-supporting.

REV. OLAF SUTHERLAND of Rock Springs, Mont., and missionary of a great district in the eastern part of the state reports that new settlers with their goods are coming into that region.

REV. G. W. CLAXON, for several years pastor at Streator, Ill., is now located at Roodhouse, Ill.

PASTOR L. S. SLAYBAUGH of Brooklyn, Mich., rejoices in the fact of twenty-four conversions in an evangelistic effort in which Evangelist Harry C. Grimes was the preacher.

THE CHURCH AT Vermillion, S. D., has a new edifice. Rev. Hal P. Fudge is the pastor.

REV. GEORGE B. NEWCOMB, formerly president of the North Dakota Convention and superintendent of the state humane society, has resigned as field representative of the Board of Missionary Cooperation in New York and will take an extended vacation in an effort to restore his health.

REV. ELISHA H. JACKSON of Gibbon, Neb., reports seventy-five additions to the church recently through a union evangelistic effort conducted by Rev. G. L. Rose of Muskogee, Okla. One-third of the town's population went forward in the meetings for rededication or to confess Christ. The offerings paid all expenses and every church in the town is strengthened.

SOUTH DAKOTA will hold the following associational meetings in May: Southern, Mitchell, 3-4; Central, Oldham, 6-7; Northern, Aberdeen, 10-11; Northwestern, Timber Lake, 12-13; Black Hills, Rapid City, 14-16; Rosebud, Bonesteel, June 25-27; Swedish, Big Springs, June 9-13.

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"You can tell what people are reading by their conversation. The other day a teacher asked a boy in the Sunday-school class who the Four Horsemen were. He replied: 'Paul Revere, Teddy Roosevelt, Jesse James and Barney Google.' Spark Plug was a reality for that lad. If it were not so perfectly obvious we would be tempted to remark that a constant reading of THE BAPTIST will put the marks of a refined taste and a good judgment on its readers.

"Great care is taken to have THE BAPTIST measure up to a high standard of quality in content and elegance in appearance. We do make an occasional typographical error. But hardly ever one so serious as this: a husband had embarked for an ocean voyage. The anxious wife put the following notice in a paper, 'Peter Jones, having gone to sea, his wife desires prayers for his safety.' It appeared as follows: 'Peter Jones, having gone to see his wife, desires prayers for his safety.' This is terrible.

But speaking seriously. Hooverizing was the big idea a few years back. We Hooverized on about everything to win the war. Now physical culturists tell fat people that if they'd Hooverize, they'd find it easier to make both ends meet. Sure enough. But for goodness' sake why do a lot of Baptists Hooverize on denominational periodicals? It seems that they have to save the money for movies, gas and gadding.

"We heard Dr. Wilson Mills tell one time of a newspaper agent who went into the Ozarks in Missouri to solicit subscriptions. On a remote clearing he found an old woman plowing. She had her old man harnessed to the plow. As the agent showed the woman a sample paper, a gust of wind blew it out of his hands and it fluttered toward the plow. The old man became frightened, ran away, tore the harness and broke the plow. Somehow this sounds absurd but it is no more pathetic than for a church composed of 300 intelligent (?) Americans to compose a Baptist church and all told have two copies of their denominational periodicals. Yet there are such churches. And they are not all in the Ozarks either.

"We would like to challenge our people to get the facts. They, the facts, are often surprising. People, too, for that matter. To illustrate: we knew of a boy who did not believe that little woodpeckers had as red heads as old woodpeckers. He sought a nest of fledglings to prove his contention. Seeing a hole in a dead fir tree twenty feet above ground, he climbed up, and as he was about to peek in, a snake poked its head out the hole, tongue wiggling. The boy hit the ground with a thud. As soon as he could catch his breath, he looked up at the snake and said, 'Aha, I surprised you, didn't I?' This proves that we always get more than we bargain for.

"But speaking of bargains. Honestly our offer to send the paper six months for $1 to bona fide new subscribers is a prodigious bargain. When you think of the next twenty-six weeks with its pre-convention number with its Washington, D. C., lore, the summer reading book number, the education number with its college campus flavor, the convention stories from Washington and Los Angeles, the silvery summer and the pensive autumn, all worked over, boiled down, condensed, "Ready to Take"—May, June, July, August, September and October, twenty-six copies delivered anywhere in the U. S. A. for $1: Then come on. Reach for your checkbook now. No Hooverizing when a bargain like this is at hand.

"Listen in carefully now. We want to adjust the microphone and then tell you something. Listen. Want the paper three months free? Honest Injun? All right. Here's how: when you send in your renewal (any rate) for one year, send a NEW subscription at any annual rate, $2.50 single, $2 in clubs, $3 with Missions, and we will give you a FULL THREE MONTHS ADVANCED CREDIT on your own subscription ENTIRELY FREE. Or send us your renewal and two new annual subscriptions and we will credit you eighteen months (one year for your renewal and SIX MONTHS FREE for the reward of sending two new subscriptions). This gives you THREE MONTHS FREE credit for every new annual subscription you send us. Could we be more liberal? This is a brand new bargain. Better get busy today.

"Now we will ask the office boy to step right up close to the sender and recite a

"If all that we say, in a single day,
With never a word left out,
Were printed each night, in clear black and white,
'Twould prove queer reading, no doubt.

And then just suppose, ere one's eyes he could close,
He must read the day's record through!
Then wouldn't one sigh, and wouldn't he try
A great deal less talking to do?

And I more than half think that many a kink
Would be straightened in life's tangled thread;
If one-half that we say in a single day

"Sam Jones used to say that if you threw a rock into a bunch of dogs and one of them went howling away, you knew pretty well which one got hit. Then he would rub his chin with the end of a long bony finger and say with a most gracious smile, 'If I have said anything tonight that I ought not to have said, I am willing that you should forgive me.'

"WCOY now signs off. We'll be on the air again next week."

REV. ROBERT LEITZ is rejoicing at the revival in East Alton, Ill., where he is pastor. He was assisted by Evangelist H. L. Sparks. There were about 100 professions. Seventy-six have already been received into the church.

He: "On the contrary. Everything I have thus far written has been returned with thanks."

May: "Because we don't use 'em as much."

Uncle Jimmy, passing down the hall, heard this audible closing to Jerry's evening prayer (Jerry is a radio fan): "This is Jerry Henderson signing off. Will be on the air again tomorrow night at 8:00, not till mother makes me go to bed. Goodnight, God."

A traveler writes that bamboo, picked in its extreme youth, makes a delicious salad, and we have often speculated on what fine porch-building material some celery would have made if it had been allowed to grow a few days longer. Kansas City Star.

"If society wants more housewives and clergymen, it had better stop laughing at those it has."—George Birmingham.

When he was a minister in Charlestown, Mass., a lady of some social but no other distinction, says Dr. George Gordon, called upon Dr. George Ellsworth, Unitarian minister, saying she would like to join his church, and begging him for statement of his beliefs and that of his religious society. This the Doctor gave with great clearness and fullness of detail. He parted with this hopeful convert from Episcopacy and he never saw her eyes on her again till at an important social function she danced lightly with the Doctor and said: "On thinking the matter over, I concluded to stay in my own church"; the reply to which was: "That is right, Madam! There's no changing the labels on empty bottles." Christian Leader.

Pillars of Gold, by Mitchell Bronk. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $1.50.

The title is no rarer or more beautiful than the sketches, essays and stories that make up the volume. The author is evidently one who lives close to people and who misses nothing worth-while. He has the gift of selection and knows the art of story-telling. In "Pillars of Gold" he brings the reader in contact with Francis of Assisi; he introduces him to his Pilgrim Father; to Jacob Stainer and his violins; to Longfellow as a Christian poet; to the bride Lydia and her ox-cart; to the Rheims Cathedral in its pre-war glory, and other worth-while subjects. It is a varied selection with each better than the last.

—O. E.

The Genesis of Christian Art, by Thomas O'Hagan. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

It is hard to see how within the limits of 170 pages the development of Christian art could be traced more comprehensively and beautifully. The fact that the author is a Roman Catholic and writes from the point of view of his church gives a certain glow to the treatment that enhances its attractiveness. Beginning with the pagan art of pre-Christian times, the story proceeds with the transition to Christian ideas and interprets stage after stage through the Roman, medieval, Renaissance and modern periods, and indicates the contributions of the different racial groups, Italian, Spanish and Germanic. Not the least valuable chapter is the last one in which catalogues are given of the works of the masters in both sculpture and painting in the principal galleries of Europe, giving the name of the work, the master who produced it and the place where it is now exhibited.

Religious Experience and the Scientific Method, by H. N. Wieman. New York: Macmillan.

Professor H. N. Wieman of Occidental College makes a bold attempt with only indifferent success to apply the scientific method to religious experience. In his recent volume "Religious Experience and the Scientific Method" Doctor Wieman trades through nearly 400 pages, using more than 100,000 words to prove something that refuses to yield to the tests which he applies. The scientific method is wrought wonders in the realm of objective fact; but it still remains to be demonstrated that the scientific method is sufficient to explore the region of the subjective self and arrive at conclusions which will have the value of chemical formulae. As there are feelings that lie too deep for tears so there are religious experiences that lie too deep for the scientific method to reach. And yet Doctor Wieman has made a real contribution to a subject which is comparatively new. We heartily agree with his statement: "Just so far as religion loses intellectual standing it will be given over to sentimental gush and the intellectually alert will have nothing to do with it." But the intellectual standing of religion was demonstrated long before the scientific method was heard of because true religious experience has always been demonstrated in the laboratory of common sense. "By their fruits shall ye know them" is a test easily applied and hard to beat.

Our Father, by Anthony C. Deane. New York: Doran. $1.25 net.

One of the series of "Little Books on the Christian Life"—a study of the Lord's Prayer. It is not primarily concerned with the personal and social implications of the Lord's Prayer. It is rather an attempt to set forth the exact meaning of the words used. The author believes this form of words shows a growth from the Lucan statement to the completer form used in Matthew. The treatment falls under six logical headings: hallowing the Name; the Kingdom; doing the Will; tomorrow's bread; forgiveness and temptation and evil. The author is canon of Worcester Cathedral in England.

—G. CLIFFORD CRESS.

The Aim of Jesus Christ, by William Forbes Cooley. New York: Macmillan. $2.

The author is an instructor in philosophy in Columbia University, and he offers this study as "a critical inquiry for the general reader." It is indeed critical and the general reader will have no difficulty in reading it. In fact it is a frankly and thoroughly modernist approach to an interpretation of Jesus and of the Christian religion. The aim of Jesus is conceived to be the establishment of the kingdom of God, the equivalent of a community life permeated by the spirit and organized on the principles of Jesus' teaching. Christianity, instead of holding true to that aim, was sidetracked by

Charming Sketches and Essays

Pillars of Gold

By MITCHELL BRONK

This volume is a collection of sketches of Christian people, places, and experiences. Here is variety—from the home of Francis of Assisi to Jacob Stainer and his violins; from an ox-cart on the way to a New England meeting-house, to Rheims Cathedral before the shells profaned its glory. Here is the charm of a story-teller who has loved what he has seen until he has wooed the wonder and beauty of it into his tale.

Eminently readable, gripping with the charm of a story-teller who himself first has felt the wonder of the tale, these essays carry one on excursions into the realms of nature, biography, and art, into a poet's library and the shop of a master artisan.

Evangelistic Sermons, by J. C. Massee. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.50.

These sermons were delivered in Tremont Temple by Doctor Massee in the course of his regular pastoral evangelistic effort. He seeks to arouse the church to a sense of responsibility for others and to move men to immediate acceptance of the Saviour. These messages reveal the author's conviction that the effective preacher must instruct the mind, arouse the heart, and persuade the will. They are powerful appeals based upon Scripture exposition illuminated by simple illustrations calculated to stir the emotions. A pastoral experience of over thirty years has convinced Doctor

Massee that "a truly evangelistic message has in it a perennial freshness and that an evangelistic ministry is the surest means of attracting and holding the crowd. Sinners, like foxes, like to be chased and always attend where direct appeal is made to them."

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for April 25

THE STORY OF CAIN AND ABEL
Lesson Text: Gen. 4:1-26. Golden Text:
Gen. 4:9

In the story of Cain and Abel we have a primitive and graphic account of the social cleavage which has marked human society from the beginning.

Cain

Cain is a type which has reproduced itself in every generation. The type is anti-social because self-centered. All the elements that break up social cohesion and violate the spirit of brotherhood are found in this man Cain. The story intimates that Cain's approach to God was vitiated by his unbrotherly attitude. His offering was rejected not because the fruits of the ground were unacceptable to God, but because the spirit of Cain was an offense to a social Deity. "But unto Cain and to his offering God had not respect." God was far more interested in Cain than in anything Cain might bring as an offering. If Cain had been right, his offering, whatever it might have been, would have found acceptance with God. The offering a man makes to God usually reflects the spirit and attitude of the worshiper. Cain offered something that had little of the symbolism of sacrifice in it. Sacrifice was not a part of Cain's program except as he could sacrifice some one else for his own personal ends. He sacrificed Abel to advance his own interests and to express his contempt for justice and brotherhood. And when he had done so and was questioned about it, he took the usual attitude of all who have followed in his train—an attitude of sullen refusal to face the facts and of haughty indifference to social responsibility. The story reads as though it had been written yesterday. Personal-liberty advocates repeat the story of Cain and Abel every day. They are the hogs of the highway who violate traffic regulations with impunity because traffic regulations stand in the way of their personal freedom. They are the wet propagandists who seek to bring the prohibition laws into disrepute in order that selfish interests may be served.

Abel

Abel does not figure very largely in this story because he is the victim of his brother's homicidal jealousy. And yet Abel is immortalized in history "Abel being dead yet speaketh." It is better to suffer and die like Abel than to live on like Cain. Of course it would be better to prevent the Cains by some process of eugenics if such a thing is practicable. But in spite of all individual and organized attempts to kill the spirit of Cain in human society the probability is that society will continue for a long time yet to reenact the story of Cain and Abel. Yet with more Abels organized to resist the spirit of Cain there is hope that there will be less occasion for the curse of Cain.

REV. W. L. DEFRIES of Ocean View, Del. is serving a church there as stated supply and is available as regular pastor for some pastorless church.

The Northern Baptist Convention was never planned for this sort of thing and its very structure is not adapted to exercise such authority. A body of several thousand men and women, representing a changing number of churches, is wonderfully efficient as a means of stimulating denominational enthusiasm, but it is not adapted to legislation.

I believe so strongly in Baptist polity and in the independence of the local Baptist churches that I profoundly hope that the denomination will never choose to establish a supreme national judiciary. But if the attempts to give the convention this nature are continued and succeed, I should hope that we should learn lessons from our Presbyterian brethren and adopt a new constitution and a new form of church government. Whether we do this intentionally and wisely, or blindly and by way of denominational controversy, we shall cease to be Baptists.

Let us not be diverted by incidental matters or personal feelings. The great issue before the convention is whether the local church or the convention is to be supreme. If we choose to become a General Assembly we shall gain certain advantages, but we shall cease to be Baptists. If we choose to remain Baptists we must not let the convention become other than what it was planned to be and what it has always been, namely, an advisory body intended to increase our efficiency in common denominational undertakings. If we are to remain a cooperating body of independent, self-governing religious democracies, we must check the present tendency to neglect New Testament ideals.

Ernest Mandeville is quoted as authority for a crushing answer to one of the popular arguments against prohibition. He has written from England: "We hear on every side in America from anti-prohibitionists that the removal of wine and beer from the populace has caused them to become drinkers of hard liquors; but we now are a nation of bootleg and risky tipplers. While it is true that those who drink here imbibe what they get (which happens to be whisky and rum), we should not attribute this result to spirituous drinks as solely dependent upon prohibition, for on the continent of Europe, where one has the choice of any liquor, there is the same marked increase in the consumption of the hard liquors over beer and wine."

Mr. Lothrop Stoddard would probably find it less interesting if he were more convincing in his special theorizings about the races. His latest essay would show that the Jews are not properly a race at all but a rather confused medley of racial stocks and mongrel mixtures from Nordic to negro. Naturally the Jews are not satisfied with his theory and they are charging him, temperately withal, with ignorance of facts in some of the most important of his affirmations. He may be partly right. They may be partly right. Who knows? The Jew of today has descended through long centuries of tangled contacts with many races. Possibly some of the rabbis are right when they say that Judaism today is more a religion than a race.

The Russian Baptist church at Max, N. D. has for many years worshiped in a one-room building three miles in the country. It is a building without basement and is not large enough for ordinary occasions to accommodate the congregations. The Russian missionary, Rev. John Bucknell, has his home at Max which is the center of the Russian colonies. The Russian people have started a fund to erect the much needed church edifice. Secy. Fred E. Stockton reports an increased interest in the Russian work in the state.

Is there a definition of either modernism or fundamentalism that all parties accept as satisfactory? Once we quoted from Dean Mathews that as applied to religion, modernism is the use of the scientific method of investigation. President Mullins, as his meaning is promiscuously caught in the papers, seems to regard religion as outside of the scientific field but as a proper subject for the scientific method of investigation, but he is opposed to something which he calls modernism. The Canadian Baptist quotes from somebody that modernism is "the substitution at every point of the natural for the supernatural." Fundamentalism is conceived in an equally confusing variety of ways. In the face of all this, some chronic label-monger comes along occasionally and declares that anybody who is not either a fundamentalist or a modernist is a straddler. If one wished to play safe and to agree with everybody he would require the power of a chameleon. The only reasonable course is that which we have adopted, namely: Tell us in settled terms and without rant what you mean and we shall tell you whether your label fits us.

Pass the churkey, please. This will be the proper form when a new fowl, bred in England spreads its allurements about the table. It is said to be a cross between the chicken and the turkey. The hybrid is tame, hardy and toothsome. It looks like a turkey but has lost its gobble. California, not to be outdone by any mere Britisher, announces also a hybrid fowl lately invented on the coast. It is called the "kiwi." It is wingless and cannot jump over the fence.

We should like to kiss the Baptist and Reflector. It stands right up in meeting and makes a comparison in editorial and cartoon between Chicago and Tennessee. Tennessee is a gentle Maud Muller standing by the garden fence. Chicago is the Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe, her children rioting about the premises, while she yells for the police. The picture is quite true to life on both sides. But what of the interpretation thereof? Tennessee, as the Baptist and Reflector sees the situation, "finds herself beset on every hand by those who do not understand her mind and hate her ideals;" but Chicago, "instead of being the subject for ridicule and pity, seems to be the object of fear and veneration." Two things in this portrait have the value of news. The first is that Tennessee is generally misunderstood and beset. The second is that Chicago is "the object of fear and veneration" to anybody.

News Notes

Sadiya district in Assam had sixty-nine baptisms in 1925 and eight others were added in the early part of this year. The total church membership is now about 633.

The Union Mission Hospital at Iloilo cared for 1774 in-patients and 3999 out-patients during the past year. The plant includes one hospital and four dispensaries. The total number of treatments was 26,165.

The end of a term of school at Wayland Academy in East China is marked by evangelistic meetings. At the most recent of these, sixteen boys made decisions for Christ and thirteen were accepted for membership in the First Baptist church of Hangchow.

The newest mission field in Nevada is that of Las Vegas where an important Baptist church has been developed under extremely difficult circumstances. The church has a fine property made available by the joint aid of the Nevada State Convention and the Home Mission Society. The first unit of the contemplated church plant cost, with the lot, $8000 and it is paid for. The membership is about forty and the Sunday school has an average attendance of fifty. On Mar. 14, Rev. Francis A. Manderson, formerly of Connecticut and Vermont, who is said to be "desert broke," assumed charge on the field.

There was so great an increase in the number of baptisms on all fields of the Philippine mission last year that a real problem has arisen in the matter of proper instruction in the Christian way of living for the new church members. The problem was partly met when a teachers' and workers' institute was organized as a branch of the theological department of Central Philippine College. It had a ten day session in January. Courses were given in such subjects as church administration and discipline, history of the Christian church, Sunday-school administration and methods, doctrines of the Christian faith, Old and New Testament, and homiletics.

Since Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Henderson first went to Taunggyi, Burma, eighteen years ago, they have seen a town grow up which now is an important mission station and a government center, with about 5000 inhabitants. From this center the missionaries try to reach some 200,000 people who raise rice in the valleys, or wheat, potatoes, onions and garlic on the rich plateau to the south. Through evangelistic work and through the dispensary, contacts are made with this great number of people. Boys from all over the Shan States come to the boarding school. In the school are about 300 boys and girls and about forty boarders. The Vernacular School has some 120 scholars. A girls' school is being built. The fine work of the school for missionaries' children, and the healthful climate of the station, make it possible for parents to keep their children near until they are twelve or thirteen years old, instead of sending them home at eight or ten years.

THE NATION'S CAPITOL AT NIGHT

Folks, Facts and Opinion

One of the most hopeful pieces of news has just come to hand from Massachusetts. High school principals and authorities of state educational institutions in session at Amherst, by a vote of 300 to 9 recorded their opposition to military training in those institutions. School authorities in other states will please take note.

Norman Thomas is authority for an interesting computation. There is a strike in the Passaic textile industry against a proposed cut in wages. Profits in certain of the mills involved for the seven years from 1916 to 1923 amounted to 93 per cent annually. They were distributed in the form of more than 400,000 no-par stock certificates, which are now credited to the capital account and participate in the regular profits. And there are profits even on this swollen capitalization. He says that while these profits were piling up, the average wage of the employees was $17.30 a week.

According to the Texas Baptist Standard, THE BAPTIST is quoted as saying: "So far as known, Park Avenue church has not agreed to accept any form of Baptism other than immersion." Then it quotes a statement in THE BAPTIST from Mr. James Colgate that Park Avenue church will accept people on their letters without regard to their baptism, and will receive believers to membership without baptism. In the interest of precision, note: THE BAPTIST did not mention Park Avenue church. It did say that it knew of no church that proposes to use any form of baptism other than immersion. Everybody knows that some Baptist churches receive persons into some form of membership without requiring them to be immersed. Does any Baptist church authorize sprinkling for baptism?

Measures to improve the distressing economic conditions of the Jewish population in the small towns in the Ukraine being taken by the executive committee of the communist party in Ukraina provide for facilities to help Jews to settle on the land, to grant support to Jewish workingmen and artisans by furnishing them with tools and materials, to draw Jewish toilers, including the small traders, into the Ukrainian industries, to create a system of schools for technical training and to wage a battle against the lawlessness of the administrative officials in the small towns, particularly in the collection of taxes and the imposition of the groundless fines. The plans adopted by the central committee provide for measures to hasten the establishment of Jewish soviets in villages where the Jewish population is in the majority and to carry on medical and sanitary aid in those districts.

The strain between Europe and America is more intense, in the opinion of the Christian World than at any time since 1916. It thinks that the report of Ambassador Houghton has intensified in Europe "the growing resentment against America as the common war-creditor."

Scarlet fever is to lose its terrors. Dr. George Dick of Chicago, assisted by his wife, Mrs. Gladys Dick, have repeated the old story of years of struggle in quest of some boon to mankind, and have at last been rewarded by the discovery of an effective anti-toxin for scarlet fever. It has been approved by the medical profession and will soon be available for general use.

In the disarmament conference at Geneva, which has been set to meet May 18, the United States will be represented by Hugh S. Gibson, American minister to Switzerland, with the following technical advisers: Allen W. Dulles and Dorsey Richardson, Rear Admiral Denis E. Nolan, Brig. Gen. H. A. Smith, Major George B. Strong, Rear Admiral Hilary P. Jones, Rear Admiral Andrew T. Long, Capt. Adolphus Andrews. Allen F. Winslow, secretary of the American Legation at Berne, Switzerland, will act as secretary of the American representation.

Young women who are at all interested in the profession of nursing and wish to know where they may find a desirable opportunity for training under the most favorable conditions, will find what they are looking for in the Annals Bulletin of the Mounds School of Nursing, Earl Street at Indian Mounds, Paul, Minn.

Those who insist on the outlawry of war as a condition precedent to international organization for peace may take note of report that Finland has completed a system of agreements with her Scandinavian neighbors for outlawry of war. These agreements provide that "all disputes between signatories must be submitted to arbitration, and in cases in which direct diplomatic negotiations prove futile decision of the Permanent Court of International Justice is accepted in advance as final."

While declaring its rejection of evolution as we understand the word to be used in current scientific discussion, that is, in what it calls "false evolutionism," the Moody Bible Institute Monthly advises legislators who attempt to ban evolutionism from the schools "to seek the aid of conservative scholars. It finds that 'not a few lawmakers in need of instruction on the subject of evolution,' as instanced by 'the deluge of all references to theories of evolution from the textbooks.' It thinks that extremes in the dispute are 'wide of the mark,' and concludes: 'Let us appeal to reason, to thoughtful argument, to calm logic and limit ourselves to statements of fact.'

One of the sorest spots of race friction in the world is in certain British colonies in Africa. An English woman recently described conditions observed by her in Durban, South Africa, in a section in which the Indians outnumber the whites. She says: "Yet they are not allowed a library nor an English church, and the tram-cars they may ride in the rear seats only and these on the top deck! Even a woman with babies to plod up the stairs in a moving car. If these two rear seats are filled, then all the rest of the car is empty, she must climb down again and wait for the next car. Whether the man is a barman, an editor, a rich merchant or an educated clergyman—if he is an Indian he is a 'coolie.' To these white people here, there are only two races in the world—white and colored. . . . Our white race. They should rule the earth; all the gold and the diamonds and all the lovely things of the earth should belong to them."

Among the various angles of the prohibition controversy, comes Wm. H. Anderson of New York, who from the position of state superintendent for the Anti-Saloon League was sent to prison on a charge of mishandling funds of the organization. Now he is again free and is demanding an investigation, promising some ugly revelations about the administration of the league. It is a New York question which may be left for settlement to the church people of that state to whom he appeals.

Promotional activities in addition to Brounager meetings have included pastors' institutes during January and February in Illinois, East Washington, Montana, Michigan, Colorado, Kansas and Oregon; twelve Bible and mission conferences in Massachusetts in February; laymen's banquets in South California, Arizona, Colorado, Michigan and Indiana; deputations of young people from several important centers; and strenuous field work by J. C. Killian, L. Kelly, G. A. Huntley, Mrs. Carrie Robinson and Frank Peterson.

Westward the course of empire takes its way." It impinges on the Philippines. A deadlock is reported between the legislature of the islands on one side and Gen. Leonard Wood, the governor, on the other. Col. Carmi A. Simpson is sent out to look things over, perhaps to supersede General Wood. What then? The nearest hint is that of Walter Wilgus, news correspondent at Manila: "Unless the governor general's powers are strengthened further and the legislature's powers are circumscribed it is believed there can be no improvement in the situation." The program is an old one. Rehoboth tried it.

Protestant Episcopal bishops to the number of 112 urge the senate to reject the treaty of Lausanne because it does not afford protection to minorities under Turkish rule, particularly the Armenians.

A Turkish woman has been appointed to the position of judge in a Turkish court. Like Turkish women generally, she hates polygamy and threatens to give to polygamous men the limit of the law.

The schedule of dates for the closing of the fiscal year of the Northern Baptist Convention will be as follows: Books of the local church will close and remittance to the state office will be made Apr. 30; books of the state offices will close, with remittance and reports to the board of missionary cooperation, May 3; national societies will report to the board on their direct receipts May 7; books of the board of missionary cooperation will close May 10.

Henry Ford calls attention in the Dearborn Independent to an auxiliary of the prohibition movement that really wise prohibitionists have often observed and utilized. He says: "Only the exaggerations and excesses of the 'wets' can put across a 'dry' campaign. If this had been a sober country, we should never have had prohibition. If the liquor business had been fortunate enough to have had brainy leadership, the question would probably have been settled in a different manner. But the liquor business did not have brains in its leadership, and has none now, which, together with an increase in 'wet' gullibility, makes the finest kind of support for the 'dry' program."

The Chicago Baptist Missionary Training school now presents to the denomination an equipment and faculty second to nothing in the land. And in furtherance of its purpose to serve the denomination to the utmost, it has planned a summer school of striking advantage to a great number who might otherwise receive no training at all. That which adds to the summer offer is the welcome the school extends to those who may not have the educational qualifications necessary to enter the regular courses. Any Christian worker, any one desiring to do better service, will be gladly welcomed to this four weeks' course, Aug. 2-30. And here is an added attraction. Hitherto only girls have been admitted to the Training School; but the summer course is open to both men and women. Dr. W. H. Geistweit says of it: "Rich experiences await those who avail themselves of this great opportunity. Send into many a church group the hearty slogan of Chicago: 'Let's Go.'" Wise ones point out the direct and succinct style of the business man as being highly desirable for the preacher. For an instructive sample read what a business man writing about farm prices has to say, as follows: "The science of economics cannot escape the evolution-

Anthracite coal operators propose to shift the cost of the last coal strike from their own pockets by adding it to the selling price of coal. At least it is so represented by Congressman Fish of New York, who has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation. He ary concept and avoid metaphysical sterility. The historical and inductive methods must be given place. If we look at the present situation of American agriculture from the historical standpoint, we cannot be so easily reconciled to its shrinkage in importance and the decrease and threatened deterioration of its personnel. Our urban industrialism is historically a sequence and consequence of the colonizing and conquering movements which founded American agriculture." Any preacher who wishes to try the style has permission.

What religious questions concern college students? An interesting light is thrown upon that inquiry by Dr. Allyn K. Foster's report of the queries put to him by the students at Colgate. The list follows. "Why do the fundamentalists oppose the doctrine of evolution? Is another reformation in religions impending? Are the miracles of Christ superstitious exaggerations or actual occurrences? What is the idea of Christ as expressed by Rabbi Wise, and what effect will it have upon Judaism? Is it necessary to believe in the virgin birth in order to become a follower of Christ? Does the enterprise in psychical research of such men as Sir Oliver Lodge offer evidence of value for the survival of the personality? Will Christianity be able to maintain its hold if it fails to put the dynamic force exemplified by Christ into the economic life of the world?"

says that the increase in price will cost the consuming public $75,000,000. Consequently there is more talk of public ownership of the mines.

Here is an epic for you. In the room of the Broad street station of Pennsylvania railroad, President W. Atterbury presented Heroic Service medals to twenty-four employes of company and recited the deed of heroism performed by each. Every man risked his life to save somebody from drowning, from being crushed by train or from some other tragedy. Some the men had lost their lives and their relatives received the medals assigned them. The story is one for boys to

The corner stone of the Lieutenant White memorial neighborhood house religious education center of the Bible Seminary in New York was laid May 1. It stands on a plot 90x100 feet and will be eleven stories in height. It will contain offices, clubrooms, classrooms, reception rooms, social parlors, auditorium, library, dining room and kitchen, gymnasium with shower and lockers, and student dormitories. The building will be in every way modern and particularly equipped for its purpose as a neighborhood house.

News is news, whatever the facts be. For instance, one of the Baptist papers conveys to its readers the following information: "Even the Northern Baptists—think of it in this day—doubtless have a serious contention at Washington over the question as to whether baptism is by immersion or sprinkling, pouring, etc." It may be proper to think of the case of a religious paper passing to its readers a state having so little basis in fact as that of the impression it may produce in minds.

The Newton Theological Institute held the biennial conference, March 1, at which many of the pastors of New England churches were guests. The topic was, "How can our church strengthen the moral life of the community?" Professors Donovan, F. Vaughan, Berkeley, and Bradbury of the seminary read papers covering the ground; and there were supplementary addresses by Prof. Theodore G. S. of the University of Chicago, Prof. Kirtley F. Mather of Harvard, Hon. G. Parsons, probate commissioner of Massachusetts, and by prominent ministers and laymen. The consensus of opinion was that the war had brought with "a prophylactic morality"; moral standards must be stated in terms; that a true morality cannot be made by laws or established by external authority, but built up from within ideals, not inhibitions, determine character; and that the Christian religion is the greatest generator of ideals and spiritual energy. The church must feel obligation for the uplifting of community morals as strongly as for individual salvation. Religious education, too, must be more radical in its aim for a regeneration which shall itself in higher personal standards and the upbuilding of a more Christian society. In Jesus is found the Ideal makes for a radical reconstruction of individual and of society.

Where Fellowship Begins and Ends

FELLOWSHIP must be voluntary or it is slavery. The problem for every person and group is to define the field in which voluntary cooperation with others is possible and desirable. In religion such cooperation can exist only upon some common faith and purpose. Christian fellowship whether in its universal aspect, in the local church or in more or less general associate and cooperative relations, can exist only where the parties to it agree in some principle of Christian truth or some phase of Christian duty that binds them willingly together. No man has a right to permit any organization to commit him to teaching or to a program that he regards as false and wrong. But no group of people ever did agree religiously in everything. Consequently any organization for Christian work can legitimately affirm only those common agreements to which its members consent. In all other things it must grant them liberty. It can commit no member to any form of faith or action to which he is unwilling to commit himself. All of this reasoning is elementary and it flows directly out of the Baptist principle of soul liberty. Apply this principle to the problem of creating a cooperative organization among Baptists. What is the field of agreement in which they can find the basis for cooperative fellowship? It comprises their characteristic principle of soul liberty with its corollaries; the historic principles of evangelical Christianity; the baptism of believers only (and in more recent times by immersion only); and the world-wide dissemination of the gospel. But around this field there is among Baptists a margin of disagreement in which convictions of individuals and groups are just as firm and vital as in the field of agreements. They disagree about the form, value and use of creedal statements; about the mode of inspiration, the historical origin and the quality and range of authority of the Bible; about the millennium; about whether baptism is a church ordinance or a signal of personal faith; about the terms of admission to the Lord's Supper; about the principles of interpretation that shall be applied to the scriptures; about the relations between science and religion; about the hypothesis of creative evolution; about the extent to which education and social service shall accompany efforts for general evangelization. This enumeration of either agreements or disagreements is suggestive rather than technical, but it will doubtless be generally recognized as true to the facts of our denominational life.

If the Northern Baptist Convention is to serve as an organ of cooperative fellowship for the whole Baptist body within its territory its success in realizing its ideal is clearly conditioned by both the agreements and disagreements among the Baptists within its field. It must serve to express in some satisfactory way their common agreements and must impartially leave them free in their disagreements. Perfection in carrying out such a program cannot be expected but good faith in it may reasonably be required. The convention is built and adapted to serve such a program. It opens its doors of fellowship to all Baptist churches within its territory upon no condition except their willingness to cooperate. It leaves every church free to determine for itself all matters that belong to it as a church. It accepts as valid and sufficient all of the methods and agencies which the churches have created to express their identity and their fellowship. It offers to all groups among them on equal terms the opportunity and the means for propagating not only those principles common to all Baptists, but also those beliefs and methods of work which may be preferred by any group. It admits the principle of selection in organization, administration and designation of funds and fields, on a scale as broad as the varied life of the denomination, with no restrictions on any group except those of equality and comity. It commits no Baptist to any proposal for which he is not willing to assume personal responsibility.

With such an agency of cooperation available, fellowship among Baptists of the North begins where the will for fellowship begins, has a field for its expression as big as the world, and ends where the will for it ends. Such is the Northern Baptist Convention. Such let it continue.

The Chicago Conference

A CONVENTION may be a mere assemblage or it may be a real coming together in unity of spirit. Its sessions may end in cooperation or in exasperation.

THE BAPTIST has perseveringly disapproved the custom of holding factional conferences to further partisan interests. It has advocated open and deliberate conferences in which all parties in interest should come together and consider how to arrive at a more perfect common understanding. We have believed such a program to be possible. We have believed that the barrier between the "conservative" and the "liberal" wings of the denomination can be so far surmounted by goodwill and understanding as to permit full cooperation in the enlarging service which the Baptist denomination is called to render to the world.

At last our faith has been rewarded by a notable instance which may have much to do with determining the spirit and outcome of the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington. The conference held at the Chicago Beach hotel, Chicago, Apr. 13, was an inclusive assembling of representatives of all sections of territory and all major shades of opinion that have been involved in the recent controversies among the constituency of the convention. Prominent modernists and equally prominent spokesmen for the Bible Union were present and participating. The matter that called for consideration was one of the most keenly divisive of all of the questions that have agitated the convention; namely, the motion so to amend the by-laws of the convention as to limit representation in the convention to Baptist churches of a particular type. Discussion was entirely free and frank. At the close of five hours of deliberation, the members of the conference found such agreement upon a recommendation to be presented to the convention at Washington that they were ready to vote. The roll was called. Each man stood up and announced his vote, with unvarying unanimity.

The recommendation proposed covers essentially that urged by THE BAPTIST ever since the question has been under discussion, namely, to avoid any attempt on the part of the convention to restrict the autonomy of a church. Perhaps any further comment should be withheld until the convention shall have taken action.

Dr. James Whitcomb Brougner would be the last to wish to turn such a happy outcome to his own credit. But it is he who called the conference. He presided over its deliberations. He largely guided the process of adjustment by which the agreement was reached. It is the culmination and close of his great nation-wide campaign for denominational cooperation. Let him wear the honor he has earned.

Week by Week, Month by Month

MORE Baptist churches than ever before have adopted the practice and are forming the habit of remitting their missionary contributions at the end of every month. Such churches, having come to the conclusion that the experiment is worth trying, find by experience that it is entirely practicable. They find it more satisfactory than the former practice of remitting in a lump sum at the end of the year or otherwise as the local treasurer may see fit.

Good reasons for the practice of monthly remittance lie at hand. The standard of weekly giving on the part of individuals to the church treasuries is now generally accepted. Reasons are that such regular giving enables the church to meet current bills as they become due, enables it to calculate its income with some degree of certainty as a basis for its budget, and enables it to avoid either a damaging retrenchment in its work or the added cost of borrowing money at the bank. Such reasons apply with equal force and on a larger scale to the missionary funds of the denomination as a whole, and to the monthly remittance. The habit of payment within thirty days has come to be a standard in business accounts generally, to which the churches are expected to conform in the payment of their local bills other than weekly salaries. Expenses of the general societies go right on whether the money comes in from the churches or not, and they must be met. If the money fails to come from the churches the only way to get it is to borrow it. Borrowing means the payment of interest. Interest is paid out of the mission funds. It takes money that is needed on the mission fields. Thousands of dollars are so diverted every year. If the churches, without adding a dollar to the budget they now carry, would send in every month the amount due for the month, they would save that interest and make it do service on the mission fields. That is, their promptness would itself be worth thousands of dollars to the denomination and to the missionary cause.

This is good business, good religion, good training and good sense. When will the rest of the churches begin it?

Peal on, Bells of Hope!

IF THERE is anywhere in this world anything more quickening to faith and hope than the Convention Peal, a serial prospectus of the coming convention of the B. Y. P. U. A. at Los Angeles, we should like to see it.

One of its features of more than ordinary interest is the way in which the new spirit of youth is coming to a free self-expression. During a good many years there was in the Baptist Young People's Union, a certain amiable docility, a species of giving assurance and hostages that our young people would at least introduce no disturbing proposals and ask no embarrassing questions to cause uneasiness among the elders. They were perfectly nice, but they did not exhibit any striking initiative any clear and far-seeing vision of the changes going on in the world, any bold meeting of new situations and new responsibilities with new programs. Some of us had misgivings. Would the new vision of youth which is rising in the colleges and universities find no fertile field among Baptist young people to spring to life under its radiance?

The Convention Peal brings the inspiring answer. The music of the new time rings in every note. Our young people are as nice as ever, perhaps as docile, but they are going to ask some questions on their own initiative and in their own way, and they are going to insist with perfect politeness upon answers that satisfy their own sense of religious, intellectual and social values. Here, on the first page for instance, is the announcement under a leading head that the Rev. H. H. Bingham, distinguished "peace crusader," will speak on the outlawry of war and the establishment of world peace. In another column there is announced a series of eight quizzes on "What's Wrong with the World?" Not less interesting is the provision for three simultaneous forum periods of three hours each to consider the world problems of peace, industry, race and law observance, with assurance that inquiry shall be free and that there are to be no preempted findings.

These are leaders, but there is plenty more. This series of prospectuses constitutes a tabloid intellectual and spiritual emancipation and education. Hail to the new note, and let the Peal ring on!

Locarno and the League Will Live and Function

Recent difficulties within the League of Nations have made more remote the prospect of America's entrance. But perhaps this is not a misfortune. It compels the nations of Europe to consider to more definite purpose the necessity for finding their salvation in a demilitarized, disarmed and federated Europe. That status if they can achieve it will be worth more to the world and them than any help that America can give. The League still lives, and the Locarno agreement still stands as a pledge of neighborly security among them. Let them extend and deepen their amity. Europe united, tranquil and free from imperialistic policy can get whatever it desires from the United States, from cancellation to cooperation and disarmament. There is still room for world friendship.

Debs Goes on in a Country Where Debs May not Vote

Twenty-five years ago public ownership of the great industrial units was an anathematized heresy of Eugene Debs. Since that day he has managed to enjoy the comforts of the federal prison at Atlanta, and at the present time there is an effort to induce congress to restore his citizenship. But what has happened to his heresy? In New York there is a great struggle going on for the ownership and control of the 5,250,000 potential horsepower of flowing water in the valleys of that state. Shall that vast natural resource be owned by private corporations or by the state? Governor Hughes with champions the policy of state ownership. In his attitude he was preceded by former Gov. Chas. E. Hughes who eighteen years ago proposed "the progressive development of the water powers of the state under state ownership, control and maintenance." In Chicago also there is a promising approach to a solution of its interminable transportation tangle by a plan providing that "the city shall be given actual financial as well as legal power to purchase." As for Debs, let's say; we had almost forgotten him and his primitive heresy. It seems that he still makes an occasional speech. So runs the world away.

There Is a Curious Linking of Commercialism and Dishonesty

Mr. William H. Pelham, prominent business man, writes the Sunday papers an article on "The Place of Jesus in the Life of a Business Man." Frankly, as a Christian, he accepts the Jesus test of business ethics, and in the course of a running comment, he gives a brief list of sayings and acts of Jesus which, as "revelations of the character of God have revolutionized the thought of the world." Among five such instances of equal value he puts second on the list the following statement: "Jesus drove out the money changers from the temple, declaring, 'My house shall be called a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves,' thus forever protecting the sanctuary of God from commercialism and dishonesty." This collocation of commercialism with dishonesty as twin evils whose presence converted the temple into a den of thieves is startling. What is commercialism? It is specifically the business of trading. In the whole range of definition in the dictionary, the word carries no sense of moral turpitude. And trading in the sense here plainly intended, is buying and selling for gain. Why should Jesus attach odium to such activity, and why should a successful business man so understand him and accord full approval? The Lord's prayer covers the whole requirement of economic life. Does it leave commercialism out? Here is a big field for fundamental Christian thinking.

One Reason Why India Is a Subject Nation

Papers report serious rioting at Calcutta between Hindus and Mohammedans, with fifty or sixty deaths, hundreds injured and the establishment of martial law. Friends of India everywhere will read the report with special regret, because the inability of the followers of those two religions to get along together harmoniously is regarded as one of the chief reasons why British domination is necessary in India. The surest road to freedom for any people is to build up among themselves a stable and tranquil community life. Upon any other basis even independence may prove a curse to a nation. Any nation which can be divided can be conquered. Even the Philippines will win independence at last if they can hold together.

President Mullins Announces His Discovery of the Seventh Axiom

About twenty years ago the Baptist part of the world welcomed with joy a new book by President E. Y. Mullins on "Axioms of Religion." The book was recognized at once as having given to the Baptist principle a new setting, meaning and dignity. But a few readers recognized the fact that the argument had not been carried through to its true and full social conclusion. This lack is now perceived by Doctor Mullins himself, and in a series of articles current in the Baptist Times he says that in recent years he has added to the original six axioms a seventh, "the civic axiom"—"The sovereignty of the state resides in the citizen." If the sovereignty of the state be conceived as broadly as the realities of social living require, this axiom is equivalent to the principle of a democratic community life, both political and industrial. Thus the Baptist cycle is completed from the competency of the soul to the ideally perfect democracy. Within that cycle lies the culture which the Baptist movement represents and is giving to the world.

Men Are Learning That Religion Is Life

Some years ago the bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church managed to start a laugh at their own expense by declaring officially that the tariff is a moral question. A few days ago a letter came to this office suggesting that editorial consideration be given to "the spiritual significance of public ownership." Bishop Temple in England advises his colleagues that "the housing problem is essentially a religious problem." The Baptist Times of London, referring to religion in the home, reminds its readers that "it is very difficult for a woman to maintain interest in a home located in a place that for twenty years has been condemned as unfit for human habitation." Lilies may spring out of the mud, but a lily bespattered with mud is hardly to be admired. From inmost motives to utmost environment, true religion strives to make life whole, and every question that affects human life in this world is a religious question. Prohibition is already naturalized in the churches. Other reforms are thronging their doors.

We're Off for Washington

BY CRAIG STANTON

WE'RE off! Some of us seasoned travelers perhaps, but others of us with the thrill of excitement that comes to those who do not travel every day; a little catch in the throat at the thought of leaving dear ones and familiar places for even the brief space of convention week, and a prayer in our hearts for those momentous days ahead of us which may mean so much to the Baptists of today and to those through the long years ahead who will catch the lighted torch their fathers pass on to them—and may it be an undimmed torch!

Whether we come from the North or the West or the South one thing is certain we cannot escape, unless we deliberately close our eyes to it, the enchanting panorama that nature everywhere along the route spreads out for us. Those who come from the Pacific coast have the rugged, awesome, soul-lifting scenery of the Rockies to inspire them. These as well as those from the nearer West look forward to the stop in that magnetic giant of the Middle West, Chicago—no longer a crude, sprawling child but becoming rapidly a creature of magnificent beauty. If there are only hours to spare we should walk up Michigan boulevard, toward twilight if possible, to catch glimpses of the great towers of the Buildings of Beauty etched against the sky, half veiled perhaps by pearly gray clouds—of smoke it is true, but lovely nevertheless—and if it is sunset time and a clear day the gray may be turned to rose color; bejeweled the towers are if it's after candle lighting time. To the right is the Art Institute and away to the South end of Grant Park is the Field museum and the new Stadium; to the left is the Public library. But this is a mere, "Meet Miss Chicago"—to get acquainted with her and really love her takes time.

With Lake Michigan at our left, we leave Chicago to plunge into Duneland, where the Sand Fairies have worked for ages building high those gleaming pyramids and sphinxes, with a deep blue or the turbulent gray, sometimes white capped, of Lake Michigan in the foreground. We may go on through Detroit, that beautiful and orderly city; to Buffalo with its wonder sight of the world, Niagara Falls; through the grape vineyards; glide between gigantic hills rising, emerald garbed, on either side of us, as we come to the north of the Catskills—wooded, many of them are, with early summer sounding forth her riotous color trumpets. To Albany; then along the Hudson river—"surpassing even the Rhine in scenery," said one world traveler—with the Catskill outlined against the sky beyond the river; if it's a day with thunderheads clustering near them we may even hear the roll of the nine-pins or the echo of Rip Van Winkle's rusty firelock. The Palisades of New Jersey, New York City, that mecca of the world. Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love—the Cradle of Liberty—Baltimore with its Star Spangled Banner association—Annapolis—the Potomac Valley, perhaps the loveliest spot of all, and, nestling between the hills of Maryland and Virginia, with its domes and heaven-pointing spires—Washington.

Or we may go on through the Hoosier state, producer, among many wonders, of literary lights and artists; Ohio, the presidential state; smoke-veiled, vibrant, energetic Pittsburgh. Through coal and coke cities; through territory telling Indian tales, on amid a panorama of the loveliest of mountain, river and valley scenery, through country made historic by our struggle during French and Indian war days, for independence, and for union. Through Maryland across the Great Divide into West Virginia touching at Harper's Ferry where the Civil War was born and where Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland hobnob, with the Shenandoah River emptying into the Potomac. Yes, there is scenery here. We cannot miss it in whatever direction we look for hour on end; the only trouble is we have not eyes enough to see on every side at once. And with the beauty once again we thrill at the thought of the making of our country as one historical spot after another is passed.

We're off for Washington—let's make it all inclusive—for those who do not take the trip in body can go in spirit; they can lift up their hearts in prayer during those days—May 25-30, 1926—of Baptist-making history. A united, praying Baptist body during those days, whether met in the nation's capital, our convention city, or in their homes—what may they not bring to pass?

Come, every one! We're off for Washington!

The Nation's Capital—Our Convention City

BY EDWARD O. CLARK

ALL roads lead to Washington, the 1926 Mecca of Northern Baptists. Well has it been called the "city beautiful," the "city of magnificent distances," of widening vistas and leafy avenues, of stately buildings and historic monuments; the city which is realizing in the twentieth century the great dream of our first president, George Washington, and the far vision plans of its first designer, Major Pierre Charles L'Enfant. It is this city, the capital of our country, that is to be the convention city this year.

Many years ago when Washington was but a "lodge in the wilderness" with bypaths cut through thick forests, streets, and stepping-stones through swamps for gentlemen, Tom Moore, the Irish poet, facetiously wrote of it:

"This embryo capital where Fancy sees,
Squares in morasses, obelisks in trees,
Which second-sighted seers e'en now adorn
With shrines unbuilt and heroes yet unborn."

His lines, written then to twit the pride of patriotic Americans, appear to have been but a prophecy of the city that now is. For the squares are here throbbing with life; the majestic obelisk lifts its lighted peak far above the treetops; the sacred shrines, even the heroes then unborn, have come in fulfillment of his verse.

Baptists have honored themselves, in choosing to come to the nation's capital for their convention. A pilgrimage no other than sacred ought every delegate feel the journey to be; for the education of true Americans is not complete until they have come under the spell of the city on the Potomac. What sermons there are in these memorials of marble and granite! What messages in the quiet grandeur of the parks and historic spots! The city, combining as it does the beauty of art and architecture with the thrilling story of the nation's progress through the years, is set to kindle the heart and quicken the pulse of patriotic men and women. In the early days it was written: "A traveler might come to wonder or to criticize, but if he lingered to partake of the city's bread and salt, he forgot all except the beauty of its setting and the hospitality of its friends." Today it is not different. The city has an enchantment by day and a witchery by night possessed by few cities of the world.

The Union station is the first significant building to be seen as one enters Washington by rail. Built in 1907 at a total outlay of twenty million dollars, it stands today in immensity exceeding the area of the Capitol building itself. The great waiting room or central pavilion was planned in a measure after the Triumphal arch of Constantine. Its indirect lighting effect, its statuary and embellishments in marble, its special suite for the reception of the president and foreign dignitaries, its spaciousness for handling the tremendous crowds of inauguration days, its thirty-three track terminals, all combine to make it the great gateway of the capital.

From the station entrance beneath the great arches, the first real view of the Capitol building and its shining white dome is obtained. In the plaza immediately in front of the station are three graceful flagstaves, while in the center, water from the fountain plays in the pool of the Columbus memorial, the significant work of Lorado Taft.

The Capitol must be seen to be appreciated. Volumes have been written about it, and still its story is largely untold. Washington himself, amid impressive Masonic services, laid the corner stone in 1793. After its partial ruin by fire in the war of 1812 it was rebuilt, but its massive dome weighing four thousand tons, and its bronze statue of Armed Liberty was not completed until 1865. "America's most imposing structure" is the general verdict passed upon it today. At night, with powerful searchlights playing upon the white dome, it glistens like a fairy palace in the darkness, and is a sight which cannot fail to inspire.

The massive bronze doors of the main entrance depicting incidents in the career of Columbus and the discovery of America is the work of Randolph Rodgers. Within the great rotunda are nationally famous paintings, four of which are by Trumbull, and in the top of the dome, 186 feet from the floor, is Brumidi's "The Apotheosis of Washington." To the left of the rotunda is Statuary hall, formerly the meeting place of the House of Representatives and famous also for its echo features. The story is told that John Quincy Adams paused once in making a speech in the house, and the speaker bidding him proceed, he replied in irate tones, "How can I proceed when this gentleman in my rear constantly interrupts me by repeating my words?" Statues of famous men, from the several states, and one woman, Frances Willard, now occupy this hall.

Passing on through the corridor, to the new south wing is the present Hall of Representatives, in the galleries of which the public may enjoy the proceedings. To the right of the rotunda comes the Supreme Court chamber, formerly occupied by the Senate. Here great dignity and solemnity are apparent in the very atmosphere. The Senate chamber is in the north wing and the galleries here also invite the public's inspection of the nation's greatest deliberative body.

The congressional library, eastward across the park from the Capitol, one cannot afford to miss. Built of New Hampshire granite in Italian renaissance style, its exterior appearance, while stately in architecture, gives little hint of the wealth of exquisite design and workmanship which the interior of the building contains. One is speechless in this wonderland of polished marble floors, balustrades and stairways, of wonderful mosaics and multiple arched ceilings. A new respect for the genius of man to conceive and to execute such rare beauty in stone takes irresistibly hold of one. In addition to the three million volumes on its fifty miles of shelving the library contains numerous historic papers, rare prints, famous early volumes, autograph letters of celebrities, and, what is not to be missed, the original documents of the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence.

While the Capitol with its great dome dominates the city and was so planned by Major L'Enfant when he made it the center of the city's radiating avenues, nevertheless, the simple shaft of the Washington monument located on an eminence about a mile westward, presents a point of attraction so lofty and so majestic as to be visible from all parts of the city, and contributes greatly to that subtle charm for which Washington is justly famous. Erected to the memory of the "father of our country" it rises to a height of 558 feet and is said to be the tallest shaft of masonry in the world. From the top of the monument a panorama of the city, of Arlington and historic Mount Vernon may be obtained. This panoramic view defies both camera's eye and artist's vocabulary to depict and to describe. It must be seen to be appreciated. At night the tip of the monument, illuminated by searchlights, stands outlined brightly against the darkness of the starry skies like a cheery sentinel in some fairyland. Again it may be viewed from the steps of the Lincoln memorial when its full length is reflected downward in the silvery waters of the reflecting pool.

The Lincoln memorial, west of the monument in direct line with it and the Capitol, is a fitting shrine to the memory of the great emancipator. It is of too recent construction for its fame greatly to be spread abroad, yet without question the Lincoln memorial is destined some day to be accounted among the most fitting and most truly significant monuments ever erected to the memory of a man. It is the work of Henry Bacon, and is in the form of a Greek temple with a colonnade of 36 Doric columns, one for each of the states of the Union in Lincoln's day. Thus is symbolized Lincoln's chief contribution to his country in the lines of Webster: "Liberty or Union, now and forever, one and inseparable"; by the thirty-six states the entire nation then is represented.

Within the temple is the heroic statue of the martyred president, seated and gazing with thoughtful eyes toward the Washington monument and the Capitol. A rapture of awe mingled with reverence takes possession of one as he views this great work by Daniel Chester French. The thought comes that Lincoln himself would not have desired a more fitting tribute than this temple enshrines. On opposialls great bronze tablets contain his immortal Gettysburg speech and his historic second inaugural address with the significant lines, "With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in..." Above the bronze tablets are mural paintings by Jules Guerin portraying "Emancipation" and "Reunion." One cannot depart without feeling that the ground on which he stands here is holy ground.

THE UNITED STATES TREASURY BUILDING

Numerous other inspiring sights, beautiful buildings and historic places beckon one on. There is the Tidal Basin surrounded by three thousand Japanese cherry trees and the monument reflected on the placid surface of the water; the White House, with its paintings, its presidential sets of china, its noted East room; the historic octagon house occupied by President Madison while the White House was being restored in 1815; the Treasury Building, accounted one of the most perfect examples of neoclassical architecture; the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, the place where our money is "made"; the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, and the New National Museum of Natural History, all replete with relics of great historic interest, such as "John Bull," one of the first locomotives, and rare specimens from the natural world, including the Roosevelt collection; the Lincoln Museum, the house in which Lincoln died, with its more than three thousand mementoes of Lincoln.

Convention hall, where all sessions will be held, is another place of vital interest. This spacious building, only recently completed, has a seating capacity of six thousand and with its fine acoustics and by means of the microphone the delegates are assured that they will hear and enjoy the sessions exceptionally well. The great pipe organ will be available on several occasions, and this feature together with the services of the nationally famous song leader, Mr. Percy Foster, guarantees enthusiasm and inspiration to the nth degree. There will not be a dull moment in the entire program if "our Percy" has his way, which he will. Below the auditorium on the ground floor is one of the most spacious exhibit rooms of any convention hall in the country.

In the vicinity of Convention hall other noted buildings stand—the Corcoran art gallery with its world famous collections of paintings and statuary; the American Red Cross headquarters, and the Memorial Continental hall; the beautiful Pan-American building, perhaps second only to the Library of Congress; and the National Academy of Sciences.

Historic Mount Vernon, the homestead of the first president, is situated down the Potomac twenty-six miles from Washington, and contains besides the old homestead and many relics, the tomb of the Washingtons. A trip to Mount Vernon in homage to him who placed all Americans in everlasting indebtedness, will not be regretted. Enroute there one may visit the Arlington cemetery with its tomb of the Unknown Soldier, historic Alexandria and Christ's church, where Washington was wont to worship.

The Great Falls of Virginia, beautiful Rock Creek park with its rock-bottom fords and picturesque wooded valleys, and the National Zoological park are not without their thrills and delights to those who appreciate nature at her best. The Rock Creek park cemetery is known for the statue entitled "Grief" by St. Gaudens, one of the world's great works of art.

The city itself is unsurpassed in splendid hotels, fine stores, wide residential streets and avenues lined with trees; circles, at street intersections with numerous monuments in stone and bronze; these all combine with the natural beauty of the valleys and parks, the stately buildings, the historic places, the memorials and the Capitol, to make Washington a rarely beautiful city. To this, the convention city, a pilgrimage for Northern Baptists will be not an event only but an epoch.

THE LINCOLN MEMORIAL AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Baptist Churches of Washington

BY EDWARD O. CLARK

THE Baptist churches of Washington exemplify the sentiment of John Oxenham,

"In Christ there is no East or West,
In him no South or North,
But one great fellowship of Love
Throughout the whole wide earth."

While people from both the North and South come to reside here, when they unite with one of our churches they become cosmopolitan in spirit because of the fact that all of the churches are affiliated with the work of both of our great conventions. The Columbia association of Baptist churches, functioning as a state convention, apportions its outside missionary funds equally between the North and the South. It is comprised of twenty-seven churches, two of which are located nearby in Maryland and they represent a Baptist enrolment of over 14,000.

The broadening effects of this arrangement the Baptists of the capital city greatly enjoy. Their missionary program is world-wide; they hear with enthusiasm noted speakers from both North and South; and they have the honor from time to time of entertaining both conventions. A few years ago, the Southern Convention was royally entertained, and now with equal enthusiasm all of the churches are cooperating to give a no less royal welcome to the hosts from the North when they come in May.

The Columbia association functions through an executive board made up of representatives from the churches, and a smaller executive committee, of which Dean William A. Wilbur is chairman.

The association has its headquarters in the Woodward building and has as its executive secretary, Dr. H. W. O. Millington, under whose leadership there have been splendid cooperative achievements and a number of new churches established, of which mention will be made later.

There are two Baptist homes belonging to the association, the ladies' home, and the children's home, both of which institutions are flourishing and filling a real need in their respective lines. The women of the district are organized in what is known as the Woman's Baptist Missionary association, of which Mrs. O. E. Howe has been for some time the able president. The women are active in all phases of missionary education, stewardship, children's work, White Cross and in many other lines.

Foremost among our churches, both in membership and influence, stands Calvary church with its 3000 members, its overflowing Sunday school, and other thriving activities, so ably led by Dr. W. S. Abernethy, and his director of religious education, Rev. Homer J. Collier. Calvary was the church of late president, Warren G. Harding, and others from his cabinet, including secretary of state, Charles Evans Hughes, were also members. This church is also of historic interest to the convention because of the fact that within its walls during the "May anniversaries" of 1907 under the inspiration of Dr. Samuel H. Greene, for forty-years its pastor, the first steps were taken to organize the denomination in the form of its present great convention. Now, after an interval of ninety years, the denomination returns a vastly enlarged convention, and to a greatly changed city.

its name indicates, the First church is the oldest of our churches, organized in 1802. With a fine edifice, located on beautiful Sixteenth street not far from the White house, it well deserves the name of "the mother of them all." The church has given unstintingly of its its members and encouragement in the organization of new churches, especially among them being Bethany and Emanuel churches. Dr. Samuel J. Porter has served this church as pastor a year, and by his strong, original and classical sermons and work in conducting an aggressive ministry in the city. A layman of this church is known from Maine to California among the young people is Mr. John Owen. He is a leader not without even in his own church and city. The Second church, organized in 1810 in the southeast section of Washington, likewise enjoyed an historic career. One of the greatly changing conditions around it, this church has established a mission in the beautiful Lincoln section, and is looking eventually to move to this location. Rev. Ellis C. Porter has been for four years the energetic pastor. The membership is over together with Calvary and First, the church occupies the downtown section of the city. For long years this church was served by Dr. J. J. Muir and has enjoyed a constant and steady growth. It is formerly known as the "E Street" church. Two years ago Doctor Muir resigned. He has enjoyed for several years the distinction and honor of being a member of the United States senate, and continues in this capacity, and as pastor also, thus serving the congregation and bringing honor upon himself well. As dean of the Baptist church in the city, no occasion is complete without his presence. Rev. Thomas O. Jones was called as assistant minister in the closing years of Doctor Muir's pastorate, and he is now carrying on the work at Temple as interim pastor with commendable zeal and fortitude.

The Fifth church, located southwest, is another of Washington's outstanding churches and has been ably ministered for about eighteen years by Dr. John E. Briggs. Under his friendly and evangelistic ministry the church membership has grown to more than fourteen hundred. The dedication recently of the new Sunday-school building, the Darlington memorial, in memory of Judge J. J. Darlington, affords a splendid and adequate plant for the 1700 scholars enrolled.

In the oldest portion of the city, in what is known as Georgetown, is the West Washington church, of which Rev. C. A. Austin is pastor. During the two years of Pastor Austin's ministry this church has made splendid progress especially in Sunday-school lines and among the young people. Its membership is well over the 500 mark and growing.

One of the coming larger churches is Metropolitan, whose pastor, Rev. J. C. Ball, has faithfully served it for twenty-three years. Under his ministry this church has grown from a membership of 362 to its present enrolment of 1275, the third largest Baptist church in the city. In 1911 the present beautiful edifice, seating 1400, was erected, and plans are now under way for an enlarged Sunday-school building. Metropolitan, situated not far from the capitol, is famous for its large and enthusiastic audiences.

The Wisconsin Avenue church in the northwest suburbs is, after many years of struggle, coming into its own. In 1924 the basement of what will be a substantial stone church was built. With its new pastor, Rev. W. B. Falls, there is every indication that this church is on the threshold of a great advance movement.

In the Northeast suburbs of Washington is the Brookland church. For four years Dr. O. O. Dietz has been its aggressive pastor, and with the assistance of the association this church has conducted a Sunday-school mission in Woodridge. Plans are maturing for a beautiful church school edifice to be located about midway between the present church and its mission, which will then be merged with it. The membership of this church is 400.

The Anacostia church, situated across the eastern branch of Anacostia river, has as its pastor Rev. C. V. Van Der Linden. With a rapidly growing community, and under the leadership of Pastor Van Der Linden, this church, after some years of struggle, is beginning to reap a well-earned harvest.

Grace church, located east of the capitol, has had as pastor since 1906 Rev. F. W. Johnson. During these years the membership has grown to 725, and a new and commodious edifice has been erected. Grace church stands as one of the prominent churches of the city.

The Maryland Avenue church located in the northeast section is ministered to by Rev. J. W. Lawson. This church was organized in 1891, and while not large in numbers is made up of a zealous group of workers.

One of the most modest appearing men of the Baptist brotherhood is the present moderator of the association, Rev. J. W. Many, who for twenty-nine years has been pastor of the East Washington Heights church. The church has enjoyed a steady growth under Pastor Many, who is greatly beloved by all of the Baptist people of the city.

The First church of Hyattsville, although situated in Maryland, is affiliated with the Columbia association. Dr.

THOMAS O. JONES, PASTOR TEMPLE CHURCH

B. P. Robinson, pastor of this church for a year, has begun an aggressive work in this growing Maryland town. Recently a new mission Sunday school was started by the church under his leadership.

Some years ago the Calvary church, in honor of Mr. Amos Kendall, a member held in great esteem, and at one time postmaster general in Jackson's cabinet, began a mission which later became the Kendall church, located in the southwest section of Washington. Rev. C. P. Ryland has been the pastor of this church since 1924. Under his leadership the church has made marked progress in securing needed equipment and enlarged quarters for the Sunday school. The present membership is 442.

The Centennial church, so named because it was organized in the year of the one hundredth anniversary of Baptist work in Washington, is situated in the northeast section and has been served for twenty years by Rev. E. Hez Swem. Behind such sensational topics as "What Can You Do with a Stubborn Woman?" Pastor Swem packs old gospel messages, which, judged by the large evening congregations, are not without their effectiveness.

Unique among usual church chronicles is the story of Rev. Hugh T. Stevenson, who has been serving Bethany church as its first and only pastor for a period of twenty-one years. During these years the church has grown in numbers and personnel, an attractive Sunday-school building erected, and plans for a new church edifice are being developed. The membership is 534. Pastor Stevenson is well known in the city outside of Baptist circles and especially through his weekly exposition of the Sunday-school lesson in the Saturday evening edition of Washington's leading newspaper.

Immanuel, the memorial church to religious liberty, is fast nearing completion of its interior, and will be one of the attractions of our Baptist people when they come to Washington. It is situated on an eminence at Columbia road and Sixteenth street, and its beautiful marble tower is an inspiring sight from all sides. Although one of the younger churches, Immanuel has had exceptional growth and enrolls today more than 1000 members. Under the deeply spiritual ministry of its pastor, Dr. Gove G. Johnson, it has been led into constantly greater things in the promotion of kingdom endeavor.

The Congress Heights church, across the river in a developing community, was organized sixteen years ago. Dr. E. E. Richardson is the pastor; under his leadership a new church building was erected a few years ago. Its membership is over 300.

CHARLES V. VAN DER LINDEN, PASTOR
ANACOSTIA CHURCH

The Fountain Memorial church, also situated across the river, is forging ahead under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. W. J. Hubbard. This church is active in all phases of work and conducts a fine vacation Bible school every summer.

The Petworth church, Rev. Henry J. Smith, pastor, is one of the younger churches in a fast growing northwest residential section. The fine limestone and brick church edifice and Sunday-school house was erected under pastorate of Rev. Paul F. Langhorne. During the two years of Pastor Smith's ministry the net gain has been well over a hundred in membership, and the church is flourishing in numerous ways.

Washington Baptists are proud of one Italian Baptist church in the city known as the Church of the Redeemer of which Rev. M. C. Marseglia has been the faithful pastor for ten years. Its membership, while not large, is concentrated to support the untiring efforts of the pastor, and its Sunday school boasts an almost 100 per cent attendance.

The churches organized by the Columbia association in recent years include Takoma Park, Chevy Chase, Highland Silver Springs (Md.), and Wisconsin Avenue. The Takoma Park church, called Rev. William Earle LaRue as pastor, and he has led it in the erection of a Gothic stone structure, and has developed a thriving church organization and auxiliaries. In six years the church has attained a membership of 234. Chevy Chase church, in one of Washington's finest suburbs, was organized in December, 1923. In January of this year a fine chapel building was dedicated and its membership numbers 117. The work of this article was called as its past year and a half ago. The Silver Springs church, while located in Maryland just across the District line in a growing suburb. Rev. Stephen C. Curran was called to this church last year and already there has been an increase of thirty members, a parsonage built, and now plans are maturing for a Sunday-school building. The Highland church called Rev. Newton W. Simons last fall and under his leadership, at this fast growing section prospects for strong church are very bright. Wilson Avenue church, likewise a project, has Rev. V. M. Hobbes as pastor for about a year, and its growth is taking on this field.

The brotherhood of Baptist people in the capital city is friendly in spirit and helpful in cooperative endeavor.

The Devotional Life

The Courier

"Joseph was in Egypt already."—Ex. 1:5

BY GEORGE H. MORRISON

IT made all the difference to the sons of Jacob that Joseph was already there. It changed the whole complexion of their lives. When they went down to Egypt in the famine they ran no inconsiderable risks. Who could tell if Pharaoh would be gracious? Might they not be looked upon as spies? And it made all the difference to them, and to their errand, and to their future lives that Joseph was already down in Egypt. He was there in the high ordering of heaven. It was the will of God which brought him there. He had risen to his proud preeminence in spite of everything that man could do. I think that in the quiet of after-days, when the sons of Jacob brooded on their journey, they would waken to the wonder of the forerunner.

Never Alone

There is often a similar awakening when we brood upon the journey of our lives. We grow conscious, when we come to places, that Somebody is there already. When our fathers made the tour of Europe they generally did it in their carriages. And they would send a courier on ahead to have things in readiness for their arrival. It seems to me that when we view life steadily something of the same kind becomes apparent—there is, as it were, the Courier on ahead. God is behind us; he besets us there. He follows us right along the way. He is with us, in blessed sweet companionship, closer than breathing, nearer than hands or feet. But how often, when we arrive at things, fearful lest we be not equal to them, Joseph is there already! Like Hagar, we are in the desert, and God opens our eyes to see the well. It is not the well he opens—that was already there—it had been making music for a million years. We reach the desert, come to the hour of sorrow, are faced with trial and sufferings—and lo! our Joseph is already there.

We might think, for instance, of the little infant when it is born into the world. It comes, carrying nothing in its hand. It has no language but a cry; it is impotent and ineffectual. Cast it upon its own resources and it dies upon the threshold of its being. But the mystical thing is that when a child is born, into the circumstance of space and time, Joseph is there already. There is the nurse with her ministry of tenderness. There is the doctor with his cunning hands. There is the mother with her mother-love—all prepared for that appointed moment. Every time a little child is born it is as if the voice were heard from heaven, "I go to prepare a place for you." The strange thing is that some, who know all that, cannot believe it of the other world. As if the awakening in the realm beyond could be less wonderful than the awakening here. The cradle, the little garments by the fire, the clasping hand and the full breast, are God's sacrament in space and time of love's sweet preparations in eternity.

Again, in one of its innumerable aspects, this is the meaning of the Incarnation. It means that when we take our journey through the world our Brother has been already there. We are often tempted, when we think of God, to wonder if he really can appreciate—he, the Eternal, dwelling in high heaven, "above the smoke and stir of this dim spot." But God so loved us that he sent his Son among us and now, whatever things we have to face, we can do so with quite a new assurance for Joseph is already there. Are we tempted? He was tempted bitterly. Are we weary? He was all forspent. Are we plunged into the depths of gloom? He was sorrowful even unto death. Have we to bear a very heavy cross? The cross he bore was heavier than ours. Have we to face Gethsemane? His feet were there. We lift our eyes to the Eternal—can he appreciate our weary road? But who is this walking along that road, only a little way ahead of us? He knows it all, for he has faced it all, up to the hilltops and down into the grave. The infinite comfort of the Incarnation is—that our Joseph is already there.

This great truth, if we would only grasp it, is rich in spiritual and moral values. It helps to illumine many a disappointment. Take that carriage-party, doing the tour of Europe. There is some city they are bent on reaching. It has haunted their dreams, as famous cities do, and their eyes are eager to gaze upon its battlements. And then the courier comes riding back. They must avoid it. There is plague in it. You see the courier saves by disappointing. I feel profoundly that this is true of life. Our Courier often saves by disappointing. He bars the way. He blocks the road for us. We never reach the city of our dreams. And then, out of the heart of disappointment, we catch the gleaming of another city, built of God, eternal in the heavens, with the river running through the street.

A Fearless Future

Or think how that truth inspires us, when the way is difficult and we are fearful. Here is a woman who has to go abroad, and she has never yet been fifty miles away from home. She has to cross the sea, and reach some distant outpost, and in dark anxiety she dreads the prospect. But if the man be there whom she is going to marry, awaiting her, with everything prepared, how powerfully that confirms her trembling heart. Now carry that thought out into life. Wherever we journey, Christ is there before us—preparing for us, longing for us in love, ordering everything against our coming. How shall we fear tomorrow or the future, or the dark grave, or the eternal morning, if for us (as for the sons of Jacob) Joseph is already there?

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topics for May 16

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meeting Helps" will be to the following books: "Modern Discipleship and What It Means," by Woods; "The Man Nobody Knows," by Barton; "Twelve Tests of Character," by Fosdick; "Gates and Keys to Bible Books," by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible," by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church," by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers," by Miller; "God's Dynamite," by Lerrigo. The entire books may be had from the American Baptist Publication. A few others may be added later.

Most of you are, of course, familiar with the lives of the pioneer missionaries, and you have probably read many books on the lives of these men. However, to refresh your memories, perhaps you will want to send to the literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation for their Pioneer Series leaflets on Moffat and Livingstone, William Carey, Adoniram Judson and Robert Morrison. If you want to bring in more than these, perhaps you can look up under the last name of the missionaries in an encyclopedia to get information or a further bibliography. You can get the leaflets all for ten cents.

Then in order to know more about missions today, the magazine Missions will be of great help to you, since it always contains interesting information about at least one missionary station. "The Book of a Thousand Facts" will also be of help to you, and more than likely your pastor has a copy of this. If he has not, you may secure this free of charge from the literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation.

In presenting this lesson, have a few of the members of your group dress in the costume of the countries which are to be discussed. For instance, one could dress in a Burmese costume (for these costumes, you may receive help from the public library); another could be dressed in a sort of African costume; another in Chinese costume, etc.

In meeting, each one of these costumed persons could tell the story of the missionary who came to them and of his work among them. As each one finishes, the leader, or an uncostumed person, could tell of the work being done in that particular country today.

After all have told the stories, and the young people have received a glimpse into mission work today, all should join hands and sing "Lead On, O King Eternal."

Some Advice

In Round Robin, a little bulletin put out by Mr. Vodra, director of religious education for East Washington and North Idaho, appear some "suggestions on achieving success" in the Young People's Society. Point 6 of these suggestions is so good that we are passing it on, with the hope that you, too, will consider it worthy of attention. Here it is:

"Remember that no program works automatically. Every program must be dynamic in terms of personality. The program for Sunday night is not on paper or in the Leader. The program is what comes from the hearts, minds, spirits of the persons who take part. The written program is only the 'blue print' of the structure to be erected during the meeting. If you only read the 'blue print' you will never build the structure called Christlike character. Building of any kind involves labor, toil, thought, study, practice, prayer. DON'T criticise everybody and everything else until you have done all you can do to make the 'blue print' (outline of program given in the Leader) a real living structure. The Leader is well named. A real leader is 'one who knows the way, who keeps ahead of the people, and is able to help them to work out their own salvation.' A leader cannot do my work for me. I must work. Don't turn down the Leader until you have turned up your sleeves, spat on your hands and turned up some physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual sod. Don't knock, push occasionally. A good push often prevents a bad knock. The Leader is full of fine suggestions from cover to cover, but the suggestions will not jump into your mind and heart except by way of the inviolable law of your own self-activity."

For the Beginner

*Are you a leader—a young people's leader?
And say—have you got the dumps?
When the work comes atrodding
And you spend time in prodding
Do you feel all in the Jumps—jumps—jumps—jumps?*

Well, if you have and do, you are probably experiencing some of the same pangs which young people's workers over the country have often felt. When you first became president or committee chairman, or pianist—did you know just what would be expected of you? Did you know how to go about doing the things which seemed to do themselves in former regimes? Did you feel as many people have felt?—"Well, I'm at this job. I don't know anything about it." Did you know where to turn for help—and did you receive that help?

If a beginner were to have his social play "host" to an associational rally, would probably be quite wrought up, at best that is a difficult task. Unless person has had experience in help with such an affair, he is at a loss know what to do to make the thing over."

Realizing that, the department of religious education of the Michigan S. Convention has issued a mimeograph "pamphlet with purpose" on "The Young People's Rally." In this pamphlet young leader is given a definition of "rally"—a definition which will arouse interest and make the reader see the necessity for such gatherings. Several pages show how the associational officers might go about setting up the meeting, determining on a program with purpose and selecting and securing participants. Quite a few pages tell about planning local arrangements—organizing the committees and getting them to work harmoniously—boosting public financing the cost, and putting on the finishing touches with songs, yells, regalia and a really spiritual appeal.

And the nice part about this pamphlet is that most of the material is written by the young people of the state themselves—those who have had experience in these things and know what problems are liable to confront the workers.

With such a leaflet and guide in hand, an inexperienced young person could plan very easily and adequately go about planning and preparing for a rally. Items which might possibly come up are treated in this pamphlet. It is detailed and practical. For example, on page under "Planning Local Arrangements" we read: "Reception Committee. At least three young people should serve this committee in greeting the delegates on the night of the rally, providing for wraps, and being sure to help everybody to feel at home. These young people are acting the part of hosts and should extend the glad hand to all who come. The ushers and a special social committee may be appointed as part of this committee if desired."

Michigan deserves congratulations; the young people of the state not only appreciate the efforts put forth for them. They are sure to profit by these efforts.

If you want to see a copy of this pamphlet (which every young people's worker should have), send ten cents to Rev. Morgan L. Williams, 368 C. National Bank Bldg., Lansing, Mich., and he will be glad to send you a copy. Having seen the pamphlet, you will immediately want to "put on" a rally.

Love ever gives—
Forgives—outlives—
And ever stands
With open hands.
And while it lives—
It gives.
For this is love's prerogative—
To give—and give—and give.

Boys and Girls

April Showers, Please!

Dear Boys and Girls:

Wanted, letters from you, showers of letters this month telling me what you think about "War." Write exactly what you really do think—is it right? Why? Is it wrong? Why? Would you like to fight? Why? For the best letter from a boy there will be an award, and another award for the best letter from a girl. Meanwhile you may enjoy reading some of these speeches by boys on the same subject. Remember, by exploring your mind on this subject and by writing me, you become at once a member of the Explorers' Club. Send your letters to Miss Margaret T. Applegarth, 21 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y.

Shall Boys Play War?

THIS is how I feel about it now. The grown folks have always told us only the fascinating parts about war, and so we grow up thinking it would be lots of fun to be a soldier—to wear a neat uniform, to march while a band plays and flags fly, with danger and glory and decorations and everybody thinking you're a brave chap. It's all this we grow up believing, so we play at war and nobody stops you. But it's only decent to look at the other side of war, the sorrow, the confusion, the ruin, the death it causes. You wouldn't like a fellow to play at murdering folks or robbing folks or hurting folks. It's only the abnormal degenerate boy that does this. I don't see why we should play war; there are plenty of sporting games which develop fair play and justice and team work, so why choose to play something which needs unfairness, injustice and every-man-for-himself? I guess the world needs cooperation more than anything else. It won't get it if a whole bunch of boys grows up thrilled with the idea of wearing a uniform and shooting somebody in another uniform. Between individuals this is murder; between nations it breeds hate. Even in play, therefore, isn't high sport for a truly patriotic boy."

Substitutes for War

YOUNG fellows all want adventure, and they think enlisting as a soldier will give it to them. But there are all sorts of physical adventures which set out to help people instead of setting out to kill them. I'd like to call your attention to the adventuresome life of a fireman, for instance, or a lifeguard on the coast, or a forest reserve patrol, or a rum-runner guard. There are great points of high courage to be done in time of flood and earthquake and disaster. There's air mail service, needing constant courage and skill. And show me anything more daring or patriotic than guarding our shores from rum-runners, with high seas on and reckless men who will stop at nothing! There are policemen who need hourly courage, all this in the purely physical realm of adventure. But you boys all know there are also explorers and sailors, there are doctors who go out to lonely, isolated stations

Naming the Baby

(This poem was written by Mrs. H. H. Twining for our page, after she had seen the adorable baby on the cover of the February number of the "Pictorial Review." The poem reached us too late for our Valentine number, but you will enjoy it now and send your thanks to Mrs. Twining for wanting us to have it.—M. T. A.)

I'M thinking of a baby, dear,
Who came into our home this year.
He had no fame, he had no name,
But he was welcome just the same.
His eyes are blue and golden hair,
We'll handle baby with great care,
Soft little hands, dimpled and white,
He knows not the left one from the right.
A round little body and twin chubby knees,
As nearly alike as two little peas.
He tips the scales at just about nine,
This wonderful boy, so rosy and fine.
He's not very big as all must know,
But in this big world there's room to grow.
What we're wanting just now is a name,
We'll leave it to him to win his own fame.

Now for a name we planned this way,
That those who called on the babe each day
May write one name down, their best you see,
Then from the list choose what 'twill be.
Now when our friends heard all of this
Each wanted their name upon that list,
And thus the list grew and it grew and grew
'Till hardly we knew what we would do.
Unless he has a name, you see,
He on the Cradle Roll can't be.
And so I think we ought to say
Just what the name will be today.
Then came the superintendent dear,
Who loves all babies, far and near.
She read the list all down the line
And then wrote down, just "Valentine."
That name just suits us all today
And we have nothing else to say.
So on the Cradle Roll it goes—
A better name nobody knows.

among wild tribes, there are missionaries to savages, whose daily lives are a round of bravery. There are scientists whose adventures are thrilling, discovering wireless to bring the world nearer together rather than guns to shoot the world further apart. Developing appreciation between nations is a stiffer job and needs more grit and cleverness than settling things by fighting, so grow up to be a diplomat if you want to! But I tell you this, making a warless world is the biggest, stiffest substitute for war we boys can adopt, and I urge you to do it. The world needs heroes of peace! Be one, yourself!"

What Causes War?

"IT seems to me that fear and suspicion cause war. One timid citizen says to another timid citizen, 'Such and such a nation could nearly wipe us off the map if she ever fought us. I'm afraid of her! I don't trust her!' The other timid citizen becomes more timid still. Then each timid soul tells his family, and they tell the next-door neighbors; and the first thing anyone knows all sorts of rumors and hatreds and fears and suspicions are deep in the hearts of men. All the king's horses and all the king's men can't drag out those hatreds and fears. They're in to stay! God must be awfully sorry to see us greedy and grudging and revengeful toward his children who live in other lands. I think it's a fine thing to have boys and girls have stories about children in other lands, for when you know a good deal about people there's no sense in being scared by them. I'd like to say about war—Never again!"

Dear Miss Applegarth:

Something tells me I ought to write you and the other boys and girls about something our church did. We are Methodists, but my grandmother is a Baptist and I live with her this winter, so that is how I read your page. We decided to pack a box to send to the negro school down south, so we had a pancake supper at our church, with "Aunt Jemima" pancaking and the "Cream of Wheat" man serving them. The "Gold Dust Twins" were there too, and then we all sang negro spirituals and other plantation songs. Then our pastor gave a nice talk about how wonderfully all the negroes have made progress, and granny said you tell all this to Miss Applegarth for she is always telling about negroes on her page. So I am telling you, you see. I know I have a warmer feeling in my heart since that pancake night.

Baptists Confer and Agree

AT the invitation of Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, in association with Messrs. J. F. Herget, F. E. Taylor, C. S. Shank, John Snape, C. A. Brooks, W. H. Geistweit, M. L. Wood, J. F. Elwell and M. P. Boynton, a conference of about seventy-five Baptists, representative of all shades of opinion within the Northern Baptist Convention, was held at the Chicago Beach hotel on Apr. 13, 1926, to consider the issues raised by the amendment to the convention by-laws proposed at Seattle, in the light of the recent report of the law committee. After an entire day of frank discussion, in which nearly all present participated, and all angles of the matter were thoroughly considered, the following resolution was formulated by a committee appointed by Dr. Brougher as chairman of the conference, consisting of A. L. Abbott, chairman of the Convention Law Committee, as chairman, Drs. J. C. Massee, J. C. Hazen, H. W. Virgin, and J. F. Herget. This resolution was unanimously adopted by those present, every member of the conference voting on an individual roll call in answer to his name. The names of those so voting (the entire membership of the conference) are subjoined alphabetically to the resolution.

"Believing that the Northern Baptist Convention ought to devote its energies more completely to increased efficiency in its efforts for the evangelization of the world, in order that the day may be hastened when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, we recommend that when the amendment proposed at the convention at Seattle is presented for consideration at the Washington convention, it be laid upon the table; and "That the executive committee be requested to present to the Convention for adoption the following standing resolution:

"The Northern Baptist Convention recognizes its constituency as consisting solely of those Baptist churches in which immersion of believers is recognized as the only scriptural baptism; and

"The convention hereby declares that only immersed members will be recognized as delegates to the convention."

District of Columbia

By HENRY W. O. MILLINGTON

WASHINGTON is at its best in these spring days. Just now our greatest attraction is the Japanese cherry trees, which are in full bloom, and which make a display of beauty so striking in every way as to attract tourists from all over the world. There is probably no other such display of floral beauty anywhere in this country. This attraction is in marked contrast with the sordid influences so manifest in the nation's capital during a session of congress, and at the present moment these influences are especially in evidence in connection with the propaganda to discredit the eighteenth amendment, and to secure the repeal of the Volstead act.

Washington churches of all denominations observe the Lenten season more particularly and generally than almost anywhere else, and that has been especially true this year. Many of our Baptist churches have carried on evangelistic services, while others have had special meetings with a view to Bible instruction and the quickening of the spiritual life.

Our churches are busy making ready for the coming of the Northern Baptist Convention. Dr. W. S. Abernethy, chairman of the general committee, has recently been elected president of the Federation of Churches of Washington.

A memorial service was held on a recent Sunday morning at the West Washington church, Rev. C. B. Austin, pastor, in honor of Mrs. W. H. Haycock, who died in 1925, having been a member of this church fifty-six years. At this service, letters and telegrams were read from many friends. A bronze tablet, presented by her husband, was unveiled, and appropriate addresses were made by the pastor of the church, and Dr. J. J. Muir, chaplain of the United States senate.

An occasion long to be remembered by the women of the Calvary church was the annual meeting of the woman missionary society, held in March. At this time, the treasurer, Mrs. H. B. Wadley, who has faithfully performed the duties of her office for twenty-five years during which time more than $40,000 has passed through her hands, was presented, by Mrs. George Otis Smith, with a "chest of silver" containing twenty-five silver dollars, as an expression of appreciation from the society. The luncheon following, at which over 100 sat down, was arranged to do special honor to Mrs. Mazie Skinner Kendrick, prominent in missionary work in the district, who was retiring from the presidency after fourteen years of service. "The glow of pink furnished by the spring flowers and other decorations, symbolic of the glow of our love for our retiring president," said Mrs. E. Mason, newly elected president, who, in a most gracious manner, acted as toastmistress, making her introductions in verse. Mrs. W. A. Wilbur responded to the toast, "A Look Backward." Mrs. W. S. Abernethy spoke on "The Present", and in closing, in her own beautiful way, presented Mrs. Kendrick with "casket of jewels", in which, she said, "the jewels were old although the casket was new"—the gift proving to be a leather-covered copy of Mrs. Montgomery's New Testament, generously interleaved with bank-notes, as an expression of the love and appreciation of Mrs. Kendrick's many friends. The past Doctor Abernethy, spoke on "A Look Ahead", taking occasion also to pay his tribute to Mrs. Kendrick for her long service in the church as well as in the missionary society. Other gifts, accompanied with flowers, were presented to Mrs. Kendrick and Mrs. Waddey, by Mrs. Waring E. Evans. Mrs. Kendrick responded to these tributes in a most feeling manner, thus adding to the spiritual uplift of the occasion. Ending in a lighter vein, she declared that the obsequies were the most beautiful she had ever attended. "The floral pieces," she said, "are exquisite, and, as usual, the remarks—while excellent—are not true."

Colorado News and Notes

BY FRED B. PALMER

CONVENTION President Fred W. Freeman and the writer attended the Chicago conference April 13th and 14th.

The First Baptist Church of Fort Collins has extended a unanimous call to Dr. B. F. Caudill of Huntington, West Virginia. Rev. A. C. McChesney is now pastor at Boone. Rev. Jas. H. Davis, having reached the retirement age, closes his work the last of April with the Home Mission Society. At this same time Rev. Geo. L. Boroughs, Colporter Evangelist, closes his work to accept a pastorate at Oakland, California. Rev. C. N. Alden of Boulder is now located on the field at Nalsenburg. Rev. Luther E. Floyd is now acting pastor at Littleton. Dr. W. F. Bingham, after ten weeks in the hospital with typhoid fever, was able to return to his home Easter Sunday.

The writer dedicated the fine new $40,000.00 edifice at Pueblo, East Side, Sunday morning, April 18th. Rev. Joshua Gravett of Denver spoke that night.

President E. H. Rhoades speaks Sunday morning, April 25th, at the First Church, Denver, and at Galilee that evening. A city-wide reception will be given to President Rhoades Tuesday evening, April 27th, at the Broadway Church, when more than three hundred will be present at the banquet table. At this time E. H. Braukman of Denver, who has just returned from a world tour of mission fields, will also speak.

Our financial situation looks more hopeful every hour. We have a credit of approximately 70 per cent of our State quota up to April 10th. Present outlook leads us to hope that Colorado will be on the honor roll among the Conventions paying 100 per cent of their State quota. The Mexican church, Denver, has paid 220 per cent of its quota. The Crowley church, less than two years old, in the midst of a building campaign, sent in its full quota with enough more to pay 10 per cent interest for the year. The Berkeley and Judson churches, Denver, have each paid $50.00 in excess of their quota. One good layman in Broadway Church, Denver, has given $1,000.00 additional to put the church over the top.

Philadelphia Letter

BY ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

THE Social Union met for its second dinner on Thursday evening, Mar. 18. As usual it was a gala occasion, the "Who's Who" among our Baptist churches being well represented. Mr. Ray Hudson is president this year and in his customary fashion is on the alert for novel details that will add to the interest. The speakers were Prof. E. B. Pollard of Crozer who gave a fine résumé of Baptist history hereabouts, and Dr. John Snape of Cleveland. We are always glad to see Doctor Snape and hear him. We count him as one of our boys though he is so traveled. His message on getting together was a timely one and given in just the style that an after-dinner occasion demands. It need not be added, I think, that it takes more than a solid talk to arouse an audience that has just eaten itself into a semi-comatose condition.

On Tuesday evening, April 6, Dr. A. Ray Petty was formally installed in the pulpit of the Baptist Temple. It was a distinguished as well as a large audience of Baptists of the city that greeted him and certainly a fine company of brothers that gave the addresses. "Dan" Poling of New York, a close and long-time friend, gave the sermon; James H. Franklin gave the charge to the church; C. Wallace Petty to his brother. Wm. D. Gherky, Harold Stewart, Herbert Agate, George S. Young had other parts in the program. Mr. Milton Gehris, chairman of the board of deacons, presided.

In his charge to his brother Dr. Wallace Petty remarked that he did not very well see how he could offer anything new. To charge meant three things at least—to attack, to accuse and to admonish. All these things had he done to his "kid brother" from his youth up. Probably his successful career was the direct result of this brotherly care. Doctor Poling brought two unusual texts together in his address, Nehemiah's word, "I am doing a great work and cannot come down" and the word about Jesus, "He came down from the mount and stood with them in the plain." The thought was that Jesus came down for service but neither he nor his followers can come down from the lofty place of spiritual purpose and character. Jesus came down from the mount of ecstasy to serve the people. He could not come down from the cross of agony to save himself.

In March the monthly open house of students and young people in the Chestnut Street Baptist Church was International day. We wish that fond parents from all over the world could have looked in upon that company of 150 young people as they ate together and talked of events that had a world significance. There were fifteen foreign lands represented. Thirty-eight young men and women belonged to these lands. There were also twenty-seven student volunteers present. Mr. William B. Liphard of New York who has recently returned from a trip to the Orient, gave a telling address.

I have no particulars of the Easter services in the various churches. The good brethren are very modest and seem to feel that to say anything would be unduly to exalt themselves. If they could only see the host who will peruse these lines, who have direct interests through the past or from friends who are here in the life and conduct of these churches, they would understand that such reports are a service. I don't like this light under a bushel. I am jealous that the Philadelphia light should be up high where it belongs. We have been very busy and many good things have happened. It is too bad I cannot say more.

The following items about Easter Sunday have been painfully gleaned. Dr. Charles H. Dodd came back to his people and preached for them. Doctor Rapp, advertised as the "want-ad pastor," because he was discovered by that means, gave his farewell sermon in Jersey City on Easter morning and his introductory sermon at the Logan church in the evening. Dr. A. Ray Petty preached to audiences that filled the Temple both morning and evening. They are delighted and enthusiastic over their new pastor. The musical service on the afternoon of Good Friday in the First church was heard by an overflowing au-the Sesqui centennial, let no one imagine that it is not in our minds here. It is the constant subject of thought and plan. It is really going to be a great affair. An amount like $14,000,000 can make a dent even in the conditions of South Philadelphia. Great buildings are rising like magic. Exhibitors are being dience. Every report from the old First, by the way, stresses the size of the audiences that regularly gather there to enjoy the music and hear the timely, alert messages from Pastor Rose. Another pastor came back. They say they can't come back, but Doctor Dodd did, and so did Doctor Main and preached in his old pulpit in Memorial church. The Tioga church, however, was one that had a sorrowful Easter. The news had just come that they were to lose their pastor, Harold Stanley Stewart, to the Oak Park church in Illinois. He will be a loss to all our work here. Nevertheless it is a promotion to a larger work and we are happy for him.

Just because I have said nothing about heard from all over the world. The vast stadium is practically done. No one will make a mistake to plan to see Philadelphia next summer or better, on the climate's account, in the early fall.

West China Letter

BY JOE TAYLOR

IN THIS letter I want to lend my pen—or, to be exact, my typewriter—to the International Anti-Opium association, with headquarters in Peking. That body secures the latest and most trustworthy statistics on the growth and sale of opium in China. Through the missionaries living all over China, it collects data every year and then publishes a report that may be taken as reliable.

There is on my desk just now one of these reports dated May, 1925. That is as late as one can expect for some months until the report for 1926 comes from the press. If I had time and space, I should like to give a number of facts about this nefarious traffic from several of the provinces, but it may be better to deal with Szechuan, the province in which the West China mission has its work. Without further ado, then I will quote from this veracious report

Szechuan

"This province being a law unto itself is an example of military official domination. Opium cultivation is excessive and increasing, and everything is subordinated to the raising of army funds. 1924-1925 season's planting is heavier than the previous one, and the detailed reports cover every section of the province.

"Szechuan opium finds its way all over the north and center of China. It is of excellent quality. In November, 1924, General Liu-Chen-hsun, commander-in-chief of the 3rd army of Szechuan, established an opium monopoly with twelve stringent regulations drawn up by magistrates, opium cultivation promoters and the opium inspection office, of which the main items were: all land to be taxed $5 a mou (Chinese acre, one-sixth of an English acre); Chung-king Hsien must devote 100,000 mou to opium cultivation and these fields to be allotted out of eighty-four villages; every village shall submit a statement of the number of mou planted with poppy; 10 per cent of taxes to go to collector of opium revenue; punishments for false statements as to amount of cultivation; police and soldiers to protect planters; all taxes to be paid twenty days before harvest. This general in February 1924, sent 1,500,000 ounces of opium to Hankow on board the S.S. Anking for the purchase of arms.

"South Szechuan—Suifu—I have traveled this year as far as Yachow on the western border and northward through Chengtu to Sungpan and south of Suifu as far as the Yunnan border. From what I have seen with my own eyes, I say the planting and use of opium has never been worse than now. In Suifu there are 3000 opium dens. Poppy plants are taxed at $1 for 300. Further taxes are imposed when opium is sold for protection from robbers and transportation. The cost of living has doubled in two years.

"Central Szechuan—Mienchow—Opium is easily got everywhere. The military compel cultivation in this and adjoining counties. Paoning—A mission report says: 'The world has no idea of the vast extent to which the opium evil has grown during the past two years.'

"Northeast—Hai Hsien—Infinite more planted than in the old Manchuria days.

"East Szechuan—Chichu—This hsie (district) is full of it, very little wheat is planted and the people 'eat bitterness.' Magistrate says must have money to pay military taxes. Liang Shan dis-rt—Those who do not plant poppy double the land tax of those who do. West Szechuan—Ting An Fu—Fourths of the fields are planted with opium. The people are taxed to plant and taxed double if they disobey. Smokers are taxed $1 per lamp each month. $100,000 was taken in taxes this season (Dec., 1924) from the people of this district. The military take the money while schools are closed for months. We only know of about ten opium dens in this city where opium is not smoked, even children under ten in some places use it. Yungning—Opium is sold without let or hindrance as last year. Christians who don't plant are taxed to pay a 'lazy tax.' Owing to lack of rain, the opium crop was poor in winter and people had to sell their pigs, cattle and often even their land to pay the tax. The opium traffic in this city goes on merrily. The soldiers are constantly employed to protect convoys of opium coming down from Kweichow. Tons and tons of it pass through this city.

"Yachow: A petition from the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society presented to the American consul at Chungking and the International Anti-Opium association, Peking, contains the following facts: Military officials are oppressing the people this season. Three acres out of every ten must be planted with poppy; if not, fines and imprisonment. We can see nothing but famine next year and a market flooded with opium.

"Southwest Szechuan—Kiating—Opium not so extensive judging from what one can see. Much planted on the Min river between Kiating and Kienwei (both places have Baptist churches). Opium imported from Suifu and the mountains to the west under military escort. Smoking of opium seriously on the increase."

There! We have boxed the compass so far as Szechuan is concerned. But this report is nearly a year old. Worse conditions prevail now. Let me ask the readers of THE BAPTIST what they would do if the officials in their county town ordered them to plant three-tenths of their fields with opium? This is the question that confronts lots of Christians in West China. If they plant, they are taxed. If they don't plant—they are taxed double. It may be easy to give a casuistical reply from the front porch of a farmhouse in America; but it means the very livelihood of these poor folks on these Szechuan farms.

What is the cause of this condition of things? (1) A weak and cowardly government in Peking who are afraid to oppose the militarists. (2) A rapacious and greedy set of military satraps who think only of their own comfort and would "sell the poor for a pair of shoes." (3) A system of military domination that is destroying China. (4) No protection for the people who do not want to plant or sell opium. (5) Chaotic state of the political life of the country, where every man seeks his own advantage.

Surely America should not desert the international opium conference, even though she may not get all she asks for in any one year. I hope the Northern Baptist Convention will speak out on this great evil this year. I have neither time nor space to write about the menace of morphia.

Looking to Washington

YESTERDAY I had the privilege of attending the conference called by Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher at the Chicago Beach hotel to consider the motion defining a Baptist church, notice of which was given at the last meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, and which is to be presented at the Washington meeting of the convention. Doctor Brougher's invitation brought together a significant group of men of all shades of theological opinion and with widely varying ideas as to the wisest course to pursue. I have a feeling that in thus bringing together this representative body of men to think through this matter which has been agitating the convention Doctor Brougher may have done quite as large a service to the denomination as that rendered in the past few months' visitation among the churches. I will not attempt any statement of what was accomplished but will leave that for some official announcement. It will be enough to say here that this group, including as it did men who stand poles apart theologically, reached a unanimous agreement. If a like unanimity can be achieved at the meeting of the convention this gathering will have been well worth the time and expense involved.

At the same time I must confess my impatience that such a meeting and discussion should be necessary. As I sat listening to the presentation of the pros and cons of the matter, the legalistic quibbling about precise ceremonial forms, I wondered what Jesus would have thought if he had dropped into that company. I cannot imagine his being in the slightest degree interested in the questions which so greatly agitated that group. I think he might have listened for about three minutes and then have uttered some of those words of awful simplicity, sincerity and directness which he uttered with regard to matters that agitated the Scribes and Pharisees, and then have left us to go out about his work of doing good. And in my heart I think that we might do well to drop all this petty, technical, legalistic jangling and go out after him to help him in his great enterprise.

Two Great Leaders Pass

In the deaths of John Y. Aitchison and Albion W. Small, the University of Chicago and the entire denomination have suffered a great loss. An obituary notice has already appeared with regard to Doctor Aitchison, the peerless leader of our denominational enterprise through the New World Movement epoch, and more recently assistant to the president of the University of Chicago. I recall an incident which gives me an insight into the influence he exercised over men. While he was home secretary for the Foreign Mission board he visited an association in Illinois at which I was a delegate. After an address in which Doctor Aitchison had presented the needs of the foreign field, one brother from a small church, a man who no doubt was inured to hardships and had made considerable real sacrifice in order to share the kingdom enterprise, rose and rather bitterly arraigned the denominational secretaries who went about the country presenting the appeal. He criticized the luxury in which secretaries traveled. Especially the brother intimated that the secretaries were in danger of thinking in terms of budgets and finances and machinery instead of in terms of spiritual life. He thought that there ought to be more time given to prayer, more dependence on the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and less care for the mechanics. I suppose that in such circumstances most men would have replied rather warmly, and if Doctor Aitchison had done so he no doubt, would have had a large majority of the association with him. But he did not. Instead, he acknowledged that what the brother said was all too true, that with the burden of responsibility carried by denominational secretaries there was danger that they think in terms of machinery. The urge of raising the necessary amounts of money was constantly upon them, and he asked for this brother's prayers and for the prayers of all who were there that he and those associated with him might be kept constantly in such fellowship with God that they might know his will and find his way; that their work might at all times be dominated by genuine spiritual passion.

And Doctor Aitchison came out of that particular conference with the good-will and assured cooperation of the critical brother and all who were like-minded with him as well as of the group that he would have had with him in any case. To those who knew and loved Doctor Aitchison his passing is a great personal loss.

The death of Professor Albion Small occurred Mar. 24 at the Del Prado hotel. Doctor Small, who was Head of the Department of Sociology in the University of Chicago for many years, is credited with having introduced the study of sociology into American universities. He was an ordained Baptist minister. The Christian motive which dominated his work is shown in his will in which he wrote: "The longer I have studied human experiences the more convinced I have become that people can live together with satisfactory and reciprocal advantages only in the degree in which they learn to maintain a consistent Christian attitude toward one another and it is my hope that this fund will have a part in converting the world to the same belief." By the terms of his will Professor Small has left a fund which will eventually amount to $25,000 to be used for the support of publications within the field of social science.

Johnston Myers Resigns at Immanuel

The redoubtable pastor and leader for thirty-one years of Immanuel church, Dr. Johnston Myers, has presented his resignation. One wonders what this will mean for the future of Immanuel church for, in a large measure, Johnston Myers is Immanuel church and Immanuel church is Johnston Myers. It is he who has held that church courageous and steadfast while the tides of population shifted about the institution and while a great area of human need developed in what had formerly been a prosperous residential community. Of course the territory is still prosperous. Indeed, its business prosperity has enormously increased. The church stands in the heart of the automobile district. But there are people who live in the neighborhood in circumstances of squalor and misery as great as any to be found in the city of Chicago, and every day for years past the church has carried on a program of service for these and for other "down and outs" who have come from all parts of the city for the service which it renders. The office building now forming part of Immanuel is splendidly appointed. Many denominational offices are found in it. Perhaps when the inevitable move is made to Chicago, denominational activities will center here.

The Social Union.

Dean Charles R. Brown of Yale Divinity School was the speaker at the Social Union dinner at the LaSalle hotel on Monday evening, Apr. 5. He was introduced by Rev. Francis Stifler of Wilmette, who was one of Dean Brown's first students when he began his great work at Yale fifteen years ago. Dean Brown is a great preacher and at the Social Union dinner did what he does best—he preached a sermon on the topic, "What We Live By." While in Chicago Dean Brown also preached at the University of Chicago religious service on Sunday morning and at the Sunday Evening Club down town.

The Social Union has had a great season, the credit for which is in no small part due to the energetic president, James L. Kraft. Mr. Kraft will be succeeded by Harry B. Gear of the Morgan Park church and will have associated with him John V. Schafer of Evanston as vice president, Mr. George N. Shoney of Oak Park as treasurer and Charles L. Major of Wilmette as secretary.

The Ministers' Conference

The last two meetings of the ministers' conference have been held with Divinity School of the University of Chicago and with the Baptist Missionary Training School. For the former the conference, together with all other ministers' conferences in Chicago, adjourned its regular meeting in order to attend the dedication exercises of the new theological building. This meeting, which was genuinely significant event in the religious life of Chicago, has already been reported in THE BAPTIST. The meeting at the Baptist Missionary Training School was addressed by Rev. W. H. Har Freda of the Church of the Most Holy Cleveland. Doctor Freda made one find how lacking in all vitality and effectiveness was an appeal merely to subscribe a denominational budget or to save the organization from defeat, and how essential it is, in presenting the appeal for our denominational missionary and benevolent enterprises, to establish immediate contact between the giver and the actual work which his gift goes to support. The skeleton of a budget must be clothed with the living flesh and blood of actual service being accomplished. The conference was graciously entertained at luncheon by the Baptist Missionary Training School and a pleasant time was enjoyed by all about the tables.

New officers were elected by the ministers' conference on Apr. 1 as follows: President, Charles Rufus Osborn; vice president, Charles B. Althoff; secretary, Louis P. Jensen; treasurer, Wilfrid Noble; chairman civics committee, U. McGuire; chairman arrangements and program committee, M. C. Tunis; chairman credentials and introductory committee, Herschel R. Griffin; organist, W. H. Peebles; usher, E. August Shulls. The meetings are held regularly on Mondays at ten-thirty in the Immanuel building and visitors are always welcome.

Here and There

Something new in an associational meeting is promised for the Chicago Baptist Association in the "Baptist week" plan, May 9-12. There will be a general exchange of pulpits on Sunday, sectional meetings on Monday, and general gatherings in one central place on Tuesday and Wednesday.—Among the speakers at the Lenten services in Chicago Temple in the loop were Dr. C. W. Key of Hyde Park Baptist church, J. M. Stifler of Evanston. Great crowds gathered for these solemn and helpful services.—The churches report large gatherings during the Lenten period. That statement probably would have sounded strange in Baptist ears a few years ago but now it has become general custom to give the right of way to evangelism at this season and

...sing of God manifestly rests upon it. Forwood Park church is rejoicing in the dedication of the first unit, which is an educational section of its new church, which took place Apr. 4. The credit on this fine achievement is largely due to the able pastor, Rev. H. P. Crego and to the fine cooperation of the Baptist Executive Council. The dedication sermon was preached by Dr. Benjamin P. ... superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago.

Easter

...some respects Easter was unusual, in other respects much the same. In many congregations, unseasonably cool weather for bright gossamer fabrics, and companies of believers baptized, and a general interest in the eternal life at the heart of it, it went beyond the common. But since music, and flowers and spectacle, are always at their best, the unusual would be impossible to see. Somehow, as if the conviction of mortality needed a firmer insistence, the celebration settled into general argument for it. The writer never remembers a more strictly doctrinal Easter—this is, an Easter when the great argument for immortality was as much in evidence as the music and the flowers. It brought in the element of rediscovery. We used to tabulate Easter baptisms, not now. They are too general, too ritual—showing that the glorious unity, and the perfect symbol of it, go hand in hand. To set down a roster of Easter baptisms, from nine to ninety, the multitude of churches everywhere, would seem like an effort to reduce a radiant to prosy statistics. Let us rejoice in the glowing abundance, forgetting the mathematics!

April Meeting

...was the annual meeting of the Southern Union, with reports, election of officers and the chief guest and speaker the president of Boston University, Dr. Mel L. Marsh. The unusually appealing menu came in for appreciation from the platform and from the audience and file at the tables. Caterer never "strikes out", but is a Babe on home runs. For music we had George Sykes, the great tenor, and Myra Hemenway, the equally great accompanist. President Pease gracefully stepped himself out, and as gracefully presented his successor, Mr. Elwood T. ... of the Tremont Temple church, who started in with spicy brevity. By the way, that is a winning combination of toastmaster. So we begin the year with pleasant anticipations. President Marsh brought cordial greetings and we all returned it. In his speech, he was really making clear his purpose and ideals as an educational leader, and outlining the highest service that a great university could render to the community. Predominantly he conceives of the University as a great moral and spiritual force. Evidently President Marsh's main strength will be in mas-

Before April 30 Let Us Remember Our Obligations To Missions

How small the money gain and how great the spiritual loss to the church member or the church that lets a missionary quota go by default!

We have come to the last days—almost the last hours—of the fiscal year. The budget for our work, the work which generations of Baptist women have raised to heights of great usefulness in Christ's service, is bound up in the Unified Budget.

Will you not make certain that your church pays its quota in full before the 30th of April?

In every church let devoted women, whose hearts are with us in the work, raise this question. Pray for unity of purpose and the will to give sacrificially. Keep faith with those who have gone before, with our self-denying missionaries in the field, and with Christ.

terly administration, just where strength is most needed.

Paul Laurence Dunbar

The ministers had a delicious surprise at their first meeting in April. It was another of the too occasional revelations of riches hidden in our "home talent." Fitchburg is only in our outer suburbs, and Pastor E. B. Price of the First church there, was giving us his masterly lecture on Paul Laurence Dunbar. Both in matter and manner it was all out of the ordinary, visualizing most sympathetically and graphically the winsome negro poet. It was a feast of flavors pure and sweet. Curious outflashings of the songful genius of that slave race, rollicking humor, keen and lively sensibility, carefree outburst of joy in spite of bondage, easy and colloquial banter that sprang out of lowly conditions—well, we had it all personated with smooth reserve, and abundant appreciation. It made you wonder how much more of such resourcefulness is hidden among our own modest ministers.

Monday was election day, and Samuel Macauley Lindsay, of Brookline is our new president. He is a chief who will diffuse abundant good nature into his brotherly and intellectual leadership. Retiring President Walcott made bold to refer to the new president as "Sam". Certain well-seasoned brethren more boldly speak of him, and to him, as "Sammy". A world of delightful meaning is opened up by some of these sweet and spontaneous liberties.

Some Happenings

After ten strong years with the good church at Sanford, Me., Rev. Irad Benj. Hardy returns to our state to take First church, Waltham. He will get a hearty welcome. He is a warm, brotherly and devoted minister, just the fit for a church that requires a practiced leader, a cheerful mixer, and a competent teaching preacher. We look for a strong, steady advance at Waltham.

Another important suburban church is joyfully welcoming a new minister—that at Needham. They have just settled Rev. Geo. B. MacDonald who comes to them after three pastorates in the Maritime Provinces. Needham is one of the suburban opportunities. The pastorates of Doctors Burton, Webb, and Hughes laid solid foundations there.

They are having smiling experiences in the Temple church, Fall River, Pastor S. A. Mac Dougall. Two tangible proofs of this are a new seven passenger sedan for the minister, and a generous expansion of his salary. Such marks of appreciation are evidence of something to appreciate.

The Monday meeting on Apr. 12 was a union of all the ministers' conferences in the convenient Swedenborgian church just opposite the State House. Dr. Sydney M. Gulick spoke on "Recent Developments in American-Japanese Relations." Of course the doctor showed familiar sympathy with the Japanese angle, and when he affirmed that our relations with Japan could only be sweetened by the annulment of the ban against Japanese immigration, the ominous silence of the great body of ministers was significant, as though the shadow of the senatorial politicians at Washington had darkened all such prospects.

The other speaker was Dr. Robert E. Speer. He made a strong plea for the old missionary passion that filled the heart of the churches before the new day of "budgets" had dawned, and before supposedly high finance in Zion had monopolized all attention, and swelled all deficits. Then the doctor launched out into an unanswerable argument for missions.

Biennial Conference

The fifth biennial conference of the Newton Theological Seminary filled in three days of the regular spring vacation of the school. Its general topic was, "How Can Our Churches Strengthen the Moral Life of the Community?" The ten leading addresses were divided between the professors of the seminary and five authoritative voices from outside of the school. Of the faculty Professors Vaughan, Donovan, Rowe, Bradbury and Berkeley were the chosen leaders. From outside came Dr. C. N. Arbuckle, Dr. Theodore G. Soares, Hon. Herbert G. Parsons, Dr. E. C. Herrick, Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, and I. A. K. de Blois. The mere statement of the specific themes under the general topic and the names of the leaders will give an idea of the strength and value of the conference: Arbuckle on "The Present Moral Situation;" Vaughan, "The Christian Basis of Morality;" Soar, "Religious Education in the Social Process;" Parsons, "The Law and Moral Conditions;" Donovan, "Old Testament Teaching as to Moral Life;" Rowe, "Contribution of Social Science;" Bradbury, "What Changes in Preaching Are Needed?"; Berkeley, "The Education of the Child in Morals;" Mather, "What Can Our Colleges Do for Morals?"; Herick, "What Can the Churches Do for Morals of the Young?"; de Blois, "What Can Public Opinion Do for Morality?"

These high and earnest themes, unusually competent leaders, the large attendance of ministers and church officials from all New England, the lively quiz during the sessions, the congenial social life on the campus and in dormitories, made the conference a moral and spiritual inspiration to the appreciative assembly.

A 100 Per Cent Missionary Church

THE Baptist church in Moscow, Idaho, has put on a very successful church school of missions this year, with an attendance equal to the resident membership of the church. This has included a university class of fifty members. Various programs have been put on for the entertainment and instruction of the class at its Sunday evening meetings. Several stereopticon lectures were presented during the year by the pastor, Rev. Edker Burton, and missionary plays and pageants were put on by various groups in the church. One evening a professor at the University of Idaho, who was born in Brazil, gave the study class a talk on his native country.

The university group, in addition to its regular class work, had special subjects presented by the students themselves, one of the most interesting being by a Filipino who spoke on "Christianity vs. Commercialism," with particular reference to the Philippines. The class also held a lively debate on "Resolved, That the Monroe Doctrine should be modified to become a cooperative agreement between all the American nations."

Successful Keep-Faith Meeting

THE Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, N. Y., of which Leroy Dakin is pastor, held an interesting "Keep-Faith" meeting on Wednesday, Apr. 7. Mrs. G. Howard Estey, president of the woman's missionary society of the church, was asked to take charge and presided over the assembled members. Miss Ina Burton opened the meeting with a devotional service, in the course of which she introduced the subject of Baptist missions. To demonstrate her points Miss Burton made use of a large wall map of the world. On each of the various mission fields of the denomination had been pasted a picture of the Baptist Temple of Brooklyn, and the chief topic of Miss Burton's discourse was that a local church should not consider the missionary work of the denomination as something remote from its own work. Baptists, she pointed out, represent each Baptist church at work in various fields.

Mrs. Estey spoke on the missionary budget of the Baptist Temple and the necessity for raising it in full by Apr. 30. She displayed a poster picture of twenty-one candles, each representing $500 of the church's $10,500 missionary budget. Nineteen of these candles had a red flame, showing that the corresponding amount of money had been collected or pledged. The two unlighted candles represented $1000 of the missionary budget which was lacking. Mrs. Estey made a strong plea for the members of the church to see that the candles were lighted before Apr. 30, from the effect of this presentation, the church is now confident of raising the full budget.

The evening's program was concluded by Dr. H. J. Openshaw. He spoke of Baptist missions in China, with which he is well acquainted, having served a missionary there for a number of years.

New Essay Contest

THE plans made for the new year call for continued emphasis on stewardship for young people. It is enced by the Board of Missionary operation that the essay contest with Christian stewardship as the subject, which is now an accepted feature of the work among young people, is set for the period between Nov. 15, 1926 and Feb. 1, 1927. All Baptists between the ages of nine and twenty-five years and living in Northern Convention territory, are eligible to compete for the prizes, which are twelve in number, ranging from $5 to $100. Details can be obtained by writing to the Board of Missionary operation, 276 Fifth avenue, New York, or to the Baptist Young People's union, 2328 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago. The contest last year showed a marked growth of interest. It is now proposed to conduct during the coming year an oratorical contest of similar purpose and this is to take place during the month of 1927.

"Easy When You're Systematic"

One of our field workers, Mrs. Carrie Robinson, sends in a report of a church in Whiting, Kan., which she tells deserves honorable mention. This church uses the duplex envelopes, has nearly every-member canvass, and has money in to the state office regularly every month. Their entire quota for the year has been subscribed and paid, so they are sending a "love offering" over and above their quota. The general verdict of the church members, according to Mrs. Robinson, is "it's so easy now we do it systematically." One member of the church sent several copies of Doctor Agar's "The Stewardship of Life," and books are circulating in the church.

Here, There and Everywhere

THE FIRST CHURCH, Easton, Pa., Rev. W. J. Barnes, pastor, has closed a year with all expenses paid, missionary quota raised in full, increased amount for missions accepted for coming year and will send the pastor and his wife to Washington, D. C., for the Northern Baptist Convention.

REV. C. P. MORRIS has accepted the call to the church at Orosi, Calif., and is now on the field.

THE CHURCH of St. Clair, Mich., Rev. H. Z. Davis, pastor, received six new members on Easter.

THE CHURCH at Chanute, Kan., has received more members in the past four years than at any similar period in its history. Pastor W. M. Martin began his fifth year here on Apr. 1.

REV. CHAS. TILTON of Salem Depot, N. H., issues one of the finest church bulletins in New England.

PARK MEMORIAL CHURCH, Springfield, Mass., pastor, G. P. Beers, received thirty-one by baptism on Easter. The pastor has been here five years and the membership has increased from 400 to 713.

PASTOR L. J. POWELL of the church at Norwood, Ohio, has received 100 new members in the past year.

PASTOR A. A. DELARME of the First church, Omaha, Neb., received forty-one new members on Easter, twenty-six being by baptism.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Rutland, Vt., Rev. Geo. W. Peck, minister, received forty-one new members on Easter, thirty-one by baptism, making 120 new members in this church in the past year. Mrs. Geo. W. Ross made a memorial gift to the church in memory of the late Deacon Geo. W. Ross. The pastor is now entering his twelfth year with this church which had a budget of $4000 a year when he began and now has a budget in excess of $14,000.

PASTOR GEORGE E. DAWKINS of Muscatine, Iowa, has received 112 new members in the first five months of his pastorate, eighty-nine being baptized on Easter.

MR. THURLOW W. CLEVELAND, for thirty years chief usher in the First church, Elmira, N. Y., died recently. He was baptized in this church in 1882.

PASTOR H. A. VERNON of the Judson church, Minneapolis, Minn., gave the hand of fellowship to forty-nine new members on Easter.

IN THE PITTSBURGH, PA., association on Easter, the following baptisms were reported: Beth Eden, seven; Homestead, five; Sharpsburg, six; East Street, two; Coraopolis, seven; Sandusky Street, nine; Johnston Avenue, four; Rochester, sixteen; Bellevue, twenty-three; Mt. Lebanon, twenty; Crafton, two; Oakmont, five; Park church, McKeesport, nine; Elizabeth, four.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Lima, Ohio, Rev. W. L. Steeves, minister, has had a record year. "Christ the Victor" was given on Easter by the Mendelssohn choir.

PASTOR W. HOLT SMITH has resigned at Billings, Mont., and goes to the First church, Duluth, Minn.

REV. CHAS. H. HEIMSATH of Montowese, Conn., has accepted the call of the First church, Bridgeport, Conn., and will take up his duties on June 1, succeeding Dr. Chas. A. Decker, deceased. The First church stands second in the state in amount of money given for missions.

PASTOR P. L. VERNON of Alexandria, Va., sends the following greetings: "Delegates attending the Northern Baptist Convention will desire to visit historic Alexandria. The old First church, organized in 1803, desires to extend to all delegates and friends warm hospitality and every possible courtesy. The Baptists of Alexandria, 1200 strong, welcome you."

THE FIRST CHURCH, Lebanon, Ind., Rev. A. E. Cowley, pastor, received sixteen new members at Easter, fifteen by baptism.

KEYSTONE ACADEMY, Factoryville, Pa., Principal Curtis E. Coe, reports a helpful four-day visit from Dr. Allyn K. Foster.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Norwich, N. Y., Rev. W. A. Ashmore, minister has baptized nine into its fellowship.

DR. RAY HASTINGS of the Temple church, Los Angeles, Calif., has been invited to represent California at the Philadelphia Sesqui centennial exposition this year. An organ costing $150,000 is being built for the exposition concert hall.

THE BARR MEMORIAL CHURCH of Petoskey, Mich., Rev. Wm. S. Ross, pastor, has received eighty-two new members in the past eighteen months, fifty-nine of these by baptism.

THE FIRST CHURCH of South Charleston, West Va., Rev. E. L. Grose, minister, received seventy-five new members on Easter. Five hundred have been received during the past five years.

The N. B. C.—World Illiteracy and Peace

By W. SCOTT

IN May the Baptists of the North go to Washington, the capital of a great nation and one of the great world centers. The time, place, national and world situation make the meeting historic. Going to the capital of a great nation and one of the great world centers, the convention challenges the attention of the nation and, since all nations are officially represented there, the attention of the entire world.

The time is extraordinary—nationally and internationally. National and world problems face civilization. Problems political, economic, financial, military, moral are there under consideration. The drink evil has domestic and foreign relations. It includes the issue of national sobriety and self-control.

The world war involved the whole human race, the animal creation, the last word of science, mechanics, invention. Its consequences naturally follow in the shrinkage of human and material values, suspicion, alienation, hostility in thought and action and in many cases the loss of faith.

What can the Baptists of the North bring to Washington at this time?

Assembling in a prayerful, irenic and cooperative spirit, they may bring much as a Christian body and as Christian citizens to a country where they have civil and religious liberties to a degree not possessed in any other nation, and also to a divided and war-minded world.

They may bring a steady faith in the Providential order of human affairs and of the world, contribute to lessen chaos, ignorance, division and war by order, knowledge, concord and peace.

They represent a Christian body in every northern state from coast to coast, a larger body in the South and in many parts of the world, numbering ten millions or more of adherents, and further, in a sense, they may represent all true believers, professed lovers of God and man the world over, a spiritual commonwealth among all nations.

Two facts now confront the constructive forces of civilization.

I. The illiteracy of the majority of mankind and the peril of the misuse of knowledge by powerful nations and mankind generally is not a new fact but the infinite tragedy of the world war lifts it to commanding importance.

To the illiterate majority of mankind the sacred books of religion, the laws of their country, the wisdom of the ages written in national and world literature and all related advantages are inaccessible. Such illiterates, whether individuals, nations or races are exposed to and actually suffer exploitation.

The man who reads with reflection and growing intelligence has access to the recorded experience, knowledge and wisdom of civilization. He may traverse the vast field of human thought. He holds in hand one of the fundamental tools of civilization.

II. The world war put under arms 63,000,000 men; 35,000,000 were killed, wounded or disabled; $300,000,000,000 were expended. The war victims were more than the population of many countries singly and about 30 per cent of the population of the United States, but they were all men of military age and fitness. The money cost was over 90 per cent of the wealth of the United States by the last census. The indirect human and material cost cannot be reckoned.

It is respectfully suggested that the following have a place on the program of the convention.

What can the Baptists of the North do at this time to render a national and world service?

1. What can the Convention do, (a) through the churches, Sunday schools, other Baptist schools of all grades in the United States and other countries and by cooperation with the Baptist body in the South and the world over? Let one

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"Greetings. Tonight several men will speak from their cells in state prisons to you. THE BAPTIST is now reaching hundreds of prisoners through gifts received for that purpose. A letter is sent to every prisoner whose name is added to our list. The following are samples of the responses received:

"I am writing to let you know I received your letter and was more than glad. I am getting THE BAPTIST and certainly enjoy reading it. I am glad also to know I have some faithful friends in this world that think of a person in trouble. I am glad to receive the paper because I really intend to go out into the world and live a better life than I have ever lived before. I read all parts of the paper. I would appreciate it very much if you would continue to send it to me. All my people are Baptists."

"Your welcome letter received. I was surprised to hear from you. I am a lonely and sorry young man. I made this mistake in life but I am glad to know you and the good friends and readers of the Bible have showed me a brighter walk in life. I have been getting THE BAPTIST for some time. I haven't missed a copy. I can never repay you. I am anxious to get the paper every week. I grew up on a farm. I made a mistake when I left home at fifteen. I should have gone to school. I work in the prison library and mail department and study at night. I feel like I am doing some good here. I know in my old rut, I was lost. The chaplain is good to me. I can never forget his kindness. I am sure glad to receive THE BAPTIST. I read it and pass it on to my friends here."

"I acknowledge receipt of your letter. THE BAPTIST came as a surprise. Thank you very kindly. I receive it every week and was wondering who was sending it. There is some good reading in the paper. I like best the Devotional Life page, after that, Young People and the Kingdom. My dear mother died thirty years ago and I have only a few friends. I stand almost alone in the world. THE BAPTIST has helped me in my darkest days. It seems Jesus sent me here for a good reason. I'm glad I came to prison. When I am released, I will be a saved man. I'll ask you to kindly please continue to send me THE BAPTIST. Thanks to you kind friends. Give my best wishes to the friends. Answer."

"Glad to get a letter from one who seems to understand. Words are inadequate to express the real benefits derived from THE BAPTIST in this prison alone. Several of the men receive a copy each week and we await its arrival with interest. It would be difficult to tell you just what portion of the paper I enjoy best. First, I always read the WCOY section, then I turn to the editorials and read them through. I receive THE BAPTIST each week. If there is a chance for me to continue to get THE BAPTIST, for heaven's sake let it come on. We are conducting a Sunday school in this prison and your notes on the lesson are very helpful. May God help those who have been blessed with this world's goods that they may continue to send THE BAPTIST as a missionary to men in prison. Thanking you for past favors and hoping to continue to receive THE BAPTIST, I am, yours in faithful service." (This man was an ordained minister of the gospel and the chaplain says his influence for good in the prison is beyond words to express).

"I am thanking you for the paper, THE BAPTIST. I sure do enjoy it. I find nothing but the true Baptist doctrine in the paper and it helps me and others in this institution. I hand it to my friends when I get through reading it. Please continue to send it. May God's richest blessing be on THE BAPTIST. And pray for me."

"I have been receiving THE BAPTIST. I can truthfully say I enjoy it. After I read it I hand it to another man and he in turn hands it to another so that it is really read by a number of men here. I enjoy the editorials and the news features. I was a member of a Baptist church some years ago. I wish I could say I was not a slacker. But that is just what I class myself. I got away from the Baptist brotherhood and I regret it. But I am trying to prepare myself so that when I am released I may again find a place in the brotherhood. The chaplain held meetings here and asked all the men who wanted to live a better life to come forward and say so. I went forward. At night in my prayers I remember just what I said to the chaplain. I have never been corrected by a guard nor had any trouble in here. Your letter is the only letter I have received since I came here. And this is the only letter I have written. I wish some of the Baptist brotherhood here in this city would visit me."

"Help THE BAPTIST maintain this ministry of love to these men, all of whom are Baptists. Send your offerings in any amount, marked 'For Prison Work.' The chaplains select the men. We send the letters and the paper. 'I was sick and in prison and ye came unto me,' said Jesus."

or more sessions of the convention given to this question. In addition to the preachers, let educators, medical teaching, agricultural, industrial, other missionaries have due place in conference that it may appear how broad far-reaching and comprehensive is the work of the Christian church, how it operates with philanthropy and state or government, and how all join in a campaign for humanity.

(b) Can the convention select representatives, one or more, and invite Baptists of the South and the Baptist National Convention (negro) to do likewise to go to the Baptist churches of United States and other countries of Baptist world cooperative campaign meet the call of the times?

2. Is it possible also to arrange a session or more of a citizens' meeting in Washington where representatives of convention, of other religious bodies, Protestant, Roman Catholic, Hebrew and of non-American nations and races may confer together on world education to lift the character and intelligence of the race to a higher level and on world peace? The meeting to be at such place and on such plan as may be satisfactory to all participants.

In the removal of illiteracy from world and the promotion of world peace among men of all faith, nations and races, cooperate with honor and devotion.

Further, let all routine and necessary business of the convention be dispatched with all possible economy of time, and divisive questions of organization otherwise be postponed for one year.

RECOMMENDS PARISH PAPER

"From Pastor Clarence S. Dorn of Oak Hill, W. Va., comes a copy of his parish paper, The Church Messenger. It far surpasses any other parish paper coming to this desk."—The Baptist, Feb. 20.

This parish paper is printed by National Religious Press, Grand Rapids, Mich. Our service provides any church large or small, city or rural, with a parish paper at about one-fifth the cost charged by ordinary printers. Ads or subscriptions pay all publication expenses. Many make a profit of $100 per month from their parish papers, when our plan is followed. Particulars, samples, etc. Does not oblige you in any way.

eaders furnish precedents for suggestions here submitted. A few are noted. John Foster, an English Baptist preacher, in 1819 appealed to the governing classes of England in his celebrated volume on "Popular Ignorance" to give the rudiments of education to the ignorant masses.

Barnas Sears of Brown University suggested the working plan of the Peabody fund, the first great American educational fund, and became its administrator.

Dr. W. R. Harper, a great teacher and organizer, and J. D. Rockefeller, a great organizer and man of wealth, jointly founded the University of Chicago which ranks among the leading universities of the world.

Booker T. Washington, a Baptist teacher, was a leader at Tuskegee Institute in the education of the negro race in American education. His successor, Robert R. Moton, another Baptist teacher, is a notable leader of his race.

Russell H. Conwell, pastor of a great Baptist church, founded largely by his own effort a university and hospital, and his genius as a public lecturer earned many thousands of dollars which he gave to education and charity.

During the current year Dr. J. Whitcomb Brounger, has been sent by the Northern Baptist Convention on a special mission to the churches of the continent in all Northern states from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

These deeply moving facts which ought to be multiplied indefinitely show the vast resources of the denomination for service, individual and local and co-terminous with the whole race in its outreach. Similar statements might be gathered from the shining records of our religious bodies, large or small, at home and abroad. They also suggest the vast, unused or misused, energy of mankind which, if turned from war and destructive or unworthy ends to higher use, may build a friendly, cooperative and happier world.

Adequate education in its best sense is the right of every member of the human race. It is not a benefaction of wealth, nor a necessity of the poor, nor a requirement of a social, industrial or other class or stratum. It is rather a concern of the body politic as a perpetual incorporation or commonwealth. It is a product of Christianity in action. Today it is a fundamental world issue in the field of practical statesmanship.

It is no exaggeration to affirm that the Baptists of the North, going to Washington, the capital of a great nation and one of the world's great centers, have an opportunity at this time for national and world service never presented before in their history.

A Question

By Z. F. GRIFFIN

IN CONNECTION with the agitation of changing the constitution of the Northern Baptist Convention so as to admit to membership those churches which have only immersed persons as members, a question has presented itself to me and I fancy others have also thought of the same thing. The question is this: Is immersion the only standard by which a person is judged to be worthy of membership in good and regular standing in a Baptist church? By the wording of the amendment that seems to be the only question to be considered. Is immersion the most important thing in the life of a Baptist church member? It seems to me that there are some things more important than immersion.

Most Baptists in this day and age consider it a confession of something more vital which precedes it. A confession of our regeneration. Why do we not raise questions with regard to many other things? Why do we not require of all those churches seeking membership in the Northern Baptist Convention that all their members shall be regenerated persons? That is what baptism symbolizes and yet we all know that now and again Godless persons are found in many of our churches. Or why do they not demand that attendance upon the public worship of the church be required? That is what we expect of good and faithful members. And yet we know that there are many members who never darken a church door.

Why not require that the members be faithful stewards of the manifold blessings received from the hand of God? That is more vital to the extension of the kingdom of Christ than is immersion. We are taught that we should "abound" in the grace of liberality. The New Testament is full of such injunctions. And yet look at our meager gifts. Some churches give more to their soprano singer than they do for the world's evangelization. If we are to sit in judgment on unworthy churches let us make it thorough.

If, as we declared, the New Testament is to be our guide why not stop at that? Or if we are to define what the New Testament teaches then why stop at one declaration? Why not define our whole duty? The objection would at once be raised that such a demand would be absurd and an impossible task. That it would be beyond the power or scope of the Northern Baptist Convention. Exactly so. Therefore we must leave the worthiness of each member to the local church. If a church calls itself a Baptist church, and is in good and regular standing in its association, what right has the Northern Baptist Convention to go beyond this and declare what the practices of the individual members should be?

The Saving Sense

Landlord—I'm here to inform you, Mr. Ryan, that I'm going to raise your rent.

Ryan—It's kind ye are, sir, for I've been trying to do it myself and couldn't.

"The sooner the world ends the better," said the cynic. "We all ought to be annihilated."

"My dear fellow," his friend replied, "the world's packed with interesting things. They've just discovered that human life began on this earth about a million years ago—and you talk of wiping us all out."

"A million years ago? Oh, well," said the morbid man, "it's too late to do anything about it, then."

Peggy and Tommy were entertaining themselves picturing the wonderful things they would have when they grew up. "I shall have a lovely motor car," said Peggy. "So shall I," said Tommy. "And a radio," continued Peggy. "So shall I," said Tommy. "Oh, Tommy," Peggy said in an exasperated tone, "I believe you are what they call a 'So-shall-ist.'"

Chemistry Professor—What can you tell me about nitrates?

Student — Well — er — they're a lot cheaper than day rates.

Lecturer: "The farmer is the only producer who makes his living from the soil."

Voice in audience: "What about the laundress?"

Little Mary had heard that the minister was leaving their church for another pastorate. Her mother had the minister to dinner one Sunday shortly after and Mary thought she ought to say something polite to him; so waiting for a pause in the conversation she remarked, "Mr. Johnson, I hear that we are going to have the pleasure of losing you."—Boston Transcript.

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for May 2

GOD'S COVENANT WITH NOAH
Lesson Text: Gen. 9:8-17. Golden Text: Gen. 9:13

The lesson is the story of the first recorded covenant of God with men. It is a beautiful story full of poetic fancy and suggestive of the optimism which fills the souls of men when things become normal again after a destructive earthquake, devastating tornado or an overwhelming flood. Too often Deity has been associated with the destructive forces of the universe to the exclusion of the benignant grace of the heavenly Father, as expressed in rainbows.

The Cloud

Some things are associated with terror. We can well imagine how these antediluvians who had sailed through the flood would dread to see the clouds forming the sky because of the fearful experiences of the deluge. A railroad engine is usually incapacitated for his work permanently after a serious railroad accident from which he has escaped unhurt but which others have been killed. The memory of it haunts him and shatters his nerves so that he is no longer able to keep a steady hand upon the throttle. A funnel-shaped cloud in a summer drive to the cellar the people who have passed through a cyclone. The mother shrinks from the scarlet fever notice on the door of a neighbor's home if the ravages of that deadly disease have decimated her own little family! So must have been with Noah and his family. Having escaped in the flood they never wanted to see such another judgment. Therefore it was reassuring to them when they discovered that the rainbow was an evidence that God's wrath was shining somewhere. There can be no rainbow without clouds and sunshine. It takes both to make the spectacular analysis which reveals the constituent elements of the sun. No illustration could be happier than this, and we cannot lose it out of the Old Testament without greatly impoverishing the sacred literature of Israel.

The Covenant

Happy are the people who see a covenant of God in the ordered processes of nature. It was a great discovery among the ancients to a revelation when Noah found that despite the flood the seasons would recur with unfailing regularity. The rainbow became the symbol of a bond God gave his people as an assurance that the world is governed by law. The covenant flood was no criterion of the things go in the universe usually. There is a stability about the movements of nature which makes nature trustworthy because back of nature is the trustworthy, personal Creator who communicates with his children and gives them assurances which amount to cover obligations that they can trust him without fear of accident or caprice.

Federal Republic, by Harry Pratt Judson. New York: Macmillan. $4.
President Judson is doubtless prepared to make a lusty roar in the prohibition camp, but he audaciously invites it by his frank criticism of the eighteenth amendment. The book is another warning voice against the obvious tendency in the government of the United States to shift power from the states to the federal government. Beginning with a sketch of the federal equilibrium as originally conceived and established, it traces the process of constitutional amendment and legislation through which the augmentation of federal power at the expense of that of the states has been achieved. How seriously the author regards these changes appears from his suggestion that a twentieth amendment be adopted which shall simply repeal all those that have been adopted since the thirteenth. The gravity of such a proposal will be realized when the reader remembers that it would sweep away the suffrage, the income tax, the popular election of senators, woman suffrage and prohibition. Here is a compendium of information and a line of criticism that cannot be safely ignored by the American people. It may help to awaken the states to the revival of efficient local government.

We recall reading two other volumes of forgotten authors of like import with this volume. The author introduces himself as a contemporary of our Lord whom he knew from his boyhood days in Nazareth and became an admiring companion as they both grew to young manhood. He gives a pen picture of the private and public life of the Master, portraying a most charming personality of fascinating life. Incidentally he throws much light on local and historical events of the times which greatly interest to their interest. In that respect it makes a helpful commentary on passages and occurrences in the Master's words and career. The "impressions" concern the humanistic side of our Lord, missing unnoticed the miracles and other events manifesting the divine nature of the person. He writes as a believer in the resurrection; but the great fact of the Easter morning he leaves an undeniable event eluding such concretes as the Gospels give and are so vital to the Christian faith. The Great Personality he portrays with consummate art is one that can be accepted by Jew and Christian, by modernist and reactionary, though the latter would be tempted to say: "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him". However, there is left us the "Chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely".

—H. O. ROWLANDS.

Christ in Man-Making, by Herman Harrell Horne. New York: Abingdon Press. 50 cents.

In this small volume the professor of the philosophy of education in New York University shows the interaction of heredity environment and moral purpose in man-making. He believes a careful study of the teachings of Christ will secure Christian support for the eugenic program. We fail to follow Christ when we stop trying to improve man by improving his environment. In Christ's own person, man-making is seen at its highest and there is revealed the cooperation of the forces of heredity, environment and will. God is still at the work of creation and by the practical application of Christ's gospel "birth may be made eugenic, environment eutenic, and the will good." These chapters were first delivered as lectures at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville.

—ROBERT GORDON.

Economic Liberalism, by Jacob H. Hollander. New York: Abingdon Press. $1.50.

This volume contains lectures which were delivered last year at Wesleyan university by Doctor Hollander, professor of political economy at Johns Hopkins. The author has defined economic liberalism and explained how it is opposing conservatism in matters of price level, taxation, trade unionism, and social reform. It is a very readable book, and one which deserves a reading in this day of fiery talk and cloudy thinking about social economics.

—FRED E. DEAN.

A New Name, by Grace Livingstone Hill. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.

A love story with enough of a mystery in it to give it special zest, and told in Mrs. Hill's charming style with all the warmth of her understanding of human beings. It shows as well the moulding of a man when thrown in a new environment and put to the real tests of life. A good book in every sense of the word.

—DELLA ROBERTS.

Are Church Trustees Liable?

MANY—probably most—Northern Baptist church buildings are so inadequately insured that replacement would cost three or four times the insurance. Recent disastrous fires emphasize this.

Church trustees usually give adequate protection against loss by fire to their home and business interests. Why not to their church?

Two major obligations laid upon all church trustees are: First to take measures for fire prevention; second to see that maximum fire insurance is carried. This means at least 80% of replacement cost. Individual liability of trustees where these duties are neglected is a mooted question. Moral if not legal and actionable liability exists, if there is preventable loss.

Is YOUR church protected? Has the property been appraised, as ordinary prudence demands, by a competent appraiser?

Church officers and trustees may write the Secretary of the Department of Architecture, in care of this society. Advice and assistance now will save you embarrassment and possibly severe loss later on.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

The employment relations committee of the National Manufacturers' Association in a recent report discourages profit sharing as tending to destroy capacity for sustained and loyal effort, as offering to the worker a pretended gratuity which the worker openly or secretly resents, and as adding little if anything to the workers' income through a series of years.

Scrutiny is directed towards the motion picture business. Two bills for the regulation of the industry are under consideration in the national house of representatives, and have been opened for a hearing before the committee on education. Persons interested in the movement for "clean movies" should write to their congressman for copies of the bills. Other information may be secured from the Federal Motion Picture Council, 477 Bedford avenue, New York City.

Rev. F. W. Steadman wrote from Granville, Ohio, on Feb. 19: "Today we are celebrating. Just thirty years ago today I took leave of a company of friends who were kind enough to see me off at the North Station in Boston, and boarded a C. P. R. train for Vancouver on my way to Korea. I was alone. But in October of the same year, Miss Agnes Bryden took leave of friends at the same railroad station, bound for the same country. In September of the following year we were married in Seoul, Korea. We will celebrate again next year, of course, but today we say that we have been thirty years in the service of our Lord and Master in the distant lands of the Far East, and we thank God for all the joy of these years of service. How sweet it all has been and how good God has been to us!"

Little by little the controversy about evolution is in the way of clarifying itself. Dr. A. S. Zerbe has written a book on "Christianity and False Evolutionism," which received a complimentary review in the Moody Bible Institute Monthly, and from which are quoted the following definitive statements: "If scientists meant no more by evolution than growth, progress, development from the lower to the higher in the history of the universe and of man, there would be little controversy at this point. But the consistent evolutionist holds that there is no supernatural order at all, but only a dead level of natural law." In other words, from the standpoint of the strictest orthodoxy there is little objection to evolutionism in itself. The real objection lies against that type of radical evolutionism which excludes the supernatural. Current discussion would be greatly simplified by keeping the distinction in mind.

In these days of the Golden Rule in business there is something raucous in the story in a financial journal that "the usury game" is so conducted that borrowers are compelled in many instances to pay 40, 60, 75 and even 100 per cent interest on loans. Of course such loans are not regular transactions at the banks, but favors secured by persons unable to give regular banking security from traffickers in such loans.

Division on caste lines compounded by denominational lines is reported from the Telugu country. In that field is one of the most successful Baptist missions in the world. Baptists have been reaching the Madigas mainly but also to some extent the Malas. Below these castes are the Sudras, the lowest caste of all, which it is desirable to reach. Some years ago the Lutherans opened work among the Malas at Terlapad. The result is division, confusion and a failure to give proper attention to the Sudras. A comity committee is at work on the case and finding it difficult.

With reference to the present controversy in the Presbyterian church, the Continent says: "The great majority of Presbyterians are neither 'fundamentalists' nor 'modernists'. They are just old-fashioned Christians of the Presbyterian persuasion. This means that they believe in the Bible as the word of God and that because they believe in the Bible, they also believe in civil and religious liberty. They hold that the only foundation of the church is Christ—not some theological theory. They propose to keep Christ central and to promote true Christian unity—which, they know, cannot exist without both liberty and love. In our judgment these old-fashioned Presbyterian Christians will continue to assert their dominance and will consent to turn over the church to no small group of extremists."

Lorrin A. Thurston, publisher of the Honolulu Advertiser, gives his name to a news article in the New York Times that ought to be sensational if Americans were sensitive to human rights. He recites that the president of the United States, without any authority of law, and in spite of a treaty then in force by which the United States recognized the independence of Samoa, issued an executive order, Feb. 19, 1900, taking possession of a group of Samoa islands, which, in virtue of that order alone are still held by the United States. The department of the navy governs the islands without any legal authority of any sort. Mr. Thurston regards the present arrangement as "a reproach to and blot upon the reputation of America for justice and fair play." How it appears to the Samoans and others he does not say.

Chief Chaplain John T. Axton of the army announces the annual meeting of the Chaplains' Association of the Army of the United States to be held in Washington the first week in May. Chaplains in the regular army, in the national guard and in the R. O. T. C., and all past chaplains are invited. A memorial tablet to chaplains will be unveiled in Arlington cemetery, May 5.

"The 112th annual meeting of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in the Washington auditorium, Washington, D. C., May 1926, at 9:40 a. m., and succeeding days to act upon any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and members of the board of managers, and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting. By order of the board of managers."

Dr. J. Gresham Machen, by his book "What Is Faith?" stirs Principal Selbie of England to a series of reflections on the disparagement of Doctor Machen's reasoning. In an article under the title "Let Us Christianize Our Theology," Selbie says: "Perhaps our greatest need at the moment is to Christianize our theology, i. e., to read God strictly in terms of Jesus Christ. When we do this, faith in the God so revealed will carry us a very long way, and will render unnecessary many of those limitations and interpretations which we put upon Him. For, pace Doctor Machen, the thorough apprehension of God as love puts out of court at once all forensic and judicial interpretations of his relations with men. When modern theology seeks to expound the ways of God to men in ethical, personal rather than in judicial, governmental, or even metaphysical terms, only following the example of Jesus Christ himself."

Dr. Howard B. Grose writes that there has come to the United States late weeks from Athens a remarkable mission of friendship, whose object is to thank the American people for rendered to Greece during and since the war. At its head is His Holiness Genadios, Metropolitan and chief primate of the Apostolic See of Thessalonica, of the Greek Eastern Orthodox church, representing both the Greek people and organization of orthodoxy. Accompanying him on a tour of American cities is Commodore Constantine Melas, of the Greek navy, retired, who comes as an official representative of the Greek government, and Colonel Gregory Kontakios, governor of war supplies in Macedonia and official representative of the Greek army. The commission is endeavoring to secure $200,000 for a new U. S. C. A. building in Salonica.

In order to fill vacancies in the membership of the committee on social service of the Northern Baptist Convention, caused by the resignation of the Rev. Henry D. Coe and the death of Prof. Abner W. Small, Pres. Edward H. Hoades has appointed Rev. John M. Moore, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Rev. John W. Elliott, 1701 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

The American Bible Society reports an unprecedented number of 9,069,120 volumes of Scriptures in more than 150 languages and dialects as the total issues for its 110th year of service. This represents an increase of nearly two and one-half million volumes over 1924 and exceeds by 1,307,743 the largest number issued in any previous year. The increase over the past year in the home field amounted to 738,855 volumes, while the foreign field reports issues of 1,677,000 volumes more than in 1924.

Efforts of the present pope to effect a union of historic Christianity seem to be a Commonweal to offer encouraging prospects of success, because it aims not to secure a Latinized church but a truly universal Catholicism. If the primacy of Rome is accepted, rites may be treated according to the preference of the several larger groups at their option. And why should not the eastern orthodox churches accept union on such terms? In fact the Uniats are actually groups which use the eastern rites and hold communion with Rome. The true reunion of Christendom can come however only upon the basis of the sole and un delegated lordship of Christ over all believers equally.

The commission on interracial cooperation and the commission on the church and race relations of the Federal Council of Churches are making plans to secure cooperation of representatives of other organizations, social and religious, for holding the second national interracial conference in 1927. A joint committee of these two organizations has been appointed and authorized to confer with representatives of other organizations interested in such a conference. A book entitled "Toward Interracial Cooperation," which is the verbatim report of the discussions of last year's conference, is being published this month and competent critics who have read the report declare that it is a unique collection of facts and opinions which present the concrete interracial problems and methods of meeting them in local communities, north and south. Problems of housing, race relations, health and race relations, industry and race relations, the church and race relations, schools and races and race relations which were considered in open forum discussion by white and colored delegates from over the United States, are discussed in the volume. The book is available to any one who wishes it, through the commission on interracial cooperation, Palmer building, Atlanta, Ga., and the commission on the church and race relations, 105 East 22nd street, New York City.

Dr. O. P. Miles, pastor at Clinton, Ill., having a wide acquaintance as a minister and well-known as a graceful and eloquent preacher, has assembled a collection of his choicest pulpit productions in a book under the title, "Messages to the People." These essays are short, deal with familiar themes in a simple way and are pleasing to read.

A series of religious meetings was conducted at Colgate University during the week preceding the Easter recess by Dr. Allyn K. Foster. The main meetings were held in the university chapel, with President Cutten presiding, and practically the entire student body as well as the membership of the faculty in attendance. Other gatherings of a more personal character were held in fraternity houses and for the non-fraternity men. There were addresses also before the large classes in the departments of sociology, Biblical literature, history, geology, chemistry, and economics. A part of each day was set aside for personal interviews.

Agitation over the color bar in South Africa continues and spreads. It is reported that such intense feeling has been aroused in India by anti-Asiatic legislation of the white man's legislature in South Africa, that Europeans, headed by the Bishop of Calcutta and members of the legislature, joined with Hindu and Mohammedan leaders in a mass meeting of protest. The color bar bill, which would limit certain employments exclusively for whites, has been advanced in the South African legislature and General Smuts uttered a grave warning against such legislation, describing it as a firebrand flung into a haystack. The natives all over South Africa were seething with discontent, he said, and he appealed to the government to modify the legislation at the eleventh hour.

Albany, N. Y., is to become a seaport. Plans have been adopted for deepening the channel of Hudson river so as to admit the passage of all except the heaviest sea-going vessels.

It is George W. Hinman, staff writer on business for the daily papers, who conveys the interesting information (drawn from very private sources) that many American millionaires and multimillionaires, are friendly to the bolshevist government in Russia, even contributing to its propaganda. The reader draws his own inferences.

The Boston Transcript reports that about 5000 delegates are expected to attend the world conference on narcotic education which has been called to meet in Philadelphia, July 5-10. They will represent imperial, national, provincial, state and municipal governments, together with social and religious organizations of all kinds. The first two days of the conference will be devoted to study of narcotic education and the last three to agencies and methods. The conference will be held in Philadelphia in order to coincide with the sesquicentennial celebration of the declaration of American independence.

Principal Samuel Chadwick, in a review in the British Weekly of Prof. Gresham Machen's book, "What Is Faith?" thus impales modern education: "In religion it has exalted intellectual incapacity to a cult. Theology is dismissed as impossible of understanding, and the simple cultivation of pious devotion is the vogue of intellectuals. Creeds are dismissed as hopelessly metaphysical, subtle in philosophic thought, unintelligible in speech. It is really pathetic to see the helplessness of educated people in the presence of theological thought. They have been told the task is hopeless and so they never really attempt to think. This is entirely a pose of culture. I have never heard a working man dismiss theology because it could not be understood, but I have heard a professor inform university students that the creeds were hopeless and useless."

An editorial in the Darborn Independent touches the sore spot of lawlessness in general, by the following comment on prohibition enforcement in particular: "There has been too much talk about what 'we are going to do.' The source of the greatest doubt which the public feels concerning General Andrews is that he is talking. General Smedley Butler did that in Philadelphia—very unlike a Marine—and his experience should be a lesson to other enforcement officers. What the nation asks is action. General Andrews does not need to inform us by interviews of what he intends to do. We could well forego the interviews for the pleasure of picking up the papers some morning to read of what he has done." The story is a familiar one. Every few days some officer of the law thunders in the index of the daily papers about what he is going to do to the criminals, with the net effect of warning them to hunt cover while he stages a raid.

Production of teaching films, closely correlated with selected courses of study and in accordance with a definite educational plan, for use in classrooms, is to be undertaken by the Eastman kodak company of Rochester, N. Y.

Lo Koon Wai, writing in Ling Naam, a periodical issued by Canton Christian College, China, expresses his judgment that in the present crisis Christian institutions of learning should increasingly seek opportunity for influencing the social and mass movements of China; should emphasize a more simple and democratic kind of life, should be more alert and sympathetic towards liberal thought and movements, should make the institutions more Chinese as well as more Christian and modern, and should seek the increased creation and circulation of an influential Christian literature.

A physician is to be added to the galaxy of soldiers and statesmen in Statuary hall at the capitol, the national Hall of Fame, where each state has the privilege of honoring its two most distinguished sons with statues. He is Dr. Crawford W. Long of Georgia, reputed to be the first to use ether for the prevention of pain in surgical operations. His statue was unveiled, Mar. 30, the eighty-fourth anniversary of his achievement. The statue was molded out of Georgia marble by J. Massey Rhind, financed by the Crawford W. Long Memorial Association, and accepted by congress under a resolution introduced by Senator Harris.

Austria is said to have relatively the smallest army in the world according to the Union Signal. Consistent with this non-militaristic trend is the absence of military toys in the shops of Vienna. According to a news note from that city the largest toy shop had not a single soldier suit on hand during the Christmas shopping season, while a search in the smaller stores and among the outdoor market stands revealed the same absence. Nor was there a fort, a toy cannon, or a tin soldier. Firemen's uniforms and Indian suits were old favorites, while toys of a practical and technical nature supplied a much greater demand. Dolls of all nationalities are still most popular with little girls.

As an example of the high plane on which some of the discussion of Christian doctrine is maintained by contestants, one of them is quoted in the Canadian Baptist as characterizing President E. Y. Mullins in these terms: "The impression Doctor Mullins made upon us was that had he been a horse-dealer, he could persuade himself to sell a spavined horse as one certain to win the Derby; or had he been a motor-car salesman, he could sell a second-hand car as the newest of all models; had he chosen to be a lawyer, he might have gone into partnership with Darrow of Chicago, as a special pleader for the lawless, and if, instead of a Baptist, he had been a Roman Catholic, nothing could have prevented his gaining the headship of the Jesuit Order." And the author of those words has challenged Doctor Mullins to a debate!

Representative Black of Brooklyn, N. Y., proposes that congress create an agency somewhat similar to the "czars" of baseball and of the motion picture industry for the control of the coal situation, to be supplemented by a corporation representing the government with power to condemn and operate unworked mines.

It is said that more than 800,000 new members were received into the churches of the United States during the last year. The Roman Catholic church showed smaller gains than usual. Of the 47,000,000 inhabitants of the country now holding membership in the churches, Roman Catholics number a little more than 16,000,000, counting members of the families of communicants. Methodists still lead with 8,920,190, with Baptists following closely. There are 5639 Japanese Buddhists in the United States.

The forty-ninth annual meeting of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society will be held in the Washington auditorium, Washington, D. C., Thursday morning, May 27, 1926, 9:35 to 11:15 with such adjourned sessions as may be necessary to transact the business of the society. At the annual meeting the report of the board will be presented, the officers and board members for the ensuing year will be elected and such other business transacted as may properly come before the annual meeting.

In contrast with the trend against militarism in the schools of Massachusetts is a recent action of the school trustees of Chicago with a view to eliminating from the schools every trace of "pacifism," "red propaganda," "communism" and kindred "sophistries." Children are to be taught that "aggressive warfare which can be otherwise adjusted should be prevented"; that "warfare in the cause of self-defense and in defense of liberty is justifiable"; that "history shows preparedness instruction to be vital"; and stress is to be laid on "deeds of patriots." Military training is promoted in the Chicago schools.

Humility

BY ROBERT WHITAKER

HE came again, the Pharisee of old
Who had prayed proudly on another day,

His eyes no longer arrogantly bold,
Nor to the lowliest of his fellows cold,
Now tender with rare melancholy, they.

He did not wail and beat upon his breast,
A deeper diffidence possessed him
there,

He who had found himself through bitter quest,

And learned humility's severest test,
To know the self, and with the self to bear;

He looked with strong, serene, unenvious eyes

Where other, greater men, surpassed him far,

And softly said, "To whom Thou wilt the prize,

Let me but serve Thee with mine own supplies

Still thankful I am not as others are."

Spring cleaning has gone to sea. This is, the United States has invited Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Spain and Sweden to join in creating a conference of experts with view to preventing the pollution of the high seas with oil.

A law has been passed in Turkey under which all persons who wish to marry must submit to a medical examination. In order to prevent substitution of a person for one who is well, the examining physician must stamp the left forearm of the marriage candidate. This serves as a distinguishing mark to guide the authorities in granting the marriage license.

In an editorial comment on ministerial fraternity the American Israelite this week says that "the rabbis everywhere, with a few exceptions have always been ready to accept the hand of fellowship of the Christian brothers and to cooperate with them in anything that will tend to elevate the minds and morals of their people, regardless of creed and to join them in all efforts for civic betterment. That this fraternization and cooperation has not been more general is certainly not the fault of the rabbis."

Four cities, Baltimore, New York, Chicago and Norwalk, Conn., celebrated the anniversary of the landing of the Catholic pilgrims sent by Cecilius Calvert, second Lord Baltimore, on the shores of Maryland, March 25, 1634. Under the auspices of the Calvert Association, celebrations of this event have been held every year since 1922 and are designed to lead to a nation-wide celebration of the Calvert tercentenary in 1934. Toleration, rather than religious liberty was the principle on which the colony was founded. All Christians that entered the colony were allowed freedom of worship, civic rights and public offices were open to all faiths. The church and the state were kept separate. These principles were subsequently confirmed in the famous Toleration act of 1649. Jews and Unitarians were excluded.

Prof. J. R. Mantey of the North Baptist Theological Seminary thinks that in more than 1000 places the best translations of the New Testament can be improved. He says: "There are many reasons now why one should know the Greek New Testament than ever before due to the unparalleled light that is coming upon the New Testament through the discovery of Greek papyri and inscriptions that were written in the first century the New Testament was written. The study of the Greek New Testament has been revolutionized by the multiplying and intensified light coming upon through the discovery of these ancient records. Commentaries written fifty years ago are more or less obsolete. The best New Testament Greek lexicon is Thayer's, but it is lamentably out of date now due to these new discoveries. The Revised Version, modern as it needs revision, for scholars are discovering better translations for numerous passages."

A Question of Superpower

THEY have harnessed Niagara. They will harness the Bay of Fundy. They are converting the flow of the Tennessee into light, power and fertility for millions of people. Through sluiceways, viaducts and catches the snows of the Rockies are creating an empire of the intermountain states. Dams on the Nile foretell a new civilization in the Soudan. By the impounding of the Colorado, within a generation a million people will dwell in beauty and plenty where now a scanty growth of wild cactus clings to the desert. Superpower is changing the face of the earth. Men are learning how to release cosmic energy for human service, to convert wild winds into angels of God and to ride upon their swift wings about the whole expanse of the skies.

But a still deeper achievement waits. It is necessary that superpower be adequately manned. A new creation in man must attend a new creation for man, otherwise the primitive tragedy of Eden will be presently rehearsed on a world-wide scale. The supernatural—the higher ranges of nature's mysterious fullness, now revealing themselves, must be matched by the superman—the God-inhabited ranges of human capacity. How shall we humans be fitted to utilize the newly created world that has become our dwelling-place? That problem is also one of power, a spiritual superpower that must be released and realized within the nature of man on a world-wide scale. Men must find a new order of thinking, a new loyalty to the facts, a new fellowship with the Creator, a new social spirit, a new love, a new sacrificial good-will, a new brotherhood that transcends the bounds of race and clan and sect, a new way of operating for the common good. In the old familiar myths, man must be born anew and from above. The doctrine of regeneration is validated, reenforced, emphasized and given a wealth of meaning of which our fathers did not and could not dream. The problem of salvation today is the same old problem of a new creation in man by the spirit of God. The old salvation to be conceived, sought and wrought in terms of man's need.

The source, type and promise of spiritual superpower sufficient for any age or need of man are found in Jesus. In this he was fully conscious. Among the latest of his incredible promises that have proved true in actual experience is this: "Ye shall receive power after the Holy Spirit shall come upon you." And the Holy Spirit is simply the Spirit of Jesus; otherwise the deity of Christ would be a dream. The proposition is that only as the Spirit of Jesus is released into the life of men, individually and socially with sufficient fullness, intensity, light and pervasiveness, can the new and abounding world which science has made available to us be utilized in terms of real welfare and happiness. And this in all of its meaning for both the individual and for society is the gospel to which we must bear witness.

How shall we secure such a release of spiritual power from the heights of his towering personality into the runways of our common life? Pentecost is the answer. A company of believers too small for a great enterprise, facing an impossible task, with a thousand perplexing problems to be solved, laid all other business on the table and joined in a quest of prayer for his promised power. The rest is glorious history.

Thought turns naturally to the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington. Every practical concern which arises there ought of course to receive proper attention. Solutions must be sought for problems and ways of removing obstacles devised. Disagreements ought to be expected and frankly considered with a view to fraternal understandings and adjustments. Questions about policy and administration ought to be invited and satisfactorily answered. That is, Northern Baptists will be engaged in a convention and not merely in a prayer meeting. But conventions differ. From one the people may return to their homes and tasks weary, disgusted, disheartened; from another strengthened, elated, courageous. A convention may become an arena of polemic contention or it may be the assembling and radiating center for tremendous currents of spiritual power. Washington may send a thrill or a pang through the hearts of millions, through whole denominations, even through nations. Which of these impulses shall emanate from it will depend upon the degree and extent to which it shall become a channel for the release in the world of the superhuman power of the Spirit of Jesus.

The Chicago Baptist Agreement

GRATIFICATION was expressed in these columns last week over the fact that the conference of Baptist ministers and laymen called to consider the proposed amendment to the by-laws of the Northern Baptist Convention was able to unite upon a recommendation concerning the disposal of that amendment. It is hoped that the convention will be disposed to accept the recommendation quickly and proceed with more vital matters.

But for the sake of clearness it may be well to analyze the standing resolution so recommended. It is built upon the idea not of defining a Baptist church, but of acts of recognition. It proposes that the convention recognize as its constituency only Baptist churches of a particular kind; namely, those in which immersion of believers is recognized as the only scriptural baptism; also, that only immersed members be recognized as delegates to the convention.

Of the two items thus recommended the first is nugatory. It is an attempt to do by indirection what the law committee said cannot be done directly by an amendment to the by-laws. It is contravened by the by-laws which admit "any Baptist church" to representation, and a standing resolution cannot override a by-law. It is futile because there appears to be no case in fact to which it can apply. Ever since the meeting at Seattle the question has been asked publicly and insistently, What Baptist church recognizes any baptism other than the immersion of believers as scriptural? No such church has yet been discovered in the field of the Northern Baptist Convention. The resolution, if adopted, will effect no change in the relations of any church to the convention. It will have no effect at all. It will do no good. It will do no harm.

The case would be different if the act of recognition specified in the resolution had the same meaning as the ordinary act of recognizing a Baptist church, which has a well-defined place in Baptist polity. The act of recognizing a Baptist church is performed by a council or other equivalent group upon the invitation of the church seeking to be so recognized. Its purpose is to assure the denomination of the character of the church and to welcome the church to a denominational status. That the Northern Baptist Convention should attempt to perform this function over half of the United States at once by a blanket resolution, and with no invitation to such act from any of the churches affected, is beyond all thinking. Perhaps the chief objection to the resolution would be that somebody might some time mistake it for an act of church recognition.

The value of the second item in the proposed resolution lies chiefly in the hope that it may allay the fears of some Baptists of a danger of the intrusion of an alien element into the convention. Those fears are real. Even if unfounded they are sincere and they deserve consideration. Many of us have no such fear. We do not believe that any such danger exists. We believe that the same forces which have created the Baptist denomination, which have clarified it of unscriptural practices in regard to baptism and which have given such growing dominance to the practice of the immersion of believers, now are still operating and can be trusted. But those who feel such fear ought as far as possible to be reassured. We ought to take such pains as we can to reassure them.

The standing resolution proposed on this point covers the whole case completely. It sets up a bar to membership in the convention which none but immersed believers can pass. It deprives nobody of any desired privilege, for there is no evidence that any church has ever thought of sending as a delegate to the convention any other person than an immersed believer. Its only effect will be to allay fear, but this is worth doing. And the restriction proposed is clearly within the power of the convention.

The recommendation proposed is a compromise, such agreements usually are. It is only by learning to compromise on everything except vital principles that we can do effective team work in any cooperative fellowship. He who will have his way or nothing is like to end with nothing. In the light of what the recommendation is, of what it will do, of the spirit that produced it and of the calls for Christian service that so far transcend it in importance and which its further discussion may impede, let us hope that it may find ready and harmonious acceptance with the convention.

Can the Association Be Revived?

FROM many sections of the country the complaint has come for years that the old-fashioned Baptist association is falling into decay and disuse. The people seem to have lost interest in it. The old crowds are gone. The groves no longer hum with the stir of the sands of friends in happy reunion. Their green arcades no longer echo hymns of praise. Gone or going are the long tables spread in the shade of the beeches by the side of the "little brown church in the vale." For millions of Baptists those scenes are gone forever. They will never return. The little church is gone. The forests are gone. The shady beeches have disappeared and left no mark.

Is the old spirit gone? Has the old fellowship vanished? Will the people never again assemble at the associational call? Was there nothing in those joyous annual gatherings which is holy and vital enough to last through the stress of modern life?

One of the greatest associations in the United States believes that the association needs but to adjust itself to modern conditions in order to realize anew the old Baptist comradeship. Chicago association with eighty-nine churches, of a dozen different nationalities, and more than 25,000 members, will devote most of the week beginning May 9 to a great united associational program. All of the organized forces of the denomination within the area will participate. The whole program will be built upon the question, "What is the Baptist Contribution for Today?"

The program of activities is so organized as to go to every church, pastor, choir, Sunday school, men's class, B. Y. P. U. and missionary organization of all grade a share in this first great religious festival of Chicago Baptists. It is hoped that at the close of thousands of Chicago Baptists will go back to their ordinary tasks with a grand amen in their hearts born of a rediscovered sense of fellowship and unity in a holy and holy enterprise.

The World in Transit

What Do Names Count For in This Topsy-Turvy World?

From Roumania comes the news that the present government, finding that in spite of fascist methods and inscrupulous manipulation of the balloting, it has been outvoted in recent elections, has issued a manifesto proclaiming its purpose to introduce "a new era of understanding and justice towards the national minorities." And the party which has thus been whipped by defeat into a more liberal, or perhaps less tyrannical policy, is called the "liberal" party. As an addition to the modern vocabulary of sectarian and partisan names, this is an interesting sample. Incidentally, a strike of Roumanian students against the admission of Jews to the universities has failed and it is still possible for a Jew to secure an education in Roumania.

Are We Getting Our Money's Worth?

In 1924 the people of the United States paid in taxes, national, state and local, $7,907,000,000, equivalent to $70.99 per capita. About 60 per cent of this sum goes for state and local purposes. The first impression produced by such figures is that of alarm lest the nation be ruined by the cost of government, and by government the usually thinks of police, courts and administration. But the service and goods received by the people from the government are vastly more. Consider the billions that go annually to the building and upkeep of roads, streets, parks, playgrounds, public buildings, water works, forests, schools, reformatories, sanitariums and other useful things of permanent value. The vital question is not whether 14 per cent of our average income is too much to pay, but whether we are getting full value for our money. It appears that if we are going to have these benefits, we can procure them more economically through the government than through profit-making private agencies.

Do Cossacks Led by the Nose Throw Light on Anything?

Word from the scene of events in China has been conspicuously scant for some time, but from hints received, the halo was slipping off the head of Feng Yu siang. He and his "people's army" were beginning to appear in the picture as the military front of communist Russia from which Chang Tso Lin might possibly have civilization. But the "people's army" in a recent battle captured a body of soldiers from the forces of Chang Tso Lin, put cords in their noses and led them to camp, when behold! the captives were cossacks. Who are cossacks? Pet soldiers of the late czar were cossacks. Are these captives a contribution of the old Russian imperial army to the support of Chang? If so there is also an imperialist front in China. A reliable "Who's Who" about China would throw light on some things now transpiring in other countries.

Commercialization Corrupts Sport, Why Not De-commercialize It?

Every plaintive song that is sung about the moral degeneracy of athletics, motion pictures, races or other forms of recreation and sport, ends with a refrain that the evil lies in the commercialization of amusements. If the complaint is true, the remedy ought to be obvious. Strike at the root of the difficulty. De-commercialize them. Community recreation, we are told, is a part of the culture of the people, a department of education. Then why not apply to it the principles of public education, and create for it an actual educational administration? Particularly, why not take school athletics out of the commercial field? Comments of future historians will raise blisters on the memory of a generation that spends more money and effort to amuse itself than to educate itself.

Behold the Paradise of The Competitive System

H. S. Rauschenbusch in a new pamphlet, "The People's Fight for Coal and Power," calls attention to the fact that the coal business is the one great industry left in which government regulation has not been invoked to reduce competition to some semblance of order. That is, it is the one remaining demonstration of the results of the competitive system. By hypothesis private competition is the only principle on which an orderly and efficient industry can be built. But by actual experiment it has proved to be the one system which cannot organize and conduct such an industry. Coal is a demonstration. It is vastly overdeveloped. It is wickedly wasteful. It has no reliable cost system nor standard of efficiency. It dare not permit the unionization of labor. It cannot provide steady employment. It cannot provide a steady supply of coal. It knows no way to adjust labor troubles except the old and barbarous method of the strike and the lockout, with attendant lawlessness and murder. It knows no way to cure its own ills. It has failed. The problem for the public is how to recover the industry from suicidal competition to the status of an orderly, economical and efficient community service.

The Voice of Friendship Speaks Here to Business

Business men hold and frankly accept leadership in the present social order. They control both economic and political life. They believe that any other control would be disastrous to society. Hence theirs is the responsibility of power. Any attempt to Christianize society as a whole must begin with and proceed through the Christianization of business. To this end it is necessary to urge the acceptance of Christian principles in business, to welcome any progress in that direction, to point out those features in which business is still pagan or worse, and to insist upon the Christian moralization of all business. The old separation of business from charity, philanthropy, humanity, service and the Golden Rule can no longer be accepted. The protest against it is necessary to protect and reenforce those business men who are striving against predatory interests to Christianize business—God bless them!

Just to Keep the Record Straight About Science and Religion

Science and religion are not the same, but they have some relation to each other. Science is the orderly investigation of facts. In its narrow sense it is often conceived as dealing with material facts only. Of course religion is not a matter of mere matter. Indeed, neither is science. Mathematics, psychology, sociology and theology are all sciences of something besides matter. In all of them the scientific method (which is the observation, correlation, interpretation and utilization of facts) is just as valid and necessary as in biology or physics.

Religion, on the other hand, is the reaction of personality to the consciousness of God. It is the way in which I realize and express what God means to me. But there are facts of religion just as there are facts in every other field of human knowledge, and if those facts are to be interpreted intelligently and utilized, the scientific method must be used just as in the case of any other group of facts we know. There may be a kind of science without religion and a kind of religion without science, but neither is all that the Creator intended until they are wedded.

See What Evolution Proposes To Do for the Human Ear

Dr. Fritz Pfuffer, a Vienna physician and ear specialist with a name prognostic of something out of the ordinary, gets into the news thus: "Basing his conclusion on his measurements of patients' ears over thirty years, he says that the noise of modern city life is producing a race of elephant-eared men and women. Big ears are needed to catch the spoken word amid the clamor, therefore the grandchildren of the present generation will not dare to show their ears, so unsightly will they be, 'like a dachshund's.'" Will this be a creative advance or an atavism? For "Megasthenes, Greek ambassador to the Indian court of Sadrokotos in 300 B. C., told of a people who 'sleep upon their ears as upon a rug, or under them as a canopy, or inside them as in a sleeping-bag.'" There is a cultural charm about these highly erudite and credible findings of science and history.

Some Test Questions of the Right of the Race to Live

If the supreme revolution of all history through which the human race is now passing is to avoid catastrophe, there must be minds in men to match it, to understand it and to guide it, so that with the least possible damage in the process it may issue in the greatest possible gain to human welfare. What is to come out of it will depend upon the answers which the people themselves give to the following questions: 1. Can the people acquire a sufficient understanding of the movement? 2. Can they become able to pass unprejudiced judgment upon the facts? 3. Will the people accept the moral principles of a Christian social order? 4. Have they courage and faith enough to undertake a Christian social reconstruction? 5. Can the agencies of religion and of education so function cooperatively as to fit the people to meet these tests?

Is Italy, After All, On the Way to Russia?

Edmondo Rossoni, secretary general of the confederation of fascist syndicates, gives to the press a rather grandiloquent statement of a reconstitution of the government of Italy proposed by the fascist organization, which raises some interesting questions? The proposal is that the economic organization of the nation shall be endowed with the full power of political control, by placing in the hand of syndicates of capital and of labor the power to elect the highest law-making body. The principle is identical with that of sovietism, namely, government by organized economic groups. It is essentially a modern form of democracy. The form now commonly used, as in the United States, is that of government by organized districts. The essential difference is that between district representation without regard to economic conditions on the one hand, and representation by economic groups with little or no regard to territorial distribution on the other. Russia has and Italy proposes a constitution on the latter principle. The difference between them is that Russia excludes capitalists and the clergy from the polls and Italy proposes to admit at least the capitalists. Students have long insisted that if democracy is to survive it must organize itself upon economic realities rather than upon geographical fictions.

The Best That One Is Seeking For the Best He May Become.

The quest for the best life is a struggle in which the best that one is impels him to achieve the best that he may become and do. It is the struggle for existence raised to the highest power. Life's true gains come in no other way. Victory at any stage brings renewed battle. To quit the struggle at any point is to prevent possible further gains and to jeopardize those already won. The battleground lies wherever a moral issue arises. It shifts from time to time and from place to place as moral issues vary. One battlefield may lie in the region of the personal vice and may call for a struggle against the ape and tiger in one's inner urgings. Another may lie in the region of social morals and may involve questions of justice and of the common good. True religion challenges the wrong and champions the right wherever the factors of time and place may locate the battleground.

Two Modernisms and Two Fundamentalisms

A small application of definition and analysis often serves to clarify the muddy waters of debate. For instance, language currently used in religious disputes yields when cleared of foreign matter, two fundamentalisms. One fundamentalist stands for those principles of Christianity which the Bible, interpreted in the light of all known facts, shows to be fundamental to Christian faith and life. Another fundamentalist stands for a specific theory of verbal inspiration, for an arbitrary literalism in the interpretation of the Bible and for some particular creed as a test of faith and fellowship. The same stream of language exhibits two modernisms. One modernist stands for those principles of Christianity which the Bible, interpreted in the light of all known facts, shows to be fundamental to Christian faith and life. Another modernist stands for such a view of religion as may be deduced from the physical sciences alone. Fundamentalist number one and modernist number one are in basic agreement. Between fundamentalist number two and modernist number two there is irreconcilable war, and each is at war with fundamentalist and modernist number one. The chief problem is how to protect the innocent bystander.

Does He Yet Know What The War Was About?

These lines are written on the ninth anniversary of the entrance of the United States into the world war. Some of our people went into it thinking it a high crusade for liberty, humanity and democracy. Some went into it knowing what it was about and what they expected to get out of it, but they kept still. Some also knew the secret and told it and went to Atlanta and Leavenworth. Some were just patriots and Babbitts who shouted with the crowd. Some did not know what it was about but were willing to bet that they would find out. What blistering satire was in that doggerel song! Many of them have not yet found out what the war meant and never will, because for many people fighting is easier than thinking. No finer hero ever went to war than many of our boys in khaki. More infamous scoundrels ever went unhung than some others who clamored for war and robbed the nation while our boys were dying for it. Victory came and set us weeping with joy. Then it began to embarrass us. And to this day the nation as a whole does not know either what it meant or what to do with it.

Death and the Life Beyond

IX—"He Chastens for Our Profit"

BY FREDERIC C. SPURR

POPULAR theology, like many other expressions of mental activity, tends to move to an extreme, either of hardness or of softness. The pendulum swings first one way and then the other. After a period of hard and severe dogmatic teaching, there comes a reaction, and the minds of men incline towards sentiment which, in its way, is as unnatural as the spirit from which it revolts. Especially is this true with regard to the serious question of the chastisement entailed by sin against the Eternal Order—God. In popular thought—if it can be called thought at all—the pendulum is at the extreme left today. All "fear of God" has departed. "The worst of it," said the late Doctor Dale to his friend Doctor Berry "is that nobody fears God now"—and a friend added, "And nothing else either." So little does the word "hell" inspire dread in our time, that men have annexed it as a convenient oath to fling about when reason fails them. They speak of it quite flippantly, never troubling to inquire whether it means anything or not. On any showing this is unfortunate—to say the least. In entering upon the grave subject before us, all harshness, flippancy and sentiment must be rigorously banished from our minds. Above all things we need seriousness, fearlessness and a divine compassion.

The Other Side of the Picture

Heaven is the general term for the bright side of the life beyond. But what of the other side of the picture? Is it all bright? Are there no shadows? Numerous answers have been given to this question. There is the Catholic answer, which declares dogmatically that the wicked will be tormented day and night forever and ever: "throughout the countless ages of eternity their torture will know no end." Certain of the Reformed churches accept the Catholic answer and echo it as their own. In most of the modern "confessions" of faith, however, Protestants have modified the extreme severity of this language, or contented themselves with a general statement that "the wicked will be punished." There is the Universalist answer which affirms that all men will eventually be saved. Some go so far as to say that "the devil himself will yet become an angel of light." And there is the annihilationist answer, which affirms that there is "life only in Christ"; the wicked will be "burned up root and branch," "wholly ceasing to be." These three main answers, set out with many variations, divide the Christian world today. Each school supports itself upon certain "texts" of Holy Scripture, but not one makes use of the historic method of reading the Bible. Verses from the books of Malachi, Job, Ecclesiastes and the Apocalypse, are lifted from their context and made to fit into a certain scheme often without the least reference to their primary meaning. The capricious method of this kind can make the Bible say anything, hence we have a multitude of bizarre texts each claiming biblical authority for opinions which the historic method would never discover in the sacred pages. Beyond those who are committed to one of these three main answers, there are vast numbers of persons who are utterly perplexed, knowing not what to believe; or silent, fearing to commit themselves for prudential reasons; or contemptuous. An inquiry could establish the fact that thousands of Christian ministers rarely preach upon the subject of hell, not because they are cowards, but because they do not know what to say. In the present perplexity, then, is it possible for us to arrive at the truth? Is there any statement of the case that carries conviction as being true scientifically, ethically and biblically? For any statement of worth must combine these three elements. Purely dogmatic statements are discredited in advance, from whichever party they proceed. That which is religiously true cannot be ethically or scientifically false. All truth is one and all separate truths must harmonize with each other and with the whole. Believing that it is possible to state the truth concerning retribution in the manner indicated, let us address ourselves to the task.

Unscientific, Unethical, Unbiblical Doctrine

The first essential thing is to clear the ground of some theological encumbrances which have hidden the essential truth from us. There are doctrines about hell which are obviously unscientific, unethical and unbiblical. They outrage the mind and shock our sense of justice. To teach, for example, that unbaptized children are "deprived of the beatific vision," or that they go to hell, is monstrously wicked. (Yet so enlightened a man as Cardinal Gibbons could defend "Catholic" doctrine upon this point, in his "Faith of our Fathers.") Could anything be more utterly opposed to the fatherly character of God, or to the message of the Christian gospel or to the attitude of the Saviour towards children? Or, again, it was but yesterday many believed that the "heathen," who had never had the opportunity of hearing the gospel, would be remitted to hell and punished for their involuntary ignorance. The missionary propaganda is not kept alive by representations of this kind, thank God, which are as definitely unbiblical as they are inhuman and unintelligent. We include further under the general heading of "encumbrances" those fanciful ideas of hell which have held the field during many generations; such as the Talmudic with the seven abodes in hell, 7000 caverns in each abode, 7000 clefts in each cavern, and 7000 serpents in each cleft; the Moslem with a hell obviously compounded of material substances, and others. Even a Jonathan Edwards could speak of "a lake of fire in the center of the world in which the wicked will lie sensible forever with billows of fire always rolling over them"—language for which there is no excuse. Finally we must regard as a dreadful encumbrance, if not far worse than that, such a portraiture of hell as that given by the Reverend Father Furniss in a book for children, "The Light of Hell." This representative of the Redeemer thus addresses little children: "Little child, if you go to hell there will be a devil at your side to strike you. He will go on striking you every minute forever and ever without stopping. The first stroke will make your body as bad as the body of Job, covered from head to foot with sores. The second stroke will make your body twice as bad as the body of Job, etc., etc. How, then, will your body be after the devil has been striking it every moment for a hundred million years without stopping?" From what other than a disordered brain, itself the product of a vicious theology, could such ghastly blasphemy have proceeded? One reason why belief in retribution has been lessened is undoubtedly a healthy revolt from the terrible nightmares imposed upon men by sincere but mistaken people who, having no idea of true biblical exegesis, have given rein to their imagination. These impossible pictures of the life beyond defeat at length their own ends. They strike a false note which cannot be endured forever. They accomplish no ethical purpose. They do not deter people from wrong doing, drunkenness, fighting and animalism. In those Catholic countries where hell is thus vividly preached, the intellectual and moral standard of the people is far lower than elsewhere. The people know deep down in their hearts that these representations are not true, hence they have no effect upon conduct. Let us, however, be just and not blame Christianity for these exaggerations which contradict and misrepresent its teachings.

Elastic Terms

Turn now to something constructive. To deal with the word "hell" first of all. It is an Anglo Saxon word meaning to cover, to conceal, to hide. It is intimately related to the word hole. It appears frequently upon the pages of the Authorized Version of the Bible (1611). But from the pages of the Revised Version (1881) it is removed, save in two places where it is retained for a particular reason. In place of the word hell the R. V. substitutes the three original words. First the Hebrew Sheol with its Greek equivalent Hades. These two words are extremely elastic and vague. They indicate, in quite a general way, the place of the departed. Sometimes they are translated "pit," sometimes "grave." No details whatever are given as to the life in Sheol or Hades. Once, in a parable Jesus lifted the veil and showed a man in Hades, alive, conscious and miserable. But this parable, which stands alone contains no new revelation; it reflected the popular teaching of the time which our Lord used as an argumentum ad hominem. Upon so slender a word as Hades or Sheol no doctrine can be built. The materials are lacking. The second word of the R. V. replacing the A. V. word hell is the word Tartarus. It occurs twice only; once in the Second Epistle of Peter and once in the Epistle of Jude. It is the heathen word for hell and is even more vague than Sheol or Hades. Here again it is evident that no theology can be built upon it, nor doctrine deduced from it. Its meaning is left unexplained.

Picture Words

The third and last word is Gehenna. It occurs twelve times in the New Testament, eleven of those being in the first three Gospels. The significant thing is that in the Gospels the word is reported as having been spoken by Jesus himself. What does it mean? It is a picture word, and like all picture words is derived from a fact of life. It is, in truth, a shortened term for the valley of Hinnom—Ge-hinnom—which lay to the South of Jerusalem. The story of this vale is told in II Chronicles: 28, 33. Long before it had been a fair garden, beautiful and productive. Then, under two kings, it became a place of fearful idolatry. Infants were flung into the interior of a heated metal image; "they passed through the fire." Ge-hinnom became a place of dreadful memories. When King Josiah ascended the throne he broke up that system of repulsive and cruel idolatry and "defiled" the valley by converting it into the great refuse heap of the city. Corpses were cremated there. The garbage of Jerusalem was cleansed by the fires which burned incessantly, night and day. In the time of our Lord the vale of Hinnom was still used in this way. Three centuries later, Jerome tells us, Ge-hinnom reverted to its original use and once more became a garden. Today the railway from Jerusalem to Jaffa traverses the site. Gehenna, with its terrible history, became, quite naturally, a symbol of utter ruin. In this way our Lord employed the word. When he warned men that it was better to sacrifice a limb to save the body, than that the whole body should be consumed in Gehenna it is clear what he meant.

It is worthy of note, however, that the adjective "eternal" is never applied to Gehenna. There is no such expression as "eternal Gehenna." Our Lord speaks of the "eternal fire," but of that we shall speak presently. So the words Gehenna, Tartarus, Hades and Sheol which lie behind the English word hell are simply picture words, and give us no information whatever concerning the character or the duration of punishment in the beyond.

The Truth Beneath the Symbols

There are other words, however, to indicate the dark side of the life beyond. Our Lord spoke of the "eternal fire" (Matt. 25:41); of "eternal punishment" (Matt. 25:46) of the "outer darkness" (Matt. 22:13). St. Paul speaks of the wages of sin as "death" Rom. 6:23, and of retribution as "eternal destruction" (2. Thess. 1:9). Honesty in Bible study compels a consideration of these phrases, and not of any one of them alone. When all are considered, it is abundantly clear that they cannot exactly be harmonized. Everlasting "punishment" cannot be harmonized with everlasting "destruction." And literal "fire" cannot be harmonized with "darkness" since fire implies a certain degree of light. There cannot be total darkness and live fire at the same time and in the same place. These great expressions are not intended to be harmonized. Each one is a picture word, only of one great underlying truth—the truth of retribution. Further, they are not dogmatic statements; they are images. Throughout the Bible fire stands for the symbol of divine vengeance against evil, and the symbol of remorse. These two uses of the image represent two sides of the one truth; that God is hostile to sin, and that man suffers for committing it. The nature of God is necessarily hostile to evil. He could not be a good God were it otherwise. A holy God who seeks the highest weal of his children must set himself against whatever hinders their development. To speak of God as a "consuming fire" is to set forth symbolically eternal law operating in a moral universe. The word "punishment" is also a picture word. The underlying word, Kolasis, means to prune or lop off, as a gardener prunes a tree of useless branches in the interests of the whole life of the tree. Whether the reference is to the process or the effect is not stated. It is a picture word that is before us. So also with the word "darkness," which in the Bible symbolizes two things—definiteness and the absence of good. The crucifixion of our Lord was "the hour of darkness." All evil is darkness, an antagonism to light and by reason of that it is a deprivation of good. Thus these three picture words symbolize something common underlying them all, namely, the truth of retribution.

The Penalty Fits the Sin

We must now go deeper than these words and pictures and consider the principles of retribution as set forth by our Lord. There are two passages in the Gospels which tell us all we need to know of the fact on its dark side. In these eternal principles are set down. The first passage is Luke 12:47-8: "The servant which knew his Lord's will and did it not shall be beaten with many stripes but he that knew not, and things worthy of stripes shall be beaten with few stripes." The second passage is Matt. 12:31-32, where all sin is promised forgiveness save one. In these passages the complete principles of retribution are set before us. In summary, our Lord declares that each of us is a steward for God; each is here solely to do "God's will;" the doing of that will brings blessedness; disobedience entails chastisement; the chastisement will be proportioned to the fault. But a warning is added that for some the chastisement may be ineffective. This statement of the case fulfills the conditions we have seen to be necessary. It is at once scientific, ethical and biblical. For it is not an arbitrary thing that disobedience to God's will entails chastisement; it is a necessity of the case. God's will is the law for human life, and disobedience to that law, as to any law, involves punishment. Obey the laws of health and happiness and health are yours; disobey them and you invite misery and disease. Sin of any kind is disobedience to the law of life and it brings its penalty. The character of the penalty answers to the character of the sin. Whatever a man sows that shall he also reap—in kind—whether of virtue or of vice, of love or of hate.

The Consequence of Disobedience

Now what is the consequence of disobedience to any law? Two things happen, we lose the good that it brings and we gain the evil to which it is opposed. Disobedience to God's will for human life involves the loss of the good he would give us and the gain of the evil from which his goodness would shield us. We lose light and gain darkness; love and gain hatred or suspicion; holiness and gain impurity; order and gain discord. That is retribution. It is paid out in character. And it is continuous with the sin. Hell begins upon earth. The man who says no to God, loses the Divine light, order, love and holiness here and now. Once begun the process continues; the retribution deepens. Death does not arrest it. It continues to operate on the other side. Yet with a certain difference, which is indicated by Jesus in the parable of Dives and Lazarus. The rich man is represented as dried up with thirst and without means to quench it. The flame that tormented him and the thirst were both within himself. That thirst was within him when he lived upon earth, but he masked it cleverly by artifice. By means of luxurious living he managed to stifle the cries of his deeper self. But when death snatched him from his artificial life and plunged him into the reality of the spiritual world, he had nothing wherewith to quench his thirst. The material things which had deceived him for so long were no longer available. He awoke to reality and with it to suffering. His note is ethically and religiously true to life. There can be no avoidance of retribution so long as law is law. A second principle is that chastisement is proportioned to the fault. Some, our Lord tells us, will be beaten with many stripes and some with few. This is a principle of equity. Equality of chastisement for equality of offence is unjust. The word of Jesus upon the point is decisive: "It shall be more tolerable" for some in that world than for others; "we receive according to that we have done." The idea, then, of one common hell into which all sinners will be thrown indiscriminately is foreign to the mind of Jesus. There can be no appeal from his principle "many stripes—few stripes." But this carries the inference that for the any the chastisement will be effective. We may not dogmatically say so, but we are bound to ask what happens when the "few stripes" have been given? Does it release follow the expiation? When the stripes are over the retribution is accomplished. Would it be right to continue the whipping? The inference is clear and it appeals to our sense of fairness. It is an inference also that we may draw from the nature of the chastisement.

With us punishment inflicted for wrong doing is often due to sudden anger on our part. But in God there can be no access of temper, no vindictiveness. "He chastens for our profit" (Heb. 12:16). He acts paternally—always and always with a view to a cure. Some may make an ill use of this, and "take their chance" as they say. But one who deliberately does evil idly trusting in the mercy of God to see him through, deserves all he gets on the other side. It is contemptible beyond words to live an evil life in this world, in the secret belief, against all law and reason, that we shall be just as well off yonder as if we had been good and true. It is senseless and shameful to cling to a "larger hope" while refusing to exercise a present faith in Christ.

Yet, over against this inference is to be placed the warning of Christ that one sin has no forgiveness in this age, or in that which is to come. To whom did Jesus address that terrible word? Not to the poor unfortunates who have been driven into the Lazar house through the unbridled lusts of men; not to the poor victims of hereditary handicaps; not to the wretched slum dweller and those socially disinherited through a godless social system. For these he had, and has, an infinite compassion. But he said it to scribes and Pharisees, who steeped in hypocrisy and pride, yet dared to pose before men as the elect of God. These church men were so spiritually besotted that they attributed the saving works of Jesus to the agency of the devil. That is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. It is the final confusion of good and evil. And forgiveness is extended in vain to men who cannot discern between a demon and the spirit of God. Jesus warns us that such a state is possible. Evil may become a permanent habit of life. There may be people upon whom the infinite love of God will make no impression. What will be their final fate we do not know. The Bible has nothing to say about final fate. It limits itself to this age "and that which is to come." The gospel does not stress the details of the life to come; it offers us principles which are eternal and irrefutable. Its emphasis is upon the solemnity of living, and upon the gift of life eternal in Christ. Christ came to bestow upon mankind "life to the full," that the end of our existence might be achieved. Here and now, upon this earth plane, is our grand opportunity to rise to our true stature. Here, Jesus Christ can make us what we ought to be. Practical wisdom says "Achieve your salvation now." The hour is propitious. "This is the accepted time; this is the day of salvation."

Deed and Creed

A LITTLE more deed and a little less creed,
A little more giving and a little less greed;
A little more bearing of other people's load,
A little more godspeeds on the dusty road;
A little more rose and a little less thorn
To sweeten the air for the sick and forlorn;
A little more sun and a little less glum,
And coins of gold for the uplift of the slum;
A little more Golden Rule in the marts of trade;
A little more sunshine and a little less shade;
A little more respect for fathers and mothers,
A little less stepping on the toes of others;
A little less knocking and a little more cheer
For the struggling hero who is left in the rear.
A little more love and a little less hate,
A little more neighborly chat at the gate;

Church Music

The Choir

BY FREDERICK MAXSON, ORGANIST, FIRST CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

THE choir has been humorously called the war department of the church; and I presume at times this characterization is appropriate. But if the minister, choir and organist work together harmoniously, and the congregation refrains from unjust criticism and favoritism, all rivalry and petty jealousies are eliminated, and the chances are in favor of peace.

The devotion and faithfulness of a choir are not always fully appreciated by the listeners. Even a well-paid choir could do its work in a careless and slipshod manner, were it not for its enthusiasm, interest and pride in its work artistically, and its desire to contribute to the success of the devotional service in its entirety.

The form of choir in Baptist, as in other non-liturgical churches, is varied, running from the paid quartet to the paid double quartet (a most effective combination), the volunteer semi-chorus and the chorus. If artistic work is the desideratum, it is not usually found in a volunteer organization, unless it be one like the Westminster choir of Dayton, Ohio, which consists of specially picked singers. This choir is so favorably thought of that there is a waiting list of applicants for membership. (By the way, each rehearsal is opened with prayer—a somewhat unusual proceeding.)

It must be granted that a good volunteer choir, starting with a junior choir and promotions, if well trained, can produce good effects in volume, and aid in the leadership of the congregational singing. But such a choir is apt to be a more or less uncertain quantity in both attendance and quality, especially in a large city, where the members with good voices are drawn away to other churches for pay. Various plans have been used for keeping up the attendance, in some of which each Sunday finds but 75 per cent of the singers on duty, the other 25 per cent being allowed one Sunday off per month, except on the fifth Sunday, or special occasions, when the entire force is present.

A system of fines for absence or lateness is agreed upon, the money thus collected being used to give the choir a good time. There is also a social organization.

Where there are plenty of good volunteer voices with musical training available, a volunteer choir, possibly with a paid quartet, will also be a success under proper conditions. But in a large city, the only successful choir, to my mind, for continuous good musical results, is the expenditure of the musical appropriation for voices to the number desired by the church, including soloists.

The behavior of a choir during service should be devotional, and it should take part in the entire service heartily and with interest. Enunciation in singing should be so distinct that printed words would be entirely unnecessary in following them.

The location of the choir gallery is an important consideration in a Baptist church, as space must be found for the baptistry. Sometimes the effectiveness of both choir and organ are seriously handicapped by the distance of the choir and organist from the actual instrument, so that only a portion of the volume of tone produced by the organ can be heard by either choir or organist.

Vestments are now used by the choirs of a number of Baptist churches, with a distinct gain in uniformity and the absence of conflicting colors in the dresses and hats of the female members. Head coverings are sometimes dispensed with, in both vested and unvested choirs.

To my mind, the best results are obtained by having an accomplished organist-director, who can plan and carry out without friction the study and interpretation of the various choir selections.

He must understand psychology, be a diplomat, possess a certain magnetism and enthusiasm, and have the respect and cooperation of his choir. Personal plus musical equipment, with the proper vocal material, should produce ideal results.

Two examples of the splendid working out of the work of the organist-director are Dr. Harry Matthies of St. Luke's P. E. Church, Philadelphia, and Dr. Clarence Dickinson of Brick Presbyterian Church, New York. Their choir and organ work is on the highest plane, eminently satisfactory to all listeners.

A Shop in Galilee

BY WILL CHAMBERLAIN

*SOMETIMES I think if I could be
A carpenter as Jesus was,
And plan and build the same as he,
Plying the hammer and the saws,
Causing the ribbons of the wood
To curl like waves about my feet,
Life might be better understood,
Would happier be and more complete.*

*For when I'd shape a joist or beam,
Or smooth the roughness from a board,
Might not some glory of that dream
Of his, my fellow and my Lord
Descend on me, and might not I
Catch through the lapse of centuries
The joy of his plane's soft cry,
His shingle-tapping rhapsodies?*

*Might not the rafters firmly set
To hold the crowning roof in place
Suggest a surer parapet
Plus love reflected from his face;
And might not I in each design
My workmanship should make arise
See in far outline his divine
And lasting temple in the skies?*

*Why should I choose, as others have,
To charm the ear of senates? Why
Murmur for place that cannot give
A shred of comfort when I die?
Does not his love surpass all fame,
Did he not speak the deathless law
Of common toil? Is not his name
Forever linked with square and saw?*

Men You Want to Know

WE HAVE many letters concerning the contributors to THE BAPTIST columns. "Who is this or that man? Tell us something more about him. We'll enjoy his writings even more than we do now"—along this trend come the requests.

Very well. From time to time we'll try to "make you acquainted" with writers whose names appear frequently in THE BAPTIST.

Meet Dr. Frédéric C. Spurr!

No series of articles that has appeared in THE BAPTIST has won more comment than those from the pen of Frederic C. Spurr—three series thus far: The New "Psychology and the Evangelical Faith"; "The Old Faith and the New Knowledge"; and "Death and the Life Beyond." He is the author of fifteen or sixteen volumes; in his own words his "main desire is to reconcile the modern man with the evangelical faith; all of my writings with this purpose in view."

On his father's side of Spanish stock; ancestors Roman Catholics. His mother's father a Catholic too. Was designed for the Anglican ministry. An offer of all expenses paid if he would go to Oxford University and be trained for Anglican church. Refused for conscience sake. Became Baptist by conviction. Joined Metropolitan Tabernacle. Educated at public school. Notts—afterwards privately. Took science and languages. Specialized in chemistry. Took courses in philosophy in France and Switzerland. Trained to become an "apologetic" lecturer on Christian evidences. Lectured regularly in Hyde Park on Christian evidences and conducted classes for young men desirous cial attention to French apologetic literature.

His ministry: (1) Cardiff five years. Church empty when he took it—crowded within a month, became too small—generally full an hour before time of service. Had to leave because congregation had outgrown accommodations and there was no chance of enlargement. Many of the converts now in the ministry and mission field.

(2) 1891 went to London with Doctor Meyer and Doctor Clifford in connection with the Forward movement as special preacher and "missioner" for three years only. Baptist Union then asked him to become missionary for the Baptist church generally in Britain. Had ten years at this. Then returned to pastorate.

(3) 1902 Maze Pond church, London. In a low condition. That was filled.

(4) 1909 called to Melbourne, Australia. Started Bible school each Tuesday night. One thousand in attendance. "The greatest thing Australia has ever known" (Dr. W. H. Fitchett). Had to transfer Sunday night to the auditorium—2750 people. This crowded out too.

(5) 1914. On eve of war, called to succeed F. B. Meyer at Regents Park Chapel, London. War came. Church filled with visitors and soldiers. In 1922 lease of chapel fell in and could not renew it. The chapel became a garage and the church was disbanded. "A crime and a tragedy," comments Doctor Spurr.

(6) 1922 came to Hamstead Road,

Birmingham. Beautiful church. Generally considered the most beautiful Baptist church in England. Very low down—very small congregation. Now crowded at night—extra seats in aisles and often people unable to get in.

He has been honored as president of Victoria Baptist Union (Australia), 1913; president of London Baptist Association, England, 1921; president of National Free Church Council, England, 1923.

Robert A. Ashworth!

For years Robert A. Ashworth has been making valued contributions to THE BAPTIST. Articles from his pen which have appeared lately are "The Maintenance of an Optimistic Spirit" and "A Revival of Personal Responsibility."

As many of our readers know, Doctor Ashworth is the pastor of the Baptist church at Yonkers, N. Y. He is an A. B. and A. M. of Columbia University, a graduate of Union Theological Seminary, and in 1912 was D. D.'d by Brown University.

He is an author of books—"The Union of Christian Forces in America" (winner of $1000 prize offered by the American Sunday School Union for best book on Christian unity), and "Being a Christian."

He is a member of the administrative committee of Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; member of executive board of editors and contributing author of "The Outline of Christianity."

The Devotional Life

Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom.—Genesis 13:12.

The Heart's Desire

His windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, Daniel kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks.—Daniel 6:10.

MALCOLM JAMES MACLEOD

WHICH way is life leading, pointing for you?

The first step toward wrongdoing is looking the wrong way. Pitching a tent and opening a window, may be trifling acts or momentous acts. Men do not take Sodom at a bound. They approach it by stages. Judge every act by the way that it is headed. If it points toward Jerusalem, commend it. The matter of a spiritual nature is often a question of facing the right or the wrong way. The test is not "What do I believe?" but "Which way do I incline?"

Because, if I incline toward the wrong way, it is only a question of time how soon I shall be found in that way. A little later in Genesis, we read: "They took Lot, who dwelt in Sodom." He was no longer toward it, or near it, but in it.

This is the question: "What am I looking at, hoping for? Which way is my life slanting? Is there a holy city of my soul toward which I turn in prayer?"

Of Significance

It is significant that Lot dwelt twenty years in Sodom, and at the end of this time there could not be assembled in Sodom ten righteous souls. Even his own family had become as the people of the place.

Taking thought for the morrow may be only provident. Where is the point where anxiety and worry become a sin? Self-respect is good for any man. Where is the point where it becomes pride? Who shall draw the line?

This same idea is behind the word "trespass."

Every sin consists in crossing some line, it was thought. But it is not always so. The teaching of Jesus is deeper. Sin starts in the longing look. The caged panther may not pounce upon you, but it is not because he is gentle. He would spring if he could. If the heart's desire is to be good, the man is good already. What a man longs for, that in God's sight he is.

There is a word in the Epistle of John that throws on this matter a beam of light. "Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not." He may be retreating two steps and advancing three. God asks not Where? but Whither? Are we going up the ladder or are we going down?

Any man who expects to pass his finals by a deathbed repentance is fooling himself. We shall be judged by the whole swing and drift of our record; not by the last few days of life, but by the whole career. Many a man has stolen who is not at heart a thief.

This is the peril of our age, that so many persons have no outlook, no open window. The blinds are drawn, and they see no sun, no stars, no sky, no larger world.

And among us who call ourselves Christians, many need to throw up the window, so that fresh air will rush in and sweep away cobwebs of formalism and traditionalism and blow through musty creeds and stale theologies, that Christ's glory may shine forth undimmed.

I have brought you two stories from far away days. But Lot's choice comes to us all. Prosperity is not a wicked thing, yet it may be won at too costly a price. We need to pray: "Lord, lead us not into temptation." It is so easy to follow the path of least resistance.

Lot did it. We see this law everywhere. Pour a glass of water on the ground, and it will follow this line.

Daniel was exposed to temptation, but he "wore the white flower of a blameless life." He opened his windows and saw by faith the temple that he loved.

One word more. Human life often is compared to a river. Our beautiful Hudson rises in the Adirondacks four thousand feet above the sea, and then flows over the oldest rock in America, east, west, south, even north, winding sixteen miles through the highlands. It almost loses itself in a little sea; it becomes a narrow gorge; it hews out a great dyke of traprock that we call the Palisades. All along its path it is freighted with historic fact. You may talk of obstacles in its path, of rocks, of mountains. Nothing is insurmountable.

Purpose

All the way the Hudson is destined for the ocean: "I am bound to reach it," the river might say. "I cannot stop, for I have an engagement with the Atlantic."

Such is human life.

From God it came. To God it must return. Nothing in the way matters—nothing, nothing. Christ's scale of values is so different from ours. Money, fame, comfort, all these are far down in his valuation, and they must not interfere or obstruct our progress.

A lad who afterward became the governor of Massachusetts was once nearly drowned. Speaking of the experience to his mother, he said: "Mother, I just thought of you, and I kept on swimming."

Let us fix our eyes on the goal and keep on swimming. Let us lift up our eyes to the hills, from whence cometh our help. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith."

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topics for May 23

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meeting Helps" will be to the following books: "Modern Discipleship and What It Means," by Woods; "Twelve Tests of Character," by Fosdick; "The Man Nobody Knows," by Barton; "Gates and Keys to Bible Books," by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible," by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church," by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers," by Miller; "God's Dynamite," by Lerrigo. The books may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society. A few others may be added later.

This lesson is based on the second chapter of "God's Dynamite" beginning on page 25 and continuing on to page 43.

In meeting have some one tell of how McKinley prayed, and of how the author says the prayer was answered. Others can tell of how the mission work in the Philippines is going today.

The leader may raise the question as to whether it was McKinley's prayer which opened the way for missions in these islands, or if it was due to the prayers of all Christians or to some other reason. After a general discussion on this question, the leader may point out the value of prayer at all times, perhaps bringing in ideas from other sources.

Since the purpose of the "Book of Remembrance" is to have people remember the mission work of the denomination in their prayers, perhaps this book could be brought to the attention of the young people. This may be a good time to institute its use in the society, if it has not already been used.

If you do not know how to go about using this "Book of Remembrance," send to the B. Y. P. U. of A. Headquarters or a leaflet giving suggestions for its use in the young people's meetings. The "Book of Remembrance" may be had from the literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation for 25 cents.

Youth Talks Again

To assemble a body of youth to consider religion, the church, war and recent social conditions is, in the slang of the day, to "start something." It harges the youth with the thrilling possibility of focusing upon them the attention of adults. It produces a gasp of apprehension or a sigh of hopelessness with many of those adults whose attention it attracts. The youth conferences at Birmingham, held under the auspices of the young people's department of the International Council of Religious Education, April 16-18, was perhaps thus regarded.

As the 600 young people between the ages of sixteen and twenty-four, representing forty-two states and provinces, and 150 adults in the role of muzzled spectators, were called to order, there was an atmosphere of expectancy; a feeling that something was going to happen. And if it did not happen, disappointment might be expected to reign.

Something did happen. No, it will not disturb things as they are—at least just now. But there was a goodly number of those 600 youth that went away under the thrill of the closing challenge of Prof. Howard McCluskey of Michigan with a conviction that things "as they are" are not what they "ought to be," and in the not-too-distant future "must be."

Speakers and Program

It was a well-conceived and constructively-carried-out program. The addresses and discussions centered around five themes; citizenship and the church, home, social problems, race, and nations. On Friday evening and Saturday morning these themes were presented consecutively in addresses by speakers who during the next two days served as counsellors for the five discussion groups into which the conference separated.

These speakers and counsellors were well qualified for their tasks. Stanley High of the Methodist foreign mission board was the spokesman for the church; Mrs. Grace Sloan Overton of Chicago Training School for the home; Prof. E. D. Soper of Duke University for social problems; Dr. Will W. Alexander of the committee on interracial cooperation for the races; and Harry Holmes of the World Alliance of International Association through the Church for the nations.

Each address was followed by a ten-minute questioning by the delegates. From the inquiries it was very evident that what the speakers said registered and the young people were ready to respond to the challenges as soon as they could be reasonably sure of the way.

Aroused as they were by the presentation in the addresses these young people were promptly on hand for the discussion groups, for two and a half hours on Saturday and one and a half Sunday morning. Each group was presided over by one of their own number and the speaker-counsellor was there to help in case of need on the matter of information or procedure. For each group a finding committee of four or five members was selected by vote of the delegates present.

The plan of discussion was to inquire what was the situation regarding the suggestion, what it ought to be and what they proposed to do about making "what is" more nearly "what ought to be."

Each delegate present was furnished with a list of the more important problems involved in the relationship.

The question and discussion of the delegates—and for the most part both of these were confined to the delegates—revealed at least two attitudes characteristic of human nature. Some displayed a sense of keen interest and understanding; others manifested the lack of knowledge or blinding prejudice that characterizes even adults. Not alone was this readily evidenced by those who spoke but in the group as a whole by its applause of those who participated in the discussion.

Following the separate meetings of the several findings committees they met together to review their respective findings before presentation to the entire conference on Sunday afternoon.

The presentation of the findings to the entire body proved to be the most lively part of the conference. They were presented by the leaders of the several groups. Most of the findings were promptly approved by the conference as a whole. However, the recommendation for social justice for the negro brought a demand for defining in the finding the meaning of social justice as applied to educational opportunities, living conditions, economic relationships, traveling facilities and standing before the courts. With this qualification the conference approved the encouragement of social justice.

The finding regarding the R. O. T. C. and military camps struck a snag. Despite the fact that the conference heartily agreed that all war was un-Christian, discussion was heated and intense as well as voluminous on the pros and cons of these and similar institutions of our civil life. Argument on both sides revealed amusing inconsistencies and irreconcilable logic. By very narrow margin a finding calling for the abolition of these things was ruled out of the conference.

Gatherings of this kind cannot be evaluated. Observations only can be made which suggest possibilities. The constancy of the young people in their attendance and interest in all the gatherings was stimulating. Intelligence harnessed to the needs and demands of the day means changes in the things as they are to more nearly approach what they ought to be.

Not only in those who presided over the discussion groups but in many who spoke there was evidence of a tremendous potential leadership. In it all there was manifested confirmation of what is to be found in books and addresses by adult observers, youth is ready, willing and capable. They ask only a chance.

The Chimney Corner

Old Cora

IN ONE of Glenn Frank's unconventional talks he shows that it is variety that gives value to life and organization. That "difference" does not imply inferiority. To give a company dinner there must be the caterer, the assisting cooks and dish-washers as well as the woman in silks who receives the guests and all are necessary to the function; one is not superior to the other so far as the giving of this dinner is concerned, but their duties are vastly different, and none could take the place of the other or be dispensed with.

Something of the same impression is given in the way in which Charles C. Norris in "Pig Iron" (E. P. Dutton & Co.) handles the case of Old Cora. Where is the "color question" under such treatment? Hear:

Mary Smith, a South Carolinian, has, perforce, become a northerner. "The hired girls of the North were 'white trash' to her, and had it not been for the faithful old Cora, who although she had been given her freedom years before, refused to leave her beloved mistress, Theophilus Smith doubted whether his wife would have survived the first bitter New England winter."

Some years later: "Narcissa was slicing bread on the cheese chest, and Mrs. Smith frying corn-meal in a smoking pan on the stove. Cora, crippled with rheumatism, could no longer help. Her old joints had hardened into unbending rigidity and the mistress she had served so long and faithfully, with the aid of her daughter now took care of her in turn. Mrs. Smith would not hear of her being taken to a hospital or an asylum. As long as the Smiths had a roof to shelter them, she declared, Cora should share it. The old negress was a great burden, for she was utterly helpless and had to be washed, dressed and tended like a baby. Theophilus Smith used to frown and shake his head. He hated to see his wife with this extra care upon her shoulders—shoulders which carried far too great a load as it was."

Another scene: "Narcissa busied herself with Cora's breakfast, and presently carried it to the patient old cripple. It had been impracticable to maintain her in the small, dark closet off the kitchen which she had formerly occupied. The negress had been established in the dining-room of which the family in recent years had made no use. Narcissa jerked up the shade, pushed the window higher and with cheerful gossip sat down on the side of the bed, and began to feed the invalid teaspoonful by teaspoonful."

And then the curtain: "On the coldest night of the winter old Cora died. They found her in the morning seemingly still asleep, but when Narcissa tried to rouse her there was no response. Keeping warm during the nights was a difficult matter for one and all. Every available bit of covering was in use and Cora had had more than her share. On the night preceding her death the fires in both stoves had been built high, and Narcissa, before retiring, had put a hot brick in the cripple's bed. But the piercing cold was not to be withstood, the old woman's body had little natural warmth in it, and some time during the bitterest hours, the thin blood within her veins had yielded to the penetrating cold and ceased to flow.

"Mary Smith with her own hands washed the old shriveled body and dressed it in the best garment she possessed; Nick tore down some boarding back of the barn and constructed a rough coffin; he and Sam dug deep into the snow-drifts among the trees close by, and with pick and axe attacked the frozen ground until a shallow grave was scooped out of the earth. The boy never forgot the sad and awesome funeral: Nick and his father struggling with the heavy box through the snow, his mother following, wiping her wet eyes; Narcissa with bowed head and clasped hands; and presently his father standing beside the open grave, his white hair and beard flowing in the chill winter wind like some tribal patriarch, prayer-book in hand, reading eloquently, solemnly:

Overworked Words

IS your vocabulary of qualifying words limited to one word? Is everything "nice" or "wonderful" or "splendid"? Anent, read this poem clipped from the Saturday Evening Post and profit thereby:

Quaint

WINNIE has a new word;
It is "quaint."
If a thing is absurd
It is quaint.
If a book or a play
Is the least bit risqué
She is certain to say—"It is quaint."

Does a storm rend the sky?
It is quaint.
Is the moon riding high?
It is quaint.
Nothing's "wonderful" now,
"Picturesque" or a "wow";
Be it canyon or cow—It is quaint.

What was "marvelous" once
Now is quaint;
The trained elephant's stunts—
They are quaint.
All in all, verily
Winnie's diction is—See!
The locution's got me—Just too quaint!

Silence That Speaks

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK, DEAN OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

BARROWS was a quiet man, I never recall hearing him make a public speech, and even in private he listened to others talk more frequently than engaged in conversation.

When Lettie Hunt went astray and all the neighbors were lifting their eyebrows in criticism of her conduct; gossiping at every crossroad about the disgrace of it all, it was Barrows with his wife went after her and brought her back and gave her a home and refuge.

His children have told me that he seldom if ever laid down any rules or regulations for their guidance. He never talked to them a great deal about what they should or should not do.

It is told in the life of St. Francis of Assisi that he said one day to a young monk under his care: "Brother, let us go down to the town and preach."

They set off together; they walked through the main streets and they turned often into the byways; they met the rich and the poor as they walked along, and finally by another road the one by which they had set out they came back to the monastery gate.

"You have forgotten, father," the young priest reminded St. Francis, "we went down to the town to preach."

"My son," St. Francis answered, "I have preached. We were preaching while we were walking. We have been seen by many; our behavior has been closely watched; it was thus that I preached our morning sermon. It is no use, my son, to walk anywhere and preach unless we preach everywhere we walk."

As I look back upon his life and through the years that have intervened since I knew him, I believe Barrows silent as he was, did the most effective preaching of any one I ever knew.—Chicago Daily News.

Director Frank T. Hines of the United States veterans' bureau calls attention to the world war veterans to the necessity of filing their applications for reinstatement and converting their term (war risk insurance prior to July 2, 1926, as the final date fixed by the present law) for accepting such applications. Ninety per cent of the ex-service men allow their policies to lapse, with the result that at the present time there are about four million policies no longer in force with a computed value of nearly $300,000,000.

Mopsie's Town of Contentment

BY MARGARET T. APLEGARTH

WAR?!

Mopsie went to the fireplace and removed the firescreen. There stood a row of five quaint little cardboard houses, made from tan shoeboxes, with a fold of red cardboard, tent-fashion, laid in top of each box for a roof, and with the lids cut into chimneys glued against the side of each house. There were small and symmetrical branches of trees (stuck in spools) in prim rows behind the houses. It was a real little street.

"A French street," Mopsie explained. The kind of street which belongs in a town of Contentment. On every roof you will notice a big letter. See, on this first house it is P; on the second, E; on the third, A; on the fourth, C; on the fifth, E. What do those five letters spell?"

"Peace!" sang Mopsie's spellbound audience.

"Peace," echoed Mopsie. "And now you can tell me what peace brings to each home in this Town of Contentment. Here is the House of P, with others earning a comfortable living and others spending it economically—what word beginning with P describes the state of such a household?"

"Prosperity," suggested a certain bright boy; and Mopsie printed "Prosperity" on the roof of this first house.

"Now, here's the E house, where fathers and brothers and uncles are strong busy men, robust and brisk and bustling; where children are lively and jolly, playing and giggling all day; where women are sewing and sweeping and baking, singing as they work. What word, beginning with E, describes such health?"

Finally some one suggested "Energy," and Mopsie printed it on the second roof. "The third house, with an A on it, is a place where fathers love their wives and adore their children, where dear old grandfathers are precious to all the family, where children worship their mothers, where mothers are devotion itself—give me a word beginning with A to describe such love.

"Affection!" shouted the boy from next door, who knew all about such delicious family affairs himself.

"Here's the C house, where families thank God every night for their homes and their food and their work and their joy, where nothing worries them greatly because their blessings are so many. Give me a word beginning with C to describe such blissful satisfaction."

"Contentment, of course," smiled three wise men in a chorus. "Last of all is another E house, where young people are full of vim and vigor and pep, where nothing is too hard to try, and work is play, because they are overflowing with high spirits, sure of success and greatness. Do you know a word beginning with E to describe this thrill of hopefulness?"

Almost everybody answered, "Enthusiasm." So all the little houses stood in a row: Prosperity, Energy, Affection, Contentment, Enthusiasm, elbow to elbow, so that every guest could see that peace really did include all five such meanings.

Then, through one door stalked Tom, and through another door stalked Dick. They met at the fireplace. Said Tom, sternly: "This town belongs to my government."

"Indeed it doesn't!" shouted Dick, "my government owns it."

They wrangled back and forth about it in a very noisy fashion, each claiming the entire territory, with all its coal mines, its minerals, its forests.

"Well, let's settle it. Let's go to war and fight it out. I'm thankful to say my nation has a big army," said Tom.

"Mine has a fine army, too," said Dick, as he set up his toy cannon on the left of the hearth, Tom setting his on the right. They began booming at one another until off popped the red roofs, down toppled the tan houses. Tom set fire to some of them, Dick set fire to others, until the hearth was full of the sad blaze of little cardboard homes. And not a guest laughed! I think they were feeling all the thrills and tingles Mopsie had planned, as that contented little street shriveled to ashes, blackening, caving in, blazing away to nothingness.

Then in came Mopsie, a tragic figure with a black veil covering her face. She was wiping her poor eyes, the very picture of grief. She knelt beside the hearth sadly, and swept away the ashes of the first house. "See!" she cried. "See all that is left of prosperity when war leaves a town"—and there on the hearth, inside the foundation lines of the first little house was printed in chalk the one significant word "poverty."

"Look now what war does to energy," she sighed; the guests craned their nice young necks to spell the next word, written in chalk—"emaciation"; Mopsie knew just how to describe what it meant: "Grown men, crippled, wasted away to mere shadows; one without an arm, another without a leg; one blinded, another paralyzed. Little children, with twisted, stunted bodies, because they cannot get the proper food to eat; scared little children who will never get over the terror of roaring cannons killing daddies, burning homes."

Then she swept away the ashes where the House of Affection had been, disclosing the word "affliction" in chalked letters, showing only too plainly what war does to the love and devotion of families. Making widows! Orphans! Death! Sorrows!

Underneath the ashes of the House of Contentment no one was surprised to see that war had written the word "Confusion."

As for the word hidden beneath the ashes of the House of Enthusiasm you can guess for yourself what young men would feel about their future if they had lost a leg or an arm or an eye, if they were hopelessly crippled; or what girls would feel with their sweethearts dead, their families gone, all their bright hopes for tomorrow shattered—"Emptiness."

Tom stood up very straight: "I don't know how the rest of you fellows feel about it, but I don't think this kind of business settles anything fairly. It just unsettles! If the grown-up people in the world haven't figured this out for themselves, then it's high time you and I did something about it. Let's tell boys and girls all over the world what war really does, to show that it doesn't settle anything fairly; that high courage and love for your native land can be shown in braver, finer ways than by fighting. The only man in this town who deliberately kills to get what he wants is a criminal—the rest of us don't fight, we take our wrongs to a law court and have a judge and a jury settle them. If murder is wrong for individuals, it's wrong for nations. As for me, I hate it. And Dick hates it. So does Mopsie. Do you?"

"Yes!" "Yes!" "Yes!" "Yes!" said the eager young voices all over the room.—(From "Never Again," Everyland Publishing Co.)

Dear Miss Applegarth,

You will laugh to see this, but my cousin got it from a book of World Wide Guild programs you wrote called "Obstacle Races." We explored there and found this game of twisted Baptist schools for negroes. 1. Lampens. 2. Snortarhh. 3. Thrame. 4. Hemroose. 5. Hopsib. 6. Wash. 7. Needbict. 8. Skif. These names untwisted spell: 1. Spelman. 2. Hartshorn. 3. Mather. 4. Morehouse. 5. Bishop. 6. Shaw. 7. Benedict. 8. Fisk. In this same booklet I found this list about the negroes who graduate from these Baptist schools. 1535 graduates are teachers; 741, preachers; 570, physicians; 151, farmers; 117, pharmacists; 116, lawyers; 73, merchants; 30, nurses; 6, foreign missionaries; 1190, unclassified; i.e., wives, mothers, farmer's assistants, etc.

I think this is a splendid list, don't you? As you wrote me once, it's nice to think what grand adventures our Sunday offerings do have! This is a very long letter, but as I never wrote before to be published grandma thinks maybe you will print it. Your friend,

Mabel Farmer

Among Ourselves

Chicago Baptist Week

BAPTISTS have been at work in Chicago nearly a hundred years, but never before have they undertaken anything quite like Chicago Baptist week. All of the ninety churches in Chicago association will unite in a cooperative program to signalize the anniversary meeting of the association and to have a good old-fashioned "get-together." But they will do it in the Chicago way, and this story tells how they will do it.

In every church and every meeting just one subject will hold attention. It is this: "Our Baptist Contribution for Today." Every part of the varied program will bring forward its own phase of that contribution, and every day from May 9 to May 12 will have some part of the story to tell.

On Sunday, May 9, there will be a general interchange of pulpits among the Baptist pastors. Every church will have opportunity to hear the pastor of some neighboring church. The Baptist ministers' conference is arranging the schedule. It will be a day of happy fellowship and acquaintance.

On Monday the ministers' conference will meet at 10:30 a. m., at Immanuel church to exchange experiences of the day before and to hear a great address from Dr. James S. Kirtley on "The Baptist Objective."

District Meetings

Monday evening will be given to three district meetings, each larger than an ordinary association. The program will be enriched by the active participation of the young people's unions, by special music from the united choirs, by fellowship dinners at 6:30 p. m. at 50 cents a plate and by a special survey of Baptist work in each district by specialists who know. The north side meeting will be held in North Shore church; west side in Second church; south side in Woodlawn church. Speakers will be Rev. E. A. Shulls, Miss Laura Kinderman, Rev. R. A. Jensen, Rev. E. B. Freeman, Prof. Chas. T. Holman and others.

All of the Tuesday meetings will be held in Englewood church. In keeping with the cumulative plan of the week, additional elements will be contributed to the general program again by the young people, also by the Woman's Baptist Union of Chicago, and by the department of religious education. Rev. W. R. Jewell will give a vacation Bible school demonstration at 11 a. m., followed by Mrs. George Wheaton Taft with an address on "Achievements of Baptist Women."

A picnic luncheon will intervene. The afternoon program beginning at 1:30 o'clock will feature a solo by Mrs.

Hawkins of Olivet church, sandwiched between addresses by Rev. David Gustafsen of China and Dr. John Thompson, executive secretary of the Methodist city mission board, Mrs. E. S. Osgood will present C. W. C. work, and after an intermission the city union of the World Wide Guild will hold a reception and musical in the church parlors.

At and after dinner (6:15 onward) the young people will break loose with a program of music, songs, yells, playlets, etc., staged by district groups and by a number of personal participants in various roles, namely: Stewart Crippen, Judson Tyley, Rev. Mr. Kehrl, Laura Kinderman, Merle J. Lucas, Ellen T. Benson, Norman Crissey, Bernice Noel and B. J. Badger.

Wednesday ought to overflow the large Englewood building, where all of the meetings of the day are to be held. Beginning at 2 p. m., there will be a serial review of the manifold activities of the association as a whole. This will be followed at 3:05, by the great interpretative address of the whole week by Dr. Charles W. Gilkey on "The Baptist Outlook." Rev. D. C. Shulls will develop some implications of the same theme in the Baptist life of Chicago. Prof. Chas. T. Holman will show in a survey what has been done, and Rev. W. R. Jewell what is being attempted, in the way of religious education within the field of the association.

Two dinners will be served at 6:15. At one, the body of the association will make merry. At the other the religious education workers will interest themselves about the formation of a council of religious education. At 7:45 an original birthday pageant in honor of "Father B. E. C. Dearborn" will round out the festival week and send everybody home dreaming great Baptist dreams.

West China Letter

By JOE TAYLOR

WHILE I was sitting at breakfast this morning, a notice was brought in signed by the president of the West China Union University, saying that he had been informed by the provincial commissioner of education that March 12, 13 and 14 had been declared as a holiday in honor of the memory of Sun Yat Sen. That is today and tomorrow and Sunday are to be given up to remembering China's great agitator and what he has done for the republic. It is all fitting and proper from the Chinese point of view and mission schools are ready to follow their custom. But it certainly does eat into the school term. We began teaching classes on March the first and had about half of the students present. They have been wandering ever since—I registered one yesterday. It is extremely difficult; indeed, some educators think it impossible to get students back during the first month of Chinese New Year. They cannot think of leaving their homes before the tenth of the moon and then some of them have to travel anywhere from ten to ten days' journey before they reach the school. This university advertises that any student registering during the appointed days will be allowed a reduction of one dollar on his tuition. This catches an increasing number, and goes to prove that with the right kind of inducement a student can be persuaded to leave his home during the first days of the year.

Mission School Problems

The mission schools are having a full share of problems just now; and the least of them is in the realm of religious instruction and Christian ship. Many questions are being asked and various plans are being devised making both the instruction and the ship more effective. When I came to West China, it was quite easy to preach Christian truth; for the fact that the missionary was doing the preaching sufficient guarantee that it was all right. A listener might go to sleep, but in the full assurance that the "old" "doctrine" would be preached that he need not wake up before time for the benediction. There was some comfort in this both for the preacher and the listener; but that has changed since then. A whole lot of "new thought" has come in like a flood; thousands of schools have opened and tens of thousands of students have entered them. Thousands have been sent to Japan and other foreign countries and much literature of a new nature has been broadcast over the land. The students are awake and are beginning to ask questions. No wise teacher will regret this; for he has been working for just this result. But in other matters, the Chinese do not react to western stimulus as the west would like to have them. They prefer to be independent and eclectic. Perhaps they don't center their attention on fundamentals but go off at a tangent and surprise their instructors with a query that is disconcerting and not easy to answer.

Take, for instance, these questions from students in two middle schools—one for boys and one for girls—in the Yangtze valley. The mission which conducts these schools is known to be conservative in its theology. I copy questions from the January, 1926, number of the Educational Review, a progressive and up-to-date journal.

shed by the China Christian Educational Association.

Questions: Where is God after all? Why may we not worship other gods besides God? Why does not God destroy the devil? Since all men are created by God, why is there the difference between the yellow race and the white race? Why does not Jesus conquer the devil and save people from going to destruction? Why as soon as you have believed in Jesus must you be ridiculed by the people of your home village? Is everything in the Bible trustworthy? What is the difference between prayer and the chanting of (Buddhist) priests? Is it (Buddhist) superstition? Are miracles believable? How can the dead rise again? Have ceremonies anything to do with salvation? On entering the church must we do away with bad indulgences? Why are there many Christians who have not done away with them? Can good people who do not believe in Christianity be saved? Why cannot present-day Christians do miracles? Why did not the people of our country receive the true doctrine in ancient times? How shall I act in regard to ancestors? How shall a Christian act in regard to himself? What reception should a Christian have of the world?

These questions constitute an examination that might keep some of our specialists on theology fairly busy. They are a sign of the times. The Chinese student is no longer willing to accept ex-cathedra statements from his instructors. Some of the questions remind us of the theological difficulties of Manichaeism; others enter into the realm of ethics; but none of them reflect any respect for Jesus Christ. These questions are followed by a series of criticisms, which lack of space forbids me to quote; but even in the criticisms there is not the slightest indication of disrespect for the Son of God and Son of Man. To those whose eyes are open to the signs of the times, surely this means that the strength of the missionary and of the Chinese Christian alike abides in Christ; and that the closer we can copy that peerless example and show forth his life in our own imperfect lives, the nearer we shall come to the secret of victorious power and the sooner will his kingdom come.

Mary Trowbridge House, Kalamazoo College

THE Women's Baptist Mission Society of Michigan, under the leadership of its president, Miss Florence E. Grant of Detroit, has presented Kalamazoo College with a modern, fireproof dormitory for women. This evidence of the loyalty and generosity of the Baptist women of Michigan is in keeping with the relationship maintained between the denomination and its college from the time of its founding in 1833.

Mary Trowbridge House is named for the daughter of a pioneer Baptist minister. As a student in the college in the late fifties and afterward as a pastor's wife, religious leader and donor to the college, Mary Day Trowbridge kept up the courage and faith of those who struggled through lean years.

The dormitory provides those refined and healthful living conditions which are important factors in a college education. Situated on an oak knoll in a twenty-five acre grove the house has a remarkable air of peace; while the whole setting is one of sylvan charm. It provides rooms for eighty-four students and dining-room accommodations for 175. Complete living suites are provided for the dean of women and the matron of the house. An attractive reception room contributes to the social life of the women students and its extension into an ample sun parlor on the east adds comfort and cheer.

No feature of the thoroughly modern dormitory for women is lacking. Kitchens, laundry, play-room, hospital, semi-private parlors, in fact everything is provided to contribute to the health, comfort and happiness of the modern young woman.

The Baptist women of Michigan have responded heroically in providing and furnishing this building. They are just now engaged in an enthusiastic endeavor to secure funds necessary for the final payments on the building. Out of love, consecration and sacrifice these loyal women have paid well toward $100,000. They are now determined to secure in cash $43,000 by May 15, 1926. Women's circles in the churches throughout the state are responding to the leadership of the state officers and special committees.

Kalamazoo College was one of the first colleges of the country to adopt coeducation. Education under Christian influence has done much for women and consequently for the world-wide kingdom of God. In view of these facts it would seem fitting that men and women of our Baptist constituency, not only of Michigan but generally, should desire to cooperate with their Baptist sisters of Michigan in providing without debt this memorial of pioneer Baptist consecration and a forerunner of larger undertakings for Christ and Christian service.

News from Maine

By E. C. WHITEMORE

STANDING room was at a premium on Easter day at the Central Square church, Portland, and on every Sunday great crowds attend the ministry of Rev. F. F. Peterson. Twenty-two were received into the church on that day, fourteen by baptism. The enlarged scale of work of the church is being fully supported and all bills are paid. The church will meet the expenses of Pastor and Mrs. Peterson to the national anniversaries at Washington, an example worthy of imitation.

At Farmington Easter Sunday was marked by great congregations and the baptism of twelve young people by Pastor W. S. Boardman. Three of these unite with the church in Temple where Pastor Boardman supplies on Sunday afternoons. Several have united with the church in Farmington by experience or by letter, and all the organizations of the church are doing good work.

An exceedingly busy and efficient ministry is that of Rev. Alexander Henderson at Fairfield. The Sunday school is overflowing, every department of the church is happy in its work and is constantly enlarging. Fourteen were baptized on Easter Sunday. An unusual feature of his ministry is a monthly service at the Central Maine Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Fairfield Heights, where not a few patients from Baptist homes in Maine are seeking relief.

At the chapel at Shawmut, also, there is large attendance and a thriving Sunday school.

Dr. E. C. Whittemore was glad to note, as a recent preacher in Dexter, the fine results of the work of Pastor Hazelton who has just gone to Freeport, in increased congregations and efficient departments. On the evening of Easter he baptized three young people into the same church where he was baptized as a boy.

Pastor Hass and the First church, Waterville, are enjoying and are using constantly, their renovated church, which was recently rededicated with appropriate services covering three days. Nearly $40,000 has been expended, including $12,000 for the new organ, which was given by his family as a memorial of Deacon Horace Purinton who was for many years a loyal worker in the church and superintendent of its Sunday school. The Philbrick parlors are a memorial to Mrs. Minnie R. Philbrick, wife of Deacon Frank B. Philbrick, and church historian, and were dedicated by her class of one hundred women. A beautiful baptistry, the gift of his family, is the memorial of Deacon Howard Calvin Morse. Executive Secretary Dr. Irving B. Mower gave the sermon of dedication and addresses on the program were by Dr. C. E. Owen, Rev. H. R. Mitchell, Dr. E. C. Whittemore, former pastor, and representatives of the local churches. The baptistry already has been used in the baptism of seventeen young people.

The First church, Portland, "Maine's largest Protestant church," is pressing steadily forward in its broad ministry. The additions during the year to the membership are between fifty and sixty. The church has its own broadcasting station and its services "on the air" bring comfort and inspiration to many people who otherwise would have no such ministry or music. There is also a radio service at noon conducted by the pastors of other churches. Among those who have spoken recently are Rev. A. W. Brown of Stroudwater, Rev. Raymond Buker of Sabattus, and Rev. John Dunston, South Portland.

Pacific Coast Letter

BY LEONARD W. RILEY

Death of Dr. Hinson

REV. WALTER BENWELL HINSON, pastor of the East Side church, Portland, Ore., passed away on Thursday, Apr. 8. On the previous Saturday he was found unconscious in his study at the church and remained so until the end.

Doctor Hinson was born in London, England, May 14, 1862, and came to America in 1883. He held pastorates at Montreal, Canada, San Diego, California, and in Portland, Ore. His monumental work was done with the East Side church, of which he became pastor on Mar. 4, 1917, and which, under his leadership, increased from a membership of 150 to more than 1400.

When Doctor Hinson became pastor of the White Temple, Portland, in May, 1910, he was elected a trustee of Linfield college and served in that capacity to the end of his life. From this institution he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1911. From Acadia university, Nova Scotia, he received the degree of Master of Arts, and from Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash., the degree of Doctor of Laws. For one year previous to his pastorate with the East Side church Doctor Hinson was the general evangelist of the American Baptist Home Mission Society of New York.

During the past sixteen years Doctor Hinson's ministry was by no means confined to the city of Portland. He was in constant demand for sermons and addresses at our Baptist state and associational gatherings. For ten years he was a regular speaker at the chapel services of Linfield college, and frequently in other colleges of the Northwest including our state institutions. His ministry during these years was also exerted through the printed page, by means of which many thousands of people have profited by his messages. He is survived by his widow, four daughters and one son.

The Summer Assemblies

Our convention religious directors are now busy preparing for the summer assemblies of the Baptist Young People's Union. Rev. T. H. Hagan, director in West Washington, has already secured for members of his faculty for the gathering at Burton August 3-13; Rev. W. J. McGlothlin, president of Furman university, Greenville, S. C.; Rev. O. C. Brown, editor-in-chief of the American Baptist Publication Society of Philadelphia; Rev. M. L. Thomas, director of religious education in Northern California; Rev. Eric M. Lindholm, of the Second Swedish Church, Seattle, Wash.; Rev. W. E. Cochran, Tacoma; Miss Louise Hunderup, Portland; Mrs. W. E. Pettibone, Tacoma; Mrs. F. C. Davidson, Seattle, and Mrs. J. E. Noftsinger of Mt.

Vernon. These names are sufficient to attract a large attendance and Brother Hagan states he expects still others to serve on the faculty.

Rev. W. T. Milliken is working with equal energy in preparation for the Oregon assembly, which will this year be held on the campus of Linfield college. The gymnasium, the athletic field, the college commons, the beautiful grounds besides other accommodations will make this a popular place for the young people of Oregon next July. It is expected that the Oregon State Convention will be held on the Linfield campus in connection with the assembly.

While I have received no details, I am confident that Rev. H. W. Voderberg, Eastern Washington and North Idaho, and Rev. Stanley Gillet in Southern Idaho, are making equally excellent preparation for their assemblies next summer.

Honors in Oratory

In Oregon an annual oratorical contest is held in which nine colleges participate including the state institutions. This year the representative of Linfield college, Miss Carmelita Woodworth, won this contest, which makes the seventh time Linfield has won this honor. In thirty-two years only the University of Oregon has won more first places than has Linfield. By virtue of winning a state contest, Miss Woodworth represented Oregon in the National Convention of Pi Kappa Delta in Colorado, Mar. 23-Apr. 1. In the contests to be held Miss Woodworth won fourth place in the women's extempore and tied for third in the women's oratorical contest, winning first place in the semi-final of both events. This was against the strongest collegiate competition in America, there being 392 delegates present, representing over 100 colleges and universities.

News Items

The Fremont church, Seattle, Wash., Rev. Elbert H. Hicks, pastor, set a record of 100 new members for 1926. At the beginning of the second quarter of the year have received fifty-eight of that number, forty-four coming by baptism.

The quarterly report of Rev. J. Shoun, pastor of the First church, Portland, Wash., indicates another year of three months of service. During the period twenty-two new members were received, fourteen by baptism. The membership is now 262. A total of $15,000 is now pledged toward the new building.

Rev. H. L. Caldwell, for the past twenty years pastor of the First church of Portland, Ore., has resigned in order to go on the first of May he may assume the pastorate of the Calvary church, Berkeley, Calif. Mr. Caldwell comes from the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School. He has done a good work at Portland, and while his brethren in Oregon regret to lose him, nevertheless they wish him all success on the new field.

Rev. John Newton Garst, pastor of the First church, Spokane, Wash., has been invited to preach the baccalaureate sermon for his alma mater, Carson man college in Tennessee. On Sunday Doctor Garst received new members by baptism. During the month of March the First church, Bremerton, Wash., received five new members, eight of them by baptism. All the goals set for the first year of Rev. F. R. Leach's pastorate ending next June, have already been met and passed. Mar. 27 was "go to church Sunday" in Bremerton, the annual meeting of the First church, Bremerton, Ore., was held Mar. 30. The report of the financial secretary showed a total of $11,547 was raised for all purposes. Of this amount $4099 was for missions and the various benevolences. The budget for the ensuing year amounts to $8318. The pastor, Rev. I. Shanks, is greatly encouraged in his work.

There are now 1576 names on the roll of the First Church of Seattle, Wash., A. M. Bailey, pastor. Of this number 1150 have made pledges and are now giving according to the same; 275 have not yet pledged, but are giving. There are also 150 who gave last year who are not pledged or giving this year. The offering received in 1925 was $31,975.31. The offering for 1926 calls for $50,000. Doctor Bailey is to be commended for thus analyzing the situation as to giving. Possibly few churches would show a better analysis. The frank statement makes out the great possibilities of the First denomination should a way be found of securing proper contributions from every member.

Indianapolis Letter

BY FREDERICK ARTHUR HAYWARD
The annual dinner and business meeting of the Federated churches was held by action of the board of directors from October to the spring. It was held at the Second Baptist church, April 12, at 6:30 p. m. The members of the city were well represented. The meeting marks the fifth year of this organization although the mission work has been carried on continuously by volunteer effort. President Leon Joyce presided. The report of the treasurer revealed a small deficit of less than $100 in spite of the unusual expenses of the year. The report of the executive secretary was in the nature of a review of accomplishments during the past five years. This report is in print and will shortly be distributed among the Baptist churches in missionary meetings. Following the business session the federation met to addresses on the proposed plan to organize a new church on the east side of Indianapolis; the need of a building loan association to care for the future Baptist interests and the plan and plans for the daily vacillating schools for 1926.

Easter Results

Reports from attendances at the church schools was 10,108, with only a few of the schools not reporting. We have a report is a reason for joy as it indicates the quiet and persistent work we are making in Indianapolis.

About five years ago we were happy indeed to report 3500. A great change is apparent in organization and interest. The full number of baptisms and increase has not yet reached us.

Perhaps no one church in Indianapolis can more adequately register real leadership and an honest growth than can Tuxedo. By this we mean it has had nothing of a mushroom development. It was started in a simple way, grew into well-planned and well-provided church school equipment and recently added its auditorium. Since Pastor Clutton became its leader the program has been well-rounded with special emphasis laid upon spiritual, educational and missionary matters. The Easter results speak for themselves; 948 attended the church school, more than fifty over the goal set by the school itself. The offering for the day was $700 (more than 300 members of the church were recorded as givers to this offering). An interesting baptismal service was held at eight Easter morning when twenty-two followed the Lord in baptism; four were received by letter or experience. To use a "love comment" made by one of the members, "it was one of the greatest days in the history of the Tuxedo church."

God Bless Taylor Chapel

The Baptist Christian Center was formally dedicated Sunday, Apr. 11. The Sunday school was held as usual in the Leon Joyce house after which the departments marched to Taylor chapel under the supervision of the superintendents. It will be easy to understand the joy of the workers in the completion of the second of the three buildings, which has been named the F. E. Taylor Chapel in loving tribute to the pastor of the First church. Sixty-three were present at the school Sunday and together with the two preaching services, a morning prayer meeting, a primary story hour and the junior church, all on one day in a five-room building can easily explain the need for additional room. God has a great work for Indianapolis Baptists in this Christian center. The property has a value of nearly $11,000 when the third house shall be completed. The plans call for a social house, a house of prayer and an educational house.

The Two Rivals

Two churches, Temple, Rev. W. H. Harris, pastor, and Crooked Creek, Rev. E. G. Shouse, pastor, seem to have at least one thing in common and that is to grow and each church seems to think it should grow more rapidly in building, in program and in numbers than the other. Both pastors have been friends these many years and so have much in common. A church-school contest has been carried on for the past quarter and the final reports were recently announced—Temple, 507, and Crooked Creek, 431. We do not have the percentages but the battle is over. We understand that a chicken dinner will bring together more than a thousand good Baptists to talk over the matter. Meanwhile both churches under competent leadership and urged by intelligent enthusiasm reach out toward larger things. May God richly bless them in their efforts to interest larger numbers of people, and win them if possible for the King.

River Avenue Church

To look back over four years as pastor and see the line called success gradually widen is a reason of thanksgiving. Four years ago this church, Rev. James R. Quick, pastor, had 179 members. Today the membership is 465. Actually this church has received in that period 377 new members, 250 of which came by baptism, and more than 50 per cent of these were men or boys. Eighty-two baptisms are recorded this Easter in a year's time. The church school has grown from 150 to 280 average attendance and frequently passes that figure. The average attendance of the three B. Y. P. U. groups is 120. The prayer meeting has a regular attendance of between 75 and 120. The one outstanding bit of progress which will open doors to larger things is the rebuilding of the River Avenue church and in this cost of $18,000 no outside help has been solicited. It is not carrying an overload nor is there danger of a financial slump at some later period. It is a sample of exceedingly good sense and practical leadership. In all the days of building this church maintained its high spiritual levels and took up its work without loss when the day of reopening came. The enlarged program calls for services of some form every night in the week. We understand the janitor of the church has thrown away the key. The doors are always open for blessing in this interesting neighborhood.

First Church Backs "City Program"

In a new booklet soon to be released, it is the intention of its editor to sum up the contributions the First church has made to the work in the city outside of its own demanding plans. But it is sufficient for this letter to suggest that one of the largest negro Baptist churches, the Second Baptist church, Rev. B. F. J. Westbrook, pastor, will always remember with love the offering of nearly $2500 given them to aid in furnishing the new church about seven years ago. The same thing happened with the Tabernacle Baptist church, Rev. W. H. Zimmerman, pastor. About $1900 given Tabernacle made it possible for the new pews to be installed in this church, now only about ten years old and with a property value of $35,000. Recently the Garfield Park church faced the serious problem of completing its new building. This is a young church and a building with a value of $25,000 facing Garfield Park is being completed. It will be modern and have a pipe organ. The need for $2000 more faced the building committee. The First church on Sunday underwrote that amount, agreeing to pay the interest and assume the responsibility until the church was able to care for it. A fire destroyed the Woodruff Place church. Rev. L. C. Trent, pastor. This is one of the most promising churches in the city and was doing a remarkable work when fire wiped the property from the corner. The insurance was not more than a third of its value. An enlarged building with a three-unit plan has been the hope of the pastor and committee. This will cost not less than $125,000. Heroic efforts are being put forth by the Woodruff people. The First church underwrote $5000, agreeing to pay the interest for this church. These efforts of Dr. F. E. Taylor and the First church to "back up the city plan" are commendable. Less than five years ago the Calvary Baptist church was given absolutely free the title to its property of more than $6500. Additions have been planned and partially completed but this "little church" has become "a great one" and its church school attendance of 365 and its church valuation of $18,000 tells the story of its progress.

The Assam Mission Conference

By MRS. R. G. EWING

THE twenty-third session of the Assam Baptist Mission Conference met Jan. 21-27, in Sibsagor, Assam. With the exception of but three the full membership now in Assam was present, and we were one big mission family eating about a common board of spiritual as well as bodily food. The outstanding thing about the whole conference was the fine spirit of friendship that was manifest between all. It may be that the sadness of this last year's loss to our mission of two of its faithful members to the world beyond, coupled with the severe trials of sickness that came to three other families, has brought the rest of us into deeper and more sympathetic relationships. However that be, the cementing of old friendships and the launching of new ones, was a value gained from this session not to be depreciated.

Due to the inability, because of sickness, of the Tuttle and Hardings to return to us at the appointed time, the big report from the Missions Conference, for which we had postponed our conference date, was missing; but despite that disappointment, the program sessions were of helpful interest in their varied sidelights of thought and the comparing of reports from the various stations. Business was carried through systematically and in good order, differences of opinion never marring the spirit of friendliness.

A feature that made this a distinctive session was the singular beauty of the place of meeting, Sibsagor itself. The artificial lake, a half mile square, made by an invader king some three hundred years ago, into whose waters not only the three great stone temples erected by him, a new convert to Hinduism, are reflected, but also a white Christian chapel. Little did that old heathen king think when he was erecting these huge works of early art to his favorite goddess, that the time would come when the white spire of a Christian chapel and the shadows of a Christian compound would fall across those lovely waters. And so, bit by bit, the cross wins its way; and that little white chapel, doubled in the blue waters, will long live in our memories, not only for its sheer beauty, but for the symbol of the new way, the Way of Jesus, that is bit by bit winning in Assam.

James Whitcomb Brougher

By ARTHUR STEVENS PHELPS

IN his "Vie de S. Francois," Sabatier indicates that the popularity of that saint was owing to the uncompromising way in which he faced men with their sins. "Brougher, skin a man," said Sam Jones, "and smile while you're skinning him, and he'll follow you to the tannery for the hide," a picturesque way of saying, "Preach to the conscience, and do it in love." The criticism is often made that there is no preaching against sin today. As a matter of fact, the popular preachers of our day probe the souls of men as scathingly as did Jonathan Edwards, and with as conspicuous success. And more specifically, Baxter preached against sin; Brougher against sins. It is the superiority of the machine gun over the old-fashioned cannon. His punchy preaching (to coin a word) leaves no doubt in the backslider's mind as to who is the hunter's game. And this bold directness is not confined to the platform, where courage is comparatively safe, like a boy behind his father's fence. Our preacher deals as honestly with the souls of men when they meet their pilot face to face. "Pastor," complained one of his official board, "you are getting members into this church too fast." "No one will ever accuse you of that, deacon," responded his pastor, "I don't believe you have won a soul in ten years."

What are the elements of personality and efficiency that have contributed to the extraordinary success of this man? A fixed standard; weighing of men; ceaseless industry; executive; sympathy with youth; thinking through; a sense of proportion which lays the emphasis on important things, and does not interest itself in non-essential trifles; the ability to work with others; the spirit of service; financial judgment, which has led to the purchase of the mammoth auditorium; spiritual devotion; intellectual charity for the convictions of others; Baptist convictions; missionary enthusiasm; personal magnetism; concentration.

I am glad my friend is coming to Oakland. We need him. Among the many great churches in this East Bay population of a million, none enjoys a more vigorous life, nor has a more promising future, than the Oakland First church. The night audiences are the largest. Street cars run from the campus gates of the University of California to the door. So will the students. The church is a modern stone plant, equipped for multifarious departmental work, with an auditorium seating 1600, a membership brought to 1300 under the consummate leadership of Doctor Snape, a corps of effective associates, a church body whose loyalty and adventurous spiritual enthusiasm will zealously support the new ministry of their great leader.

The hearth calls to the heart more vehemently as the years pass. More than thirty years of Doctor and Mrs. Brougher's lives have been spent on the western coast. In Oakland, both received their education, from grammar school to college. His pastor was S. B. Morse, to whom he showed his loyalty by making his daughter, Cora, Mrs. Brougher. Both in the home circle—from which the two sons have followed their father's calling and the two married daughters have homes in Los Angeles—and in her church life, Mrs. Brougher is a gracious and worthy partner in her husband's ministry. After a brilliant college career, he received a theological degree from our home Rochester Seminary.

The sixteen triumphant years of Los Angeles pastorate, from whose vibrant energy he comes up for air—when a man needs to breathe he naturally comes to the Bay region—will live in their impress for a century to come. When nature endues a favorite son with both preaching and executive gifts, it may be hard on the man, but it is surely relatively fortunate for his church. The members that are moved on Sunday kept moving through the week. "His word here and there," writes Mr. Hawes, president of his Women's Union, "acts like magic." What discoveries in the world are like discoveries of men, and inventing something for them to do? He leaves a choice group of associates: indefatigable Benet, royal Hudson, devout Burlingame, and

of these glorious years, and looking forward to the new pastorate resplendent with hope and promise, the whole denomination echoes the heartfelt response of Temple church, Los Angeles:

"Our hearts are saddened because of the approaching termination of your great ministry to this church, which God, through you, has made great in numbers, giving and service. We thank God today for your life and talents, and for your testimony among us; and also for your distinguished leadership in unifying and inspiring the denomination to greater service for Christ. Temple church is highly honored in being your flock. We commend you to God's sufficient grace for your arduous campaign, and for your future ministry.
Our love to you in Christ."

Dr. John Young Aitchison

WHEN, on the morning of Mar. 16, we read that our friend, Dr. John Young Aitchison, had the day before been stricken while in pursuit of his duties as assistant to the president of the University of Chicago, our hearts were heavy within us. "Surely," we said, "a prince in Israel has fallen!" We should have anticipated yet many years of devoted service, which fact but the more intensified our lament that he was gone. Yet when we review the life of Doctor Aitchison, we discover that, although he passed from us in his early prime, he had lived much, that his swift years were packed with rich experience and vital service.

His was no meteoric rise into a place of prominence in our denominational life.
Through a varied and fruitful pastoral experience, culminating in those years at Galesburg in which he envisioned the world-parish of a local church, he built the ladder by which he rose to the denomination's highest recognition and trust. In the district secretaryship of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the joint district secretaryship of the Home and Foreign societies, and the home secretaryship of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Doctor Aitchison won that familiarity with the work and problems of our national societies which was to qualify him for unique leadership in the greatest forward movement which the Baptist denomination in America has ever undertaken.

The general directorship of the Board of Promotion, which Doctor Aitchison carried during the entire period of the New World Movement, was a merited honor, but this aspect of the office was far outweighed by its responsibilities and burdens. From these latter Doctor

Aitchison never sought escape, but bore them constantly, patiently, even heroically, until the period of his undertaking was completed. In a very true sense, he was a martyr to the cause which he led.
What those years exacted from him, we shall never fully know.

It was peculiarly in the years from 1916 to 1919, during which he served as home secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, that the board of managers of the society came to know, through personal contact, the splendid Christian character and gifts of Doctor Aitchison. His winsome personality, his irresistible energy, his breadth of sympathy, his wisdom and sanity together contributed to the very deep hold which he gained upon the confidence and affections of the board during those years.
It was with peculiar reluctance that the society surrendered him to the larger claim of the New World Movement.

With this intimate background of personal friendship and common service, the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society records its deep appreciation of Doctor Aitchison as Christian, friend and fellow-servant in the kingdom and patience of our Lord, and its profound sense of loss in his death.
The board of managers extends to Mrs.
Aitchison and her son in their sad bereavement its warmest Christian sympathy, and directs the recording secretary to forward a copy of this appreciation to Mrs. Aitchison.

Cassius M. Carter An Appreciation

By JAMES A. KEMP

DR. CASSIUS MORTON CARTER, the son of Sanford and Lorinda
Wright Carter, born in Livonia, Ind., in 1861, died Mar. 1, in Los Angeles, Calif.

He was graduated from Franklin college in 1887. He then took a course in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary and later entered the Union Theological College in New York.

He was married to Miss Martha Noble of Greenwood, Ind., who was a classmate in Franklin College, in 1889, a faithful and devoted companion and co-worker, who survives him, together with three children, Louise, now Mrs. Ralph G.
Cole, Dr. William Noble Carter and Miss Helen L. Carter, all of whom live in Los Angeles. Their youngest daughter, Ruth, died in infancy. A sister, Mrs. J. W.
McCullough, resides in Paoli, Ind.

Doctor Carter served as pastor at Mitchell, Lafayette and Muncie, Ind., and in 1910 accepted a call to the First church of Los Angeles, Calif., serving until 1914, when failing health compelled his giving up the work as pastor. Following his resignation, he with his wife and daughter, Helen, went to his old home in Livonia for rest and recuperation, remaining for over two years. During the latter part of his stay he acted as pastor for the Baptist church of Livonia and the church was greatly strengthened.

In 1916, Doctor Carter moved to Detroit, Mich., where he served the Grand River Avenue church as pastor. He was later pastor-at-large of the Michigan State Convention. In this capacity he organized the East Jefferson Avenue church in Detroit, acting as pastor until this church was successfully established.

Doctor Carter was a member of the board of directors of Franklin College for fifteen years. He served as president of the Indiana State Convention for three consecutive years. He was for a time editor of the Indiana Baptist, now the Baptist Observer. Shurtleff College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on him. He made several tours of Europe before and after the great war, conducting touring parties over the continent. In 1905, accompanied by his wife, he made one of these trips, going on to Egypt and the Holy Land.

He was a Thirty-third Degree Mason, Grand Prelate of the Knights Templar of Indiana, and a member of Moslem Shrine of Detroit.

Appropriate funeral services were held at the Wilshire church, where he held his membership. The services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Bruce Black, assisted by Rev. James A. Francis, of the First church, Dr. J. M. Philpot of New York, a boyhood friend, also born and reared in Livonia, Rev. J. B. Thomas, an old college friend, and Rev. F. E. Smith, who was his assistant pastor at Muncie, Ind. The services were attended by a large number of old Indiana and other eastern friends. Interment at Forest Lawn Park, in Glendale, Calif.

Next Year's Objectives

Now that the present fiscal year is drawing to a close, plans for the next are being definitely formulated. Further stressing of the every-member plan is to be the chief element in our 1926-27 program. Wherever the plan has been given an adequate trial, it has proved a pronounced success, and its universal adoption by all Northern Baptist churches would put denominational finances on a far more stable and satisfactory basis than the present one.

It is possible for a church which uses the plan to have a fixed budget for current expenses and missions, underwritten by pledges from its members. The church is able in this way to promise a definite amount of money to the denomination each year as its share in our united missionary work, and to be responsible for collecting and sending it in. It is easy to see how much more effectively a vast enterprise like Baptist missions might be conducted if it were possible to count on a certain fixed sum of money each year, rather than to run it on the present more or less "hand-to-mouth" basis. The widespread adoption in Baptist churches of a definite missionary goal, assured of collection by pledges taken through the every-member plan, would make the former condition possible.

After the plan is put on in a church, there still remains a problem for the pastor and the church treasurers. That is the education of their membership to the point where they pay on pledges promptly each week or each month, so that the money can be forwarded to the state office on the one-twelfth-month basis.

Much has been said in the denominational press and elsewhere about the savings which would be effected if money now spent for interest on money borrowed to carry on missionary work going during periods when little money was coming in from the churches.

The condition with regard to regular payments of missionary money has shown noticeable betterment this year, but there is still much room for improvement. We hope for a larger number of recruits next year for our League of Honor, the dependable churches which are now using the one-twelfth-monthly system.

Mission Exhibit for Convention

The illustration shows the Washington auditorium, a fine building of modern construction, which will be the scene of the 1926 Northern Baptist Convention in Washington, D. C. One interesting feature of the convention will be the exhibit on Baptist missions which will be held in the basement of this building. Dr. Harry S. Myers, of the stereotyping department, is arranging the exhibit.

After The Fire—

What would be the replacement cost of the church building in which you worship?

The following letter reveals how a New Jersey Board of Trustees protected the property entrusted to their care:

My dear Dr. White:

I have just received a letter (March 9, 1926) from the Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Central Baptist Church, Elizabeth, regarding increase on insurance, the circumstance of which are as follows:

The building cost about $55,000 originally, exclusive of organ and furnishings, and the church was carrying $60,000 insurance. About two years ago Secretary George E. Merrill of the Department of Architecture of The American Baptist Home Mission Society was invited to make a survey of the property with a view to placing additional insurance on the basis of the replacement cost of the building. He estimated that the replacement cost would be $218,000. The Board of Trustees took out the cost of the foundations and placed the insurance on the balance of the building on the 80% basis. The church is now carrying $160,000, or $100,000 more, divided as follows:

5,000 on the organ
5,000 on the furnishings

Very sincerely yours,
Frank A. Smith

Ministers who have had a similar experience to that of Dr. Smith are invited to write to Secretary White, as many such letters are needed to stimulate interest in increasing the insurance on church edifices. Please address:

SECRETARY CHARLES L. WHITE,

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"Good evening friends of the air. How 'air' you? We are all ready to go tonight with some little chestnuts on the menu. We have had numerous requests for these items, mostly from people with spring fever. Shoot a mirthquake to us over WCOY, they say. Well, we're off.

"If I were you,' she said, during a lull in the domestic storm, 'I would have more sense.' 'Of course you would,' he retorted decidedly as he went on absorbing further wisdom from the pages of THE BAPTIST which the postman had just left at the door.

"It is reported on good authority that the beauty parlors of America, originally designed to bridge the gentler sex over the deadly chasm between sixteen and sixty, now have as clients about 40 per cent men who want the wrinkles removed from around their eyes. These wrinkles are caused by worry. Moral: read THE BAPTIST, stop worrying and save your beauty money for missions.

"The national chamber of commerce has given out the report that including the cost of the automobiles, the insurance, up-keep, gasoline and other items, the average cost of owning and operating a car is about $700 a year. Verily the way of the transgressor is horrid. Maybe if THE BAPTIST offered to give a 50-gallon drum of high-test gas or a set of cord tires as a premium with every annual subscription, it might add to its circulation.

"Speaking of automobiles. 'Any girl can be gay in a classy coupe; in a taxi she can be jolly; but the girl who's worth while, is the one who can smile, when you're taking her home in a trolley.' And if she's a sensible girl of mature years she can save enough in one trolley ride as compared with a taxi to pay a year's subscription to THE BAPTIST. It is only $2.50 a year and gives you fifty-two trips around the world at that. It leaves you with something more than a bad odor in your hair and a feeling that you had been pounded with a club. If it is a choice between a taxi without THE BAPTIST and a trolley with it, take the trolley, keep the change and send in your subscription.

"How is your little baby brother?' asked the minister as he called at a home. 'Oh, he's pretty peevish. You see he's cutting his teeth,' said Willie. Which reminds us that there must be a lot of little brothers cutting their teeth. Some little brothers seem to be in the dentition process at thirty and forty years of age. Why not read THE BAPTIST and sweeten up? Let the babies have a monopoly on hatching out teeth. Chewing a rattle and drooling looks pitiful in grown-ups.

"The power of example is persuasive. 'Mother, do I really have to wash my face?' implored little Jim. 'Certainly, my dear,' said mother. 'Aw, why can't I just powder it like you do yours?' coaxed little Jim. What we do in the presence of little Jim counts more than what we say. Moral: read THE BAPTIST regularly and religiously. Little Jim's subliminal consciousness will register. 'Train up a child,' you know. If you try camouflage it may turn out, 'Train him up and away he'll go.'

"A simple minded western evangelist was painting sermons on the fences along the highway. One ran: 'What will you do when you die?' Along came a patent medicine man and painted on the board under it, 'Use Delta Oil. Good for burns.' The application is too obvious. We mean the application of the moral, not of the oil. Keep away from fire. THE BAPTIST is a harbinger of peace.

"The following item is from a western church bulletin: 'I was wondering about long meetings. Our minister ran five minutes over time at church today. He preached twenty-eight minutes. That made an hour and five minutes' service which is too much, so some people say. If our preacher doesn't watch out they will be handing him his hat, and asking him what's his hurry. Because an hour and five minutes in church is an outrageously long time. I was wondering how those folks stood it to sit three hours at the theater the other night. And two hours at the movies. And I never heard of a dance an hour long or a sixty-minute card party. People seem to want to get their money's worth when they go to shows and things. Well, perhaps that is why they only want an hour in church. That's all they've paid for. I never thought of that.'

"The office boy says in his opinion the man down in Cincinnati who said that progress consists of swapping old troubles for new ones is a false alarm. He says what we want to do is to swap off some of these cheap, awfully cheap, cheep cheep papers, and, take an honest-to-goodness paper. He says we can deliver the goods on request and that the mails are working very satisfactorily. He says the reading of a paper is the proof thereof.

"WCOY now signs off. Keep smiling. It costs no more."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL of the Immanuel church, Scranton, Pa., had an average attendance for January, February and March of 330.

MORE THAN 700 PERSONS attended the Judson Memorial church of Minneapolis, Minn., Rev. H. A. Vernon, minister, on Easter Sunday. The morning offering was $528. The Sunday school passed the 500 mark. Forty-nine new members were received, twenty-eight baptized.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Hamilton, Ohio, Rev. Frank G. Sayers, has had an unusual revival. The pastor, assisted by special singers, held a three weeks' special evangelistic meeting. The attendance went beyond the seating capacity of the house. 276 professed faith in Christ as Savior and 269 expressed desire to unite with the church. At least 100 of the converted were of men.

REV. D. J. ALLEN of South Hannibal, N. Y., though ninety years old, is still the active pastor.

DR. CALVIN WALLER, pastor of the Second church, Little Rock, Ark., and who was formerly at the White Temple, Portland, Ore., conducted an evangelistic meeting with the church at Shawnee, Okla.

THE LATEST REPORT showed the Jefferson Avenue church of Detroit, Mich., to be within $11,000 of its goal of $150,000 for its new unit.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Topeka, Kans., within $9000 of the goal set for the new education and social building. The pastor, Rev. C. F. Mathews, on Easter Sunday received twenty-eight into membership and twenty-three by baptism. There were 60 in the Sunday school.

REV. HAVARD GRIFFITH, formerly of Monongahela, Pa., began his new pastorate with the First church of Newark, Ohio, on last Sunday in March. The Newark methodist class recently had ninety-eight present.

THE NORTH ORANGE CHURCH of Orange, N. J., Dr. Joseph C. Hazen, minister, received fourteen candidates by baptism on the Easter service. The self-denial offering for missions was $5453 and the total offerings for Easter were $6688. The pastor is in his fourth year here.

REV. DONALD R. GORHAM was ordained in the evening service of the First church of Kalamazoo, Mich., Rev. G. H. Younker, minister, Easter Sunday. Sermon by Dr. Thomas Wearing of Colgate seminary. Welcome to ministry by Rev. J. C. Austin, charge to candidate, Rev. F. B. Bachel, prayer, Rev. E. E. Branch. Dr. J. E. Smith, former pastor of the church but now its secretary was also present.

PASTOR G. C. WALTERS of Parsons, Kan., received twenty new members and fourteen baptisms. This church has conducted a very successful campaign of personal evangelism. There have been no special evangelistic meetings and no public appeals.

THE CHURCH AT TOULON, Ill., Rev. R. Starr, pastor, has an electric cross on a tower presented and maintained by the young men's Bible class. The cross is 10 feet high and shows white for two seconds and then shades into bright crimson.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the West Central district of the woman's Baptist home and foreign societies (for Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska) will be held at Grand Island, Neb., May 11-13. Mrs. H. E. Goodman of the national foreign society and Mrs. G. W. Coleman of the national home mission society will be present.

THE YOUNG MARRIED people of the First church, San Diego, Calif., have their own B. Y. P. U. organization.

PASTOR J. B. SMITH of the First church, San Diego, Calif., during his first year with the church reports a net gain in membership of 183. The church had current expenses of $27,332 and raised for missions $17,366.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Sacramento, Calif., had a school of missions conducted by Dr. G. A. Werner of Stockton. The attendance was about 100 for the series. On April 11, Pastor Bryant Wilson gave the hand of fellowship to twenty new members.

REV. J. G. DICKSON died at Lincoln, Neb., Apr. 12. He was a graduate of Randolph college and Rochester seminary. His pastorates were in York, Neb., Clay Center, Kan., and Lincoln, Neb. For the last five years he was connected with the interdenominational college in Salt Lake City, Utah.

PASTOR ARNOLD H. KEHRL of Downer's Grove church, and Miss Juanita M. Darst were married, Apr. 15, in the church, Rev.

Geo. W. Taft of the Northern Baptist seminary officiating. About 300 people were present.

and highly esteemed member. Mr. Johnson was the son of Rev. J. E. Johnson who for some years was pastor of the First Baptist church, Delavan, Wis. As trustee for several years and moderator of the First church of Austin, Chicago, and as a member of the Baptist Social Union of Chicago, Mr. Johnson made for himself an important place in the religious life of the city. He has been described as a man whose chief characteristic was his "genius in making and holding friends."

PERSONS WHO WISH to arrange for sight-seeing at Washington during the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention are invited to communicate with Rev. L. S. Squyer, 150 Stevens Avenue, Jersey City, N. J., who will make desired arrangements.

EASTER SUNDAY was a happy occasion for the Norwood Park Baptist church, Chicago, and Pastor H. P. Crego. It represented the culmination of two years of dreams, sacrifices and work. The new Sunday-school and social unit of what will be a magnificent building was dedicated to the service of the Lord in the most central location of the entire northwest area of the city. The community is growing rapidly and it was necessary to build a much larger structure and to dream of a much larger future building than the present demands justified. Though the church has only seventy-five members, with a large vision of possibilities and responsibilities and a vital faith in God, it has completed a plant costing $30,000. In this result, it has been aided liberally by the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago. The building, 37 by 68 feet, is two stories high. The upper story provides an auditorium seating 275 persons. When the church is completed, this will be the gymnasium and social room of the church. The first story is the Sunday school, and will provide accommodations for the primary and junior departments to the number of 150. The other departments will use the auditorium for the present. There is every reason to believe that this will become one of the strong churches in the city in a few years. In the field of the church, giving opportunity for its missionary spirit, there is the possibility of developing at least three more strong churches. The church hopes to become a real mother of churches for the northwest section of Chicago.

When You Make Your Will you will surely need to know the exact corporate names of your national missionary organizations.

The Memorial Sublime

Through no other means can you confer on your church and community a greater and more lasting beneficence.

You will like these chimes

The melody stands out clearly and distinctly. Patented Dampers silence each tone the precise instant the next tone is sounded. This overcomes the "running together" of tones, heretofore an inherent defect in chimes which made them sound out of tune. Deagan Tower Chimes are sweetly musical. If you haven't heard these latest improved chimes a delightful surprise awaits you.

The Saving Sense

In his book, "Tell Me Another," Lord Aberdeen has a story about a lawyer named Curran. During the proceedings of a court on circuit in the country on a summer day, while Curran was addressing the court, a donkey in an adjoining field brayed loudly. The judge, interrupting, said: "Excuse me, Mr. Curran, one at a time please." Curran bowed acquiescence, then proceeded with his address. Later, when the judge was delivering his charge to the jury, the donkey brayed again; on which Curran arose, and said: "I'm sorry, your Honor, but there seems to be such an echo that I can scarcely make out what you are saying."

Old Lady: "Why don't you make your little brother come out of that water and take him home? He'll catch cold."

Boy: "It's all right. 'E's got a cold already, lidy!"—Passing Show.

"What is the name of the species I have just shot?" demanded the amateur hunter of his guide.

"Well, sir," returned the guide, "I've just been investigating and he says his name is Smith."—Judge.

A police officer met an organ grinder on the street and said, "Have you a license to play? If not, you must accompany me."

"With pleasure," answered the street musician. "What will you sing?"

Restaurant proprietor (to orchestra conductor): "I wish you'd display a little more tact in choosing the music. We've got the Worshipful Company of Umbrella Makers dining here this evening, and you've just played, 'It Ain't Gonna Rain No More.'"

"If the president, vice-president and all the members of the cabinet should die, who would officiate?" asked the teacher.

"The undertaker!" answered William.

Notes on the Lesson for May 9

ABRAM AND THE KINGS
Lesson Text: Gen. 14:1-24. Golden Text: Rom. 8:37

The story in Genesis has come down from the beginning to the time of Abraham with little geographical and historical background that can now be identified, but for this lesson the map comes into use. Abram, also called Abraham, a native of Ur, a city located far down the Euphrates valley toward the Persian Gulf, had emigrated to Canaan (now Palestine) a thousand miles from his ancestral home. He had become the chief of a growing tribe of stockmen, camping in the grazing lands of Canaan. But he was more. He was a cosmopolitan traveler and observer, well acquainted with the world, profoundly dissatisfied with the existing civilization, and persuaded that God had called him to lay the foundations of a new and better one. The present lesson relates a mere incident in the career of Abram, but it throws light on his character.

Abram to the Rescue

From the earliest times Canaan was on the line of march of military conquest between the valleys of the Euphrates and the Nile. At this time certain eastern chiefs had joined forces to conquer and hold Syria and Palestine. After twelve years, certain chiefs in the Jordan region rebelled. The conqueror returned on a punitive expedition and destroyed the rebel forces in a battle near Sodom. Abram's nephew, Lot, together with his family, was taken prisoner. Refugees escaping from the scene of conflict, fled to Abram's ranch in the hills at Hebron and told the story. Then a new quality was discovered in Abram. Hastily assembling 318 of his hardy cattlemen, he set out in pursuit of the retreating invaders. After a chase of about 200 miles, he overtook them near Damascus, surprised them by a night attack, scattered them in flight, and returned in triumph with all of the loot and prisoners they had taken. Best of all, he roused a peaceable man; he may prove to be a hard hitter.

Not a Single Shoestring

The fortunes of war had placed wealth and captives in Abram's hands to dispose of them as he would. He was to meet another new character test. What would he do with them? First, there was a shrine for the worship of God at Salem. He sought the priest in charge, received his blessing, and dedicated the tenth of the recovered property to religion. Then, let others take their lawful share if they would. But he had already thought out his course. To the modest petition of the king of Sodom that Abram keep the spoil and release the captives, the reply was clear, full and final. Let the king have all. Abram would keep not a shekel, not a sou, not a shoestring. A war profiteer could never understand such an attitude, but it was good morals, good religion, good psychology, good business and good politics. It marks a great soul in partnership with God.

The Portraits of Jesus in the New Testament, by Henry Sloane Coffin. New York: Macmillan. $1.

These portraits include the ones given in the earliest preaching, in the four Gospels, in the Letters of Paul, in the Letter to the Hebrews and in the Revelation. All were preached as sermons, "not to build up a systematic doctrine of Christ's Person, but to present him in each of the eight portraits, and to bring out in each the elements most appealing to present thought and most satisfying to our spiritual need." Every discourse is a fine example of "expository preaching" at its best and admirably accomplishes its purpose to "bring the learning of scholars to plain folks." The book is a fine example of the way in which a modern preacher can bring to the common man the vital messages of Jesus.

—H. L. STETSON.

The Speaker's Bible (Ephesians), edited by James Hastings. American agents: W. P. Blessing Co. $4.

In his characteristically thorough manner Doctor Hastings has brought together in these volumes much of the best literature treating upon various biblical themes. The last of these volumes from the press is on Ephesians and contains almost a library of material for the busy preacher or teacher. Fine illustrations, historical references and selections of poetry are so classified under various texts as to make them not only helpful for a further understanding of the text itself but a ready reference on the special theme being treated.

These books do not attempt to take the place of careful homiletical study and arrangement and can be used to advantage only as the preacher or teacher is willing to work them over and over until he has made them a part of his own thought and life.

Pig Iron, by Charles C. Norris. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

Samuel ("Asked of God") Smith was born on a microscopic New England farm of a disillusioned but devout mother and a well-educated none-too-rich father. He wrestled his way to manhood and at twenty—an orphan—he took himself to New York City where he became one of the household of his father's brother Cyrus, rigidly religious, who, when the church, fell under the influence of the over-genial, hypocritical Mr. Wright, worldly influences brought about the rejection of the church. He made money his lode-star, got an incipient financial start in the panic of 1893 and became a multi-millionaire through world conditions. He had a real love affair with Evelyn, whom he never married but who perhaps through much of his life she kept a human; an incipient one with Ruth, who refused to marry him because she would not call to devote her life to missionary work in Africa; and married Paula in whom he had a man's pride but did not truly love, and became the father of two children who proved to be "not the type of children he admired." It is the story of a materialist who arrived at the goal he set for himself only to say "heavily" to Ruth, who found happiness in her life of service, "I missed something somewhere. I don't know just where or how. I'd like to go back and live my life over again. It would be different." That expression is the aim of this work of Norris it seems to me—a presentation of the futility of mere money-getting.

"Pig Iron" is a solid book—at times even stolid—but it is a carefully thought-out work and as carefully transcribed. Charles C. Norris writes purposeful books—he is no novel-a-year man. The first four chapters of this work, dealing with the family life at Mendon, Mass., are the best work in the book—they are epic.

—ELIOT MERRIAM.

Landmarks in the Struggle Between Science and Religion, by Prof. J. W. Simpson. New York: Doran. $2 net.

"The historic background of a great controversy"; scholarly, prolix, abstruse; essentially an argument on the side of evolutionism in the current dispute; it issues in an impressive argument for the validity of the Christian faith and for the necessity of the spirit of Jesus in the evolving life of the soul and of the race. The last chapter on "Jesus' View of the Universe," is specially strong and stimulating.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

God and Evolution, by J. H. Robbins, pastor Baptist Church, White Plains, N. Y. Franklin, N. H.: Towne & Robie. 25 cents.

A pamphlet "expanded from two sermons" preached in the Baptist pulpit in White Plains. To students who seek a lucid, congested and fair discussion of the above subject by a scholarly preacher from the viewpoint of a theistic evolutionist we cordially commend this brochure. It is not controversial, but constructive and informing. It illustrates how this great subject can be discussed rationally and ironically without impinging on theological polemics or playing a partisan attorney for a clientele. Technical terms and professional expressions give place to a diction that is laical and comprehensible by the average reader.

easily read series of sermon-essays on the parable of the prodigal son. The announcement on the cover that it is a "simple . . . evangelistic exposition of the best known of the wonderful parables" is perfectly true. Measured by the standards of conventional preaching, the book is good. But is that enough in these driving days, when youth needs the challenging voice of a prophet?

The author has run his homiletical lawn mower hither and yon, clipping off all the outstanding platitudes of the last two generations. Such outstanding clichés, or rubber stamps, as "tugging at the heartstrings," "honest confession is good for the soul," "the good is the enemy of the best," are crowded into every chapter. There are irritating errors, such as on page 117, where Carey's classic thought is given as "undertake great things for God and expect great things from him." Carey said: "Attempt great things for God, expect great things from God."

—HERBERT W. HINES.

Religion and Medicine in the Church, by Edward S. Cowles. New York. Macmillan. 75 cents.

In the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church held in 1922, a commission composed of six bishops, six rectors, two influential laymen and three prominent doctors of medicine, was appointed to investigate the subject of healing, particularly as related to certain phases of psychotherapy or "faith healing" that had arisen in the church, and to report its findings. This little book is the report of that committee. It is marked by scholarly care on every page, it covers the subject so completely as to leave little to be desired, is free from statistics, and is easy and interesting to read. Persons who are interested in the group of cults that are loosely associated in kind with Christian Science will find here a valuable sketch of the subject showing the fallacy and futility of such cults of health and healing.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

It is stated that Rev. F. B. Meyer, now in his eightieth year, is planning to visit the United States again this summer and to speak at a number of important gatherings.

One reads with a sense of familiar interest the announcement in the British Weekly of the annual meeting of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland at Leeds beginning May 3. Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke is the incoming president, and the closing speaker is Rev. Gilbert Laws.

British Christians are making the climate of England hotter and hotter for the liquor traffic. The Baptist Times gives a table of the amounts, in pounds, spent annually by the people of the United Kingdom for various items as follows: Drink bill, 315,000,000; education, old age pensions, housing, health, and all social services, 307,700,000; national debt, 305,000,000; railway receipts, 203,400,000; rates, 160,000,000; unemployment relief since 1918, 300,901,241; milk, 76,000,000; bread, 80,000,000.

Lovely phrase-makers are those British. A meeting of the Independent Labor party was in session. Dispute grew hot. Doctor Shields, M. P., expressed the opinion that the left wing had become simply "a refuge for the unthinking." Ramsay MacDonald was quoted as characterizing a certain policy in the words, "a sanctification of phrases of no definite meaning." With the permission of our British brethren, we should like to adopt those two phrases for extensive use in the United States.

The Baptist Bible Union held a conference in Toronto, Apr. 22-24, to consider two subjects; namely, conditions in McMaster University and "the Bible Union as an organization within the convention to combat modernism." Speakers were Revs. W. Atkinson, C. J. Loney, A. P. Wilson, John Dodds, W. B. Riley and Mr. Thomas Urquhart. The whole of the following week was taken up by the eighth annual convention of the World's Christian Fundamentals Association (interdenominational) at the same place.

Considerations of comity have withheld notice in these columns of the suspension of publication of the Continental, Presbyterian weekly published in Chicago. But other papers less restrained make the news public, with editorial interpretations that may or may not accord with the intimate facts. It is enough to know that an excellent religious paper has discontinued publication, and it will leave a large vacancy in the ranks of denominational papers. Its subscription list has been transferred to the Presbyterian Advance.

It is an interesting piece of information that in the formation of the Westminster Confession, in the middle of the seventeenth century immersion as the scriptural form of baptism came within one vote of adoption. The vote against it was twenty-five to twenty-four.

Luther Burbank was another clear example of the truth that among high-grade men the profit motive is not the prime lure to achievement. He made many rich. He never was, never could be, and knew he never could be rich. But the world will be his debtor forever.

The race between war and peace in Europe proceeds with the future uncertain but hopeful. To the Locarno agreement is now added the treaty of benevolent neutrality between Germany and Russia, with the prospect of a similar understanding between Great Britain and Russia. Meanwhile the manufacture and sale of munitions continues lively. And Mussolini roars.

As a commentary on the argument that the world cannot be carried on without the chance to gratify the profit motive, consider the case of Doctor Kurtzahn of Koenigsburg university. For the purpose of finding out whether cancer is contagious, he grafted cancerous tissue on his own flesh. No infection followed. But set the profit motive by the side of an act like that.

The Northern Theological seminary announces the following commencement program: baccalaureate sermon at Second church will be given Sunday morning, May 16, by Rev. J. A. Jensen, dean of the Danish department; the annual missionary sermon will be at the Tabernacle church and the preacher will be Rev. Wm. Kuhn, general secretary of the Conference of German Baptist Churches. Monday afternoon, at 2:30 the speaker at the theological conference will be Pres. H. C. Wayman, of William Jewell college. Chicago Baptist ministers and their wives will be special guests. Following the address, President and Mrs. Taft will give a reception. The senior class day exercises will be on Tuesday evening. The alumni reunion and luncheon will be at the Garfield Arms hotel, 3256 Maypole avenue, Wednesday noon. The graduating exercises will be held at Tabernacle church Friday evening, and the addresses will be by members of the senior class and by President Taft. The degrees will be conferred and the diplomas awarded to a class of forty-four students, the largest graduating class in the history of the institution. Unless otherwise noted all exercises will be held at the seminary chapel, 3040 Washington boulevard. The public is cordially welcomed.

New York has created a state mission to study the causes of crime and to recommend methods for its prevention.

The various church bodies in Ohio called to meet by delegates in Columbus June 28-29, to consider a cooperative evangelistic program for the state. They are also carrying on an aggressive propaganda.

The college of agriculture of the Ohio state university, in cooperation with university and the Ohio Council Churches, will hold its sixth annual school for pastors at the university buildings, Columbus, June 21-July 2. Two Baptists are prominent in the enterprise, Rev. W. H. Thompson of Greenville being one of the two directors of the school, and Dan Hermon H. Sev of Kalamazoo college, a member of the faculty.

Closing mills mean something far removed from the pleasure of a picnic for their employes. This is the meaning of news from the Pawtuxet valley of A. 17, that cotton mills have closed down on account of market conditions, throwing 2300 out of work. No date of resumption can be fixed. The shut-down will continue until market conditions warrant resumption. Several other mills in this same locality will continue "the time being." There are later reports of suspensions in the English mills for the same reason.

Claude A. Warren, surveying the religious world in the Congregationalist, sees approaching inevitably one of the great cycles of Christian revival. He finds a sense of need for it in the newspapers and magazines, among business men and statesmen. But he is not sure that it will emerge in and through the churches, because they are so busy with budgets, organization and theological controversy. And he thinks it will rise above the degenerate program of "sawdust trails, day of judgment thunderbolts and tin pan collections."

Gradually the storm is rising again, the tendency towards militarism in the United States, and especially again military training in the schools. A highlight of this development is this paragraph in the Christian World in an argument against the whole war propaganda: "During the last war, many of our churches did not understand their duty towards the gospel of Christ. They subordinated themselves as handmaidens to the state. Their pastors turned themselves into recruiting officers, into libel bond salesmen, into apologists for every move of the government. The gospel was sold for a mess of propaganda and prejudices."

Population is still moving from the farm to the city. The number of people living on farms Jan. 1, 1925, was estimated at 31,134,000; on Jan. 1, 1926, was 30,655,000.

The National Conference on Social Work will hold its annual meeting at Cleveland, O., May 26—June 2. At the same time and place meetings of the Child Welfare League of America will be held in the Statler hotel. For information address National Conference of Social Work, 25 East 9th St., Cincinnati, O.

There are 910,000 souls in the parish of Rev. L. W. Spring, in the Sandoway district, Burma. Thirty-eight teachers and preachers work among them. The church membership is 715, the total school enrolment 579, and native contributions for the past year, including school fees, amounted to Rs. 4133. This is an increase from 450 church members, 55 pupils and Rs. 1662 contributed in 1915. The Sunday-school membership is more than doubled in that time, and now 696.

Now it is proposed to organize the Civil Legion composed of war governors, members of the war congress, the war preparedness boards, selective service boards, the American Protective league, and other national authorized war activities, "to make us single hearted in our love of America and united in our purpose for her advancement." From the officious zeal exhibited by a good many Americans who at that time were taking money out of the war, one might suppose that they would never need a special organization to keep them loyal, but human nature is human nature.

It comes as a news article in a prominent daily paper and with a note of surprise that leading fundamentalists in the Presbyterian church in the United States of America are actively planning control of the next General Assembly, to be held in Baltimore in May. They are sending communications to associates throughout the country warning them that liberals will be in control of the assembly unless the fundamentalists immediately "pray and work" for the election of fundamentalist commissioners from their presbyteries. Politics is political, but of course it is appropriate that an ecclesiastical sort should be decorated with prayer.

Protestants who simply protest against the Catholic church and ignore the social demands upon modern Christianity are putting themselves to a position far in the rear of that church in the near future. For the National Catholic Welfare Council is facing the realities of the present industrial order with a frankness and thoroughness that would startle the average Protestant churchman. That is, Catholics do not hesitate to consider in practical fashion the growth of great aggregations of wealth, the responsibility of the government for adequate regulation of corporations, the advisability and methods of cooperation, the living wage and living conditions for workers, and the legitimacy of public ownership.

Pass his name along. He is P. N. Powell, a one-armed schoolmaster, of Orangefield, Tex. He saw a tornado approaching, calmly marched all of the children into the auditorium of the building, seated them in order and by his sheer self-possession kept them quiet while the storm tore windows out of the building and wrecked one of the walls. All escaped without injury.

The fundamentalist-modernist controversy in Canada, which has been revolving largely around McMaster University, seems at last to have made its way into the faculty. Professor Campbell publishes the charge that Professor Marshall is a modernist. Chancellor Whidden replies in the Canadian Baptist that if modernism means a denial of the supernatural, Professor Marshall is certainly not a modernist. The immediate seriousness of the matter for McMaster is that a campaign is on hand to raise a large sum of money for the university, and the dispute is being so handled as to threaten a failure of the enterprise.

Bernard M. Baruch has a fine distinction in view about the proposal to "conscript" both labor and capital in case of war. They may be directed and controlled, he thinks, but not conscripted. On the first attempt to conscript, capital would hide and labor would rebel. But suppose that all able-bodied men of a certain age should be ordered to register for army service subject to personal call; is that conscription or merely direction? Would they obey or rebel? Suppose again that a similar order should be issued affecting factories, railroads or banks, making them subject to appropriation for war purposes; what would that procedure be called, and what would be the reaction of the owners? Verily, current discussion on the subject is skirting the shore of a deep and dangerous sea.

Mr. Julius Rosenwald is reported to be interested in the project of establishing a technical and industrial museum in Chicago, as companion institutions to the Field museum of natural history and the Shedd aquarium.

George Shima received an education in his native country, Japan, specializing in agriculture. He came to California twenty-six years ago to specialize in growing potatoes. He began by leasing small plots and giving to them scientific culture. Within ten years he was "the potato king" of California. He died the other day leaving $15,000,000.

Baptist young people of St. Louis and vicinity held their annual banquet at the new Hotel Mayfair, April 22. It was an evening bound to be remembered by the 170 young people who enjoyed the "scrumptious spread," the entertaining program, and the good fellowship evident from start to finish. Earl Whitsitt, Missouri state president, and John Singleton, president of the B. Y. P. U. of A., gave short addresses. Large delegations are planning to carry the "spirit of St. Louis" to the state convention to be held in Kansas City, and the international convention at Los Angeles.

The Leslie Dana medal for the most outstanding achievement in the prevention of blindness and the saving of sight will be awarded this year to Miss Louisa Lee Schuyler of New York City. The Dana medal, which is one of the most highly prized marks of recognition in the entire public health field, went to Miss Schuyler for her work in launching in 1908 the movement for the prevention of blindness and for her consistent active interest in this movement from its inception until she became confined to her home on account of illness several years ago. Miss Schuyler is a direct descendant of General Philip Schuyler and of Alexander Hamilton.

A series of missionary education institutes for the state of Massachusetts has been arranged by the Massachusetts State Convention, department of religious education, in cooperation with the department of missionary education of the Northern Baptist Convention. The places and dates where these institutes will be held are as follows: Monday, May 10, Winthrop Street church, Taunton; May 11, First church, Leominster; May 12, Stoughton Street church, Boston; May 13, First church, Springfield; and May 14, Portland Street church, Haverhill. Each of these meetings will begin at five p. m. The program provides two conference periods for various groups of missionary workers, and a general assembly period at which an address will be given by George A. Huntley, M. D., missionary to China. On the institute team are Rev. Floyd L. Carr, Miss Elsie P. Kappen, Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, Mrs. Perry A. Beck, and Miss Mary L. Noble.

Latest statistics concerning the church union in Canada show that of a total of 9483 congregations in all of the uniting churches, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian, in all of the provinces on June 10, 1923, 8691 entered the union. Of 4512 Presbyterian congregations, 3728 entered the union. Of the Congregationalists only eight congregations declined to join the movement; of the Methodists, none.

And shall we compel the reading of the Bible in the public schools? For answer, consult the average Protestant in the United States. He will say yes, while the Catholic will say no. But in Brazil it is said that the attitude of the parties is reversed, Catholics supporting the proposal and Protestants opposing it. The psychology is the same in both cases. In either case the sect which stands to gain by the reading of the Bible in the schools favors it, and the sect which stands to lose opposes it. Perhaps the Virginia Baptists constitute an exception. They oppose such requirement on principle.

Preferred creditors in the case of American loans to European nations or to any nations finding payment difficult, will necessarily be the private rather than the government holders of such securities. One of the beauties of the situation, which nobody except a few troublesome critics seems to have foreseen, is that the settlements effected and proposed between the bankrupt governments of Europe and the United States is to encourage loans from American banks to those governments and to make the United States a practical guarantor of the security of such loans. Possibly this result was foreseen but not advertised. Now it is being told in the newspapers.

Methodists are trying to explain why their church is not much troubled with the fundamentalist-modernist controversy. Reasons assigned vary. Some of them are that there is a large measure of charity among Methodists; that their supreme insistence is upon the experience of religion rather than opinions about it; that they care little about metaphysics, philosophy, theology and science, but a great deal about how men live together; that they are more concerned with the effects of religion than about its origin and definition; that they emphasize the social, ethical and experimental elements of Christianity more than doctrinal and ecclesiastical forms. And yet there is a low rumbling about the Methodist camp which may presage a storm.

The eighth edition of the Assamese hymn book was printed last year, 2000 copies being made. A third edition, 2000 copies, of Line upon Line, Part I, was also put out by the Assamese literature department.

The schools at Mong Lem, China, had in 1925 an attendance 40 per cent larger than that of the preceding year. In the central school, 331 took the examinations and passed with fine records. Thirty-five of the advanced boys are giving their vacation time to evangelistic work.

Edward A. Filene, president of the Wm. Filene's Sons company of Boston, one of the greatest mercantile firms in America, invokes a religious revival in these words: "There is need for a nation-wide religious revival, if the church is to regain in this generation a position of effective leadership in the public mind. In theory, I have always been opposed to, or at least doubted the efficacy of religious revivals. But when I think of the enormous forces of hate and destruction let loose by the war, it seems to me that nothing short of a great religious revival will have the power to check those forces."

Rev. Frank H. Levering, veteran missionary, whose simple address is Leffric, Kotagiri, Nilgiri District, India, writes: "I am having the time of my life." Then he proceeds to tell "how he got that way." He says: "I had an attack of dengue fever, a calamity which the northern states are free from because it cannot live in the cold. You have a few days' fever—and then a few months of rheumatic pains in a goodly number of the joints which never before gave you any trouble. My attack came on about the middle of January, and while my arms have recovered so that I can use the typewriter with comfort, my locomotive machinery is still badly out of order. I am likely to be still somewhat under the power of the enemy when this reaches your sanctum. But there is one grain of comfort—it is never fatal."

The board of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Illinois met at the Baptist Training School in Chicago, Apr. 9, with thirty-eight members representing eight associations and twenty-four churches, according to report of Secretary Mrs. Guy Reynolds. For the golden anniversary 144 circles are pledged 100 per cent, and the amount paid in is $19,000. There is great interest in the reading contest and in the C. W. C. and the W. W. G. May 16 will be devoted to increasing the circulation of the Illinois Baptist Bulletin. The women are also actively supporting THE BAPTIST AND MISSIONS. They sent a night letter to Washington urging loyalty to the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement of law. Mrs. Topping of Illinois is chairman of the woman's state officers' conference to be held at Washington City Club, May 24.

Sir Leon Levinson, president of the International Hebrew Christian Alliance, is authority for the statement that there are now 150,000 Jews who have been converted to Christianity, of whom 50,000 have been converted since the war.

Judge Kavanaugh of Chicago told the union ministers' meeting why crime is so prevalent in the United States. Among other factors he assigned this one: "Ministers trusted by the people have not taken their part seriously enough. Ministers talk too much about social questions and not enough about Jesus Christ." Any minister open to such criticism has some food for reflection. But such disproportion of emphasis hardly appears in the ministers' meetings. How does the judge know what they are talking about?

The woman's interdenomination committee for the Northfield home mission summer conference announces that expert teachers, leaders and speakers have been secured for the 1926 conference to be held at Northfield, Mass., July 6-13. The interdenominational home mission theme for this year is the rural church. For general information and literature on conference plans, write to Mrs. T. R. St. John, 341 Webster avenue, Long Island City, or to Mrs. Clark Tillinghast, 306 W. 93rd street, N. Y. Room reservations apply to Ambert (Moody, East Northfield, Mass.

Serampore College, founded by William Carey and his collaborators, incorporated in its charter as its only article of faith "a belief in Christ's divinity and atonement as the essential element of a religion of Christianity." Principal George Howell on the last Foundation day, for the purpose of refuting a charge that the school is "dangerously modernist," took occasion to state at length the character of its religious teaching. He said: "Religion that is vital whether Catholic, Anglican or Puritan, is always evangelical for it exalts the incarnation of God in the Son of Man, in the believing and adoring individual disciple, and in the corporate church, and at the same time it glorifies in the cross of Calvary as the supreme expression of the fatherly and redeeming heart of God suffering in atoning efficacy for the redemption of a sin-stricken world." At the same time he defined the attitude of the college towards the current controversy thus: "Ours is a progressive and living orthodoxy, and we at Serampore refuse to submit to the dictation of obscurantists from Tennessee or nearer home, seeking to impede the free progress of enlightenment and reform, because we believe that like the Pharisees of old they confuse the accidental with the fundamental, and in their insistence on external authority stand for the beggarly elements of a dead Judaism, rather than for the large and gracious freedom of the religion of the Spirit revealed in the New Testament."

Where Faith Finds Life

HENRY C. MABIE, one of the greatest missionary statesmen of Baptist history, has been dead a good many years, but his message lives. Let him speak in the following excerpt from his book, "Methods in Soul-Winning":

"... Many sincerely suppose that in order to salvation in any degree, there must first exist in the mind a certain concept, or set of concepts, which in themselves must be dogmatically believed, before the soul can come into vital relation to Christ. This assumes that faith is primarily and essentially an intellectual belief; belief in a doctrine about God, or Christ, or the Bible. But this is not the truth concerning Christian faith, and never was. There is a place for intellectual beliefs, but this in the matter of method is at a later stage. Of course we do not forget that a certain modicum of objective truth must precede any subjective action of the soul. But some amount of such truth is always present to every mind."

When our minds have come, through the study of Christian doctrine, to a considerable degree of maturity, and we have come to adhere to a large range of dogmatic statement, it is difficult for us to see how there can be any true Christianity apart from that which our creed sets forth. But Doctor Mabie's mind was not without ample doctrinal content which he could state with unusual breadth and precision. Yet he never permitted his creed to obscure the simplicity of the gospel. Perhaps it was his breadth and precision of mind that saved him from such an error.

Two things in his statement are of special interest in the present juncture. The first is that his idea of salvation through simple personal faith in Jesus apart from any full and accurate scheme of doctrine about Jesus, is in keeping with the evangelical practice of the first Christians. They told the story of Jesus in the briefest and simplest way and in his name invited sinners to turn to God for salvation. That was the divine method then and is the divine method forever. The second interesting thing is that the less we load our evangelistic message with creedal qualifications, the more we increase the saving efficiency of the message. Specifically, there has grown up among some of us recently a habit of prescribing a five-point gospel, that is, five items are enumerated as "saving facts" without all of which, taught, understood and believed, there can be no truly saving gospel message. These so-called saving facts are "the virgin birth of Christ, his deity, his substitutionary suffering and death, his physical resurrection, and his bodily and visible second coming." Now there is little doubt that these beliefs were pervasive if not universal among those primitive Christians who were doctrinally instructed. And they are still held by most Christians today. But when one turns to the actual gospel invitations of the New Testament record, one finds a simple story about Jesus doing good, crucified, buried, risen, exalted, ever-living and coming. In what one of the evangelistic calls in the actual recorded practice of the apostles is there an enumeration of the foregoing five points or of any other scheme of doctrine?

A denial that there is a coherent body of Christian doctrine and that a full and general knowledge of it is desirable, would discredit one's intelligence. But such doctrine is related to faith as learning is to life. We live first and because we live we learn. In even simple and slightly taught souls there are areas into which the light that is in Christ may shine and awaken faith, but the learning of the content and meaning of Christianity is a life-long discipline. This is equally true of people whose background of religious thinking is Jewish, Christian or any of the multitude of other cultures in the world. The true method of evangelism is to present Jesus to the actual apprehension of men whatever the power and point of apprehension in them may be discovered to be. For he is the universal Christ, and among all races, conditions and cultures there is already something to which the simplest facts of his story appeal with an awakening, creative, regenerative faith.

It follows that the person of Christ, stripped of all theological attempts of us lesser men to interpret him and known as each is best able to know him, is the object of saving faith, the center of true Christian fellowship, the key to an orthodox discipline, the headlight of world evangelization, the pioneer and patron of all right living. And the best guaranty of a true theology, of an evangelical ministry, of a united and imperishable church and of a sane and tranquil society is the loyal acceptance of the personal primacy and sufficiency of the living Christ in all of these spheres.

If we could so believe in him, what a change would be wrought in our attitudes and moods! We should find our transcendent and happy task in being witnesses of him rather than regulators of his affairs. We should be docile rather than dogmatic. Our fellowship would be that of the spirit rather than of slogans. In such an atmosphere, disturbing disputes about the Bible, church order and creedal formulas simply could not live. What am I, to interpose my petty preferences of opinion, where I find Christ and his people actually at work together?

Such an enthronement of Jesus would transform our missionary force, ideals and program. The missionary would go to any and all parts of the world to carry not a series of theological preconceptions and a foreign culture, but to set Jesus personally before men in terms of language and brotherhood such as they can understand. He would seek to rediscover, appropriate and vitalize with the spirit of Christ the usable ideals of any and all peoples. And the missionary program of Christian peoples would be sufficiently comprehensive to provide for such a universally adapted testimony of Christ with but secondary regard for doctrinal uniformity, denominational boundaries and preemption rights. Baptists have always said that the interests of the kingdom are higher than those of any particular denomination. In the field of world evangelization is the place to prove whether this statement defines our highest loyalty.

But if we were concerned even more exclusively than we are to promote the interest of our denomination as such, what other conception of the gospel offers such an inviting opportunity to express the historic genius of the Baptist movement? Has not the very breath of our life exhaled the immediate access to Christ of all men alike, his direct and efficient lordship over all of his people, the equality of all believers under him, the freedom of faith, the fellowship of the Spirit, and local autonomy and initiative?

If the spirit of Henry W. Mabie, yes, and the Spirit of Jesus, can get a docile and childlike hearing at the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington, there will come a new quickening of the pulse of the denomination for greater and holier undertakings for the redemption of the common life all over the world.

Pray for Power

THERE is a good deal of exhortation to prayer as a preparation for the coming meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention. No right-minded person will object to prayer as a preparation for any great endeavor. It was the Master's way. But there is in the exhortation occasionally an undertone of timorousness which is scarcely in keeping with a justifiable hardness of faith. The attitude seems to be that of apprehension of impending disaster, as if the convention and the denomination were in grave peril, the averting of which is the prime concern of the season. Men seem to be asking prayers to save the denomination.

But there is something more important to invoke our prayers. It is big business of the kingdom. It is the vast responsibility imposed upon the people of Christ by his gospel commission. It is the enterprise for which Pentecost was the primitive preparation. If the Baptists of the North are fitted for their world work, they need not worry about the salvation of the convention, and if not, the convention is not worth saving.

Therefore, of course, pray, but pray to high purpose. Pray that into our 8000 churches may come a new impulse of the Spirit of Christ; that they may have formed within themselves his ideals of a saved life and a saved world; that they may be fired with his passion for self-enlistment and self-investment in the effort to make the rule of God a happy reality in human life; that their common vision may be clarified so that they can comprehend the length, breadth, height and depth of their calling in him; that there may come to them a tremendous re-enforcement of their faith, courage and zeal; that in the face of their world task they may take up again the century-old slogan: "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God."

And in the assemblies of the local churches is the place for such prayer to begin and to find its most intense and general expression. If the delegates are baptized with the fullness of the Spirit of Christ before they depart for Washington, if they travel in enraptured groups with the joy of the Lord in their hearts, if they come together with the common purpose regnant in them to give Christ to the world and to bring the world to him, if they have shed abroad in their hearts the love that knows how to express itself in all of the languages of men, the close of the convention will be like Israel's breaking camp in the wilderness when the Glory rose and pioneered the onward march of God's people.

Mother's Altar

ANCESTOR worship is the response to a truly pious instinct. It was an ancient custom when the father died to bury his body beneath the family hearth, and thus the lighting of the household fire morning and evening became an act of devotion in memory of the head of the house. The religious flaw in such devotion lay not in honoring the memory of an ancestor, but in substituting him for God as the object of worship and service. It was essentially the same sort of idolatry as that of modern nation worship under the pious name of patriotism. A sound religion does not antagonize reverence for parents, the family and the nation. Rather, it sanctifies and purifies such devotion. But it never permits parent, family or country to usurp the place of supremacy that belongs to God alone in the homage of men.

Modern life is marked by a new and higher appreciation of womanhood. The pendulum of social control is swinging back towards the matriarchate. The tendency is a wholesome one. Mother worship is becoming a mild cult, finding its chief expression in the signaling of Mother's Day by a floral display. But it ought to have a deeper than merely sentimental meaning. It ought to have a disciplinary value for both mothers and children, making both better. Few are the mothers who do not so love and serve their children as to deserve honor and grateful remembrance. Few are the sons and daughters who are strangers to feelings of appreciation for virtues and kindnesses known or remembered in their mothers. But it is desirable that both maternal and filial virtues be raised to the highest power. The world needs mothers fully trained and self-disciplined to the care and nurture of children, and children capable of responding in full measure to the most lavish love and the most wholesome discipline. In the whole range of natural human relationships nothing is more sacred than that ideal one between the mother and the child. Use Mother's Day for the crowning of that ideal.

Are Shop Unions Inimical to The Trade Union Movement?

Comment on this page favorable to the modern device known as the shop union is questioned as being adverse to the trade union movement represented by the American Federation of Labor. The contrary is true. The shop union is a product of the trade union. It was adopted under the pressure of the union movement for the purpose of checking the progress of that movement. It was "strategic retreat" of employing corporations to avoid the necessity of a surrender to the trade unions. So also are profit-sharing and the sale of stock to employees. And there will be temporary antagonism between the two types of organization. But the members of the shop unions have not ceased to want all the benefits and privileges they ever wanted. They will demand more and more. Their demands will be reenforced by inter-shop understandings and cooperation. They will inevitably federate, either in the present federation of labor or a better one. In the long and large view of the case, the organization of the first shop union or industrial union was a surrender of the citadel of industry to organized labor. The American Federation of Labor may well celebrate the day.

Living Thieves Equality With Honest Business Men

Irving S. Paull makes an incisive criticism of the present philosophy of business. In the Nation's Business he says: "We do not assure to individuals an equality of right to succeed. . . . In order to protect the right of an individual we have to extend equal rights to many who do not justify them. . . . The question then, is Do we preserve an equality of opportunity?" But is it true that in order to preserve equality of individuals we must give special privilege to thievery? For it amounts to just that. And the distinction does exist. There are honest, high-minded business men who endeavor to earn all they get by the value of the service they render, and there are others who scheme to get the most wealth with the least work. The problem for both business and government is to promote and use the former and to put the latter class where it has the option of work or starvation. Till this is accomplished there is a divine call for the constructive reformer.

A Gleam of Sense About Taxation

Of all the stupidities exhibited in government perhaps the most profound and hopeless ones are concerned with taxation. Can any man conceive a single rational economic principle which lies at the base of the modern systems of raising revenue for public purposes? Private taxation has its own philosophy, which, however right or wrong, is at least definite. It is this: The owner of property has the right to tax the user of it a fixed per cent for the right of use. But public taxation is a complex of unrelated methods, none of them based upon a sound economic principle. Allen L. Benson in the Dearborn Independent holds at least a lighted candle to the problem. He says: "Property pays no tax. Labor and management pay everything that is paid or can be paid. And management is but the name of a higher form of labor." When we shall have come clearly to see that the only place where the burden of taxation whether public or private can ultimately rest is upon the back of toil, and that no hocus pocus can possibly shift it to any other place, we shall be in the way of finding out some relation between the whole subject of taxation and that of community economics.

A Committee Will Find Out What Has Long Been Well-known

A special committee of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches is studying the question of Germany's war guilt. It has made some peculiar discoveries. For instance it recognizes that "public opinion was greatly influenced by the rigid censorship of the war period, which permitted the peoples on each side to know only what their respective rulers desired them to know," and that "propaganda was deliberately resorted to in order to foster a spirit of hatred which would sustain the fighting temper of peoples during a long and bloody war." It is even led to question whether the sole guilt for the war rests upon Germany. These discoveries can hardly be called original. Trained historians have been shouting them from the housetops for many moons. Such progress in research may be trusted at last to discover the red weathercock which has gyrated for twenty years on the top of the barn.

Distribute the Rainfall By International Treaty

A few years ago it would have seemed incredible that the supply of water in the great lakes would become a matter of international anxiety, jealousy and contention. But such a thing has come to pass, and across the long boundary line of friendship and peace between Canada and the United States has fallen the shadow of a dispute whose roots run deep into the soil of economic necessity. The lakes seem already insufficient for the needs of the growing population on either side. What will the emergency be when these populations are doubled a few years hence? The problem is how to utilize the supply of water in the lakes so that it may be sufficient for all of the needs of the people without any material reduction of the volume of water available, and so that at the same time its benefits may be distributed equitably amongst all of the people living in the area which it serves. That problem is one for friendly and cooperative statesmanship and engineering. A defiant assertion of merely local self-interest would be a policy of fools. Should we come at last to an international treaty for the distribution of rainfall?

The Movement to Sell Fascism to America Seems to Have Begun

It is a rather dull day when some influential American is not quoted in the newspapers in praise of Mussolini and fascism. What is fascism? Nobody seems to know just what it is. But it relies on force, suppresses liberty, invites capital, and stretches out greedy hands for empire. What other virtues are required to commend it to susceptible and kindred spirits? The familiar machinery of international propaganda is already oiled to prepare the public mind in other nations for the Day. What Day? The Day when special interests, losing hope of political control at the ballot-box, shall suspend law and resort to force. May it never come. But America will be immune to the propaganda of either bolshevism or fascism only so long as the first whisper of either makes American free-men prick up their ears—and do something more.

My Faith at Fifty*

Built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone.—Ephesians 2:20.

BY RYLAND KNIGHT

YESTERDAY was my fiftieth birthday. At such a time it is natural to take stock of the foundation of one's life. It may not be amiss if I shall talk to you frankly and simply about my faith at fifty.

By my faith I mean those convictions upon which as upon a foundation I am building my life. I confess that for me faith means more and more my ground of confidence and less and less does it mean speculations, theories, opinions. I have no carefully thought out and systematic theology. I have no formal creed which I would be willing either to accept myself or to urge upon others. There are many theological questions to which my only answer must be, "I do not know." I rejoice in that gracious word of the apostle Paul, "We know in part and we prophesy in part." If Paul was conscious of limitations we may without hesitation confess the imperfection of our understanding and of our utterance.

But while there lie great realms of truth outside my grasp there are rich and precious convictions of my heart which are to me so sure, so increasingly certain with the test of the passing years, that on them I unhesitatingly build my life, that to the preaching of them I joyously give all the capacity of my being, and in the strength of them I expect to go all the days, here and hereafter. These convictions are the foundation of my life.

I build my life first of all upon the assurance that God is my heavenly Father. That word which Jesus taught is the rich and satisfying and sufficient understanding of the heart of the Eternal. God is my Father; therefore I am not in a world of chance or chaos or blind grinding laws. I am in my Father's world. He made it; he governs it; he takes care of it; it is his world.

The more we know of the wonders of the universe through discovery, through science, through investigation, the more wonderful it seems to me its Creator must have been. But my greatest concern is with his heart. And I believe absolutely and unequivocally that his heart is what Jesus revealed to us, the heart of a Father. Back of life with all its mystery, with all its tragedy is the heavenly Father, whom I love, whom I trust, a Father with a heart like the heart of Jesus of Nazareth.

God Is My Father

Because he is my Father, I know he cares for me. I do not know how vast is his universe or how many are his concerns, but I do know that because he is my Father he has time and thought for me. I have had the normal experiences of a man of fifty—joy, sorrow, need, temptation, trial, work. In all these experiences I have had the faith that God is my Father and I have come out of them with that faith strengthened, that confidence reinforced. The greatest steadying force in my life today is the confidence that God is my Father, genuinely and truly and really my Father.

Because he is my Father I may talk to him about my life and find in him help and guidance. Prayer is to me a blessed privilege. I was fortunate as a boy in having a good and wise father. As I look back to my youth I realize that it would have been a great help to me if he had talked to him more freely about life and let him more fully into my heart. I have the same feeling today about my heavenly Father. I have blocked him many times. But insofar as I have opened my heart to him he has never failed me, he has always helped me. On that foundation first of all, I build. God is my Father.

The second foundation of my life is this. I believe the way of life which Jesus lived and taught is the one satisfying way of life. One cannot put that life into a sermon. It was incomparably rich and gracious and precious and powerful. It has been increasingly the inspiration of the centuries. It was a life of righteousness, a life of trust, a life of obedience, a life of service.

The more I know about life, the more I know about the world and the more I know about Jesus of Nazareth the more sure I am that to follow him is the only way to make a success of the fine art of living. The more I learn of him the more sure I am that the spirit of Jesus in the hearts of men is the one solution of all our problems.

The Standard

I wish there were time to speak at length of what his life was and what it has meant. But his life is the light toward which I strive. I measure all my attainments by his. I measure the value of what life offers me by his standards. I measure my life's worth and its success by comparison with the way of life which Jesus lived and taught.

That brings me to the third foundation on which I build. I believe with all my heart in spiritual renewal and enlarging spiritual capacity made possible for me by the sacrificial love of God which came to its crown in Calvary's cross.

I have just been saying that the standard by which I measure my life is Jesus of Nazareth. I need hardly tell you with what a sense of shame, humiliation, failure, disappointment, I view myself in the light of his moral splendor. If I had to take any decade of my life and live with it and say to myself, "That is your life, that is what you are; you can never surpass that," I confess I should think of my life as tragically deficient. But when sin abounded grace did the more abound. The true estimate of a man's life is not what he is but rather what by the grace of God he is becoming. The hope for an man is the forgiving, sustaining, enriching, transforming grace of God which comes to him through Jesus Christ enabling him to build out of the past a worthier future. I build my life on my faith in what the grace of God is increasingly able to do for me.

As I believe in the renewing and transforming grace of God for myself so I believe in it for every man. There is no limit to the redemptive power of the Christ of Calvary. No matter how enslaved by sin, no matter how enmeshed in worldliness, no matter how hardened by pride and prejudice, there is no man beyond the reach of the redemptive power of Jesus. I rejoice to preach with conviction a Saviour who can save to the uttermost those that come unto God through him. I rejoice to say to myself and to every man that Jesus saw in us such rich spiritual possibilities that he felt that we were worth dying for. I rejoice to repeat the assurance that by his help that worth which he saw may be increasingly realized.

For Jesus is not to me a man who lived nineteen hundred years ago. He is one who lives today in our world to be the friend and the helper of every one who is willing to live on friendly terms with him. To live in daily fellowship with him is to feel his power, is to catch his spirit, is to grow like him. To live in daily fellowship with him is to learn to say with Paul, "The life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself up for me."

"For warm sweet tender even yet
A present help is he
And faith has still its Olivet
And love its Galilee."

I build my life also on faith in the triumph of righteousness in our world. I have the profound conviction that the forces of good are stronger than the forces of evil and that Jesus Christ is winning his way to supremacy. The kingdoms of this world shall be the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

I do not know how soon his final triumph will be or how it will ultimately come about, but I see all about me evidences of the increasing impact of the spirit of Jesus upon the life of the world. More and more men are finding in him the only way of life, the only hope of a groping, blundering world.

There is no place of service so inviting to me as the organization he founded that through it he might establish his kingdom. There is no joy in my life so great as the joy of being a co-worker with him in building a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. I have no ambition commensurate with that of being a good soldier of Jesus Christ, fighting with him for the right that needs assistance, for the wrong that needs resistance, for the future in the distance and the good that I can do.

I fight with courage and with hope because I know with an unshakable assurance that every fortress of evil must finally yield before him and that no power of iniquity can withstand his triumphant advance. With all my heart I believe in the growth and final victory of the kingdom of God which Jesus came to establish. Because I believe in his victory of Jesus I am an incurable optimist.

Immortality

I build my life also upon my faith in the immortality of the soul. I believe that for the Christian death is but an incident, no more than a shadow which falls for an instant across the stream of life. This abiding instinct of the human heart is reinforced for me by the assurance of Jesus Christ. I read and rejoice to accept his own definite promise, "Because I live ye shall live also." What that future life is like I do not care even to try to imagine. One sentence in the book of Revelation gives us glory and its promise, "They shall see his face and his servants shall serve him." With that assurance I rest content.

These then are the five foundations on which I build. My life rests upon the faith that God is my heavenly Father, that Jesus' way of life is the only satisfying way, that spiritual renewal and growing spiritual capacity are possible to every man through him, that his kingdom shall finally triumph, and that those who trust him find in him eternal life.

It is only fair to say that faith to me is not always easy. There come to me as to most men doubts, questions, misgivings. There are therefore certain facts with which I fortify myself in the hour of doubt, with which I reassure myself that I am building on the eternal foundation.

The first reinforcement of my faith comes from the Bible. I find recorded there men's experiences of God. I see the enrichment of life which came to them through faith in him. That book as no other book in all the world speaks to the profoundest depths of my soul. The highest in me acknowledges the truth of its appeal. My heart answers, "I too may live by faith in God."

My faith is reinforced also by what I know of Jesus of Nazareth. No man ever lived so sublimely as he. No man ever overcame more obstacles in order to walk the way of righteousness. No man ever lived so completely by faith in God. No man ever had so sure a spiritual insight. Because he built his life upon the foundations I have named, I seek to build my life upon the same foundations. I had rather trust his spiritual insight than my own. When I am befogged with doubt I follow after him.

My faith finds reinforcement also in the experience of the best people I have known. Those men and women of my acquaintance whose characters were strongest, whose lives were richest, whose worth was most evident have uniformly been men and women who build their lives on faith in God, in Christ, and in the supremacy of the spiritual. "The tree is known by its fruits." A faith which can produce such lives must be a sound faith.

The final reinforcement for my faith is my own experience. For fifty years I have lived. Every experience of those fifty years which has given me opportunity to test the value, the validity, of my life's foundation has brought me reassurance. The foundation has met every test successfully. And the faith which for fifty years has proved itself I shall willingly trust to the end.

"So long Thy power has blest me, sure it still Will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone."

My faith at fifty, which grows stronger with the passing years and surer with every test it is called upon to meet, that faith I commend with all my heart to each of you. I urge you to build your life on the faith that God is your Father, on the faith that Jesus' way of life is the most rewarding, the only satisfying way, on the faith that spiritual renewal and growing spiritual capacity can come to you from God through Jesus Christ, on the faith that the increasing, triumphing kingdom of righteousness, which is the kingdom of God, is supremely worth living and working for, on the faith that the spiritual is more vital than the material and life is stronger than death. Build your life on this foundation and you will find rich rewarding promise for the life which now is and for that which is to come.

"I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

"Most of all the beautiful things in life come by twos and threes, by dozens and hundreds. Plenty of roses, stars, sunsets, rainbows, brothers and sisters, aunts and cousins, but only one mother in all the wide world."—Kate Douglas Wiggin.

Who Is My Neighbor?

BY DOUGLAS G. HARING

THE "social message" of Christianity is no longer regarded with suspicion. In fact some preachers preach little else. So far, so good. Christians ought seriously to consider and zealously to practice the social gospel in all its manifold applications. But let us consider some of these ideas we so freely proclaim.

We declare our love for society. What is society? The sociologists offer us whole volumes of conflicting definitions: the more we read the less are we conscious of progress. Has any one ever seen society? Then how can we love it?

Our dealings are with individual men, women and children. We can love only individuals—bank presidents, farmers, clerks, elevator boys, teachers or children. Of course individuals combine into corporate groups; commercial companies, secret societies, missionary circles, criminal gangs. Groups frequently acknowledge no moral standards and mete out injustice with an even hand. The "social gospel" rightly demands that groups recognize a higher righteousness. But when that is said, done, proclaimed and fought for, we find our own lives in contact with individuals, and we are still forced to love individuals or love not at all.

We rightly suspect the spiritual integrity of those who talk of loving other races, uplifting the downtrodden, and the brotherhood of man, unless in their direct contacts with flesh and blood human beings they actually love those individuals and show their faith by their actions. Not what we do for others, but what we do to others constitutes the ultimate test. Diffused benevolence which aims at everybody, actually hits no one. Dollars cannot speak the language of love. Love must speak with its own softer voice. When love and dollars sing together, dollars must be content with the second part or the music turns to discord. Jesus loved individuals. He did little for them, but behold what he did to them! He loved his own friends: Mary, Lazarus, James and John, but he also loved beggars by the wayside and worrying parents of sick children. He loved even Judas and made no move to exclude him from the circle of intimacy.

We are cursed with a mass of diffusive uplifters, who in their hearts love not, but wish only to enforce upon others their own codes and ideas. It is such as these who are likely to vote for prohibition to save the workingman from the saloon, but they themselves indulge on the side and wink at bootlegging. They may bewail the mounting accident death list—"really, isn't it terrible, so many dreadful accidents?"—but they have a tendency to "step on it" and see what their own cars can do. They go to church and pray God to bless the poor, but like to send their own children to private school to avoid contamination from the common "kids" in the public schools. They wish to invite only "nice people" to dinner in their homes, never foreigners, negroes, or the "lower classes". What good is love that shoots away into space, chasing society or "the brotherhood of man" or any other high-sounding ideal if it never really lights on some individual and warms his heart with the joy that comes from the appreciation, understanding and affection of one's fellows?

—We apparently believe in "salvation by committees" or "salvation by mass meetings" to such an extent that one wonders what has become of regeneration, and Jesus seems almost lost in the shuffle. Would Jesus say embarrassing things if he were put on the program of our Northern Baptist Convention? Or if he succeeded in getting the floor in debate would he take sides in our acrimonious discussions? Would he be a modernist? Or would he gladly follow our fundamentalist leaders? It is easy to picture our warring factions as roughly analogous to the Pharisees and Sadducees of old—the former intent on preserving tradition and blind to spiritual progress, the latter sophisticated and blasé, proud of their familiarity with the culture of the day. Somehow Jesus doesn't fit into either camp; he seems more at home on the mountain overlooking the city and weeping over those whom he would fain have gathered under his wings. Would he, visiting America today, call only on Baptists and shut out Methodists, Catholics, and Jews?

Let us come down out of the clouds—the clouds of impersonal, abstract ideals, which prevent us from seeing and loving our brethren, and practice loving friend and enemy alike: not hypothetical enemies, but the flesh-and-blood men in the opposite camp; not abstract love, such as the soldiers were told to use on the Germans during the war—"shoot them for their own good"—but love which reaches out a helping hand to each individual in his sorrows and bafflements and makes him feel that he is no longer alone but has a friend who understands.

Let us practice freedom—not freedom in general, lovely sentiment to inscribe over the doors of public buildings, but freedom in particular cases, especially for the folks who most irritate us. They are the test of our genuineness! Let us work for justice—not blindfolded justice painted on the court house wall for bootleggers to laugh at, but open-eyed justice to the men we do business with, justice from particular corporations to particular individual men and women, justice to our enemies and those who defraud us and who make us angry!

Who is my neighbor?

Mother's Day Prayer

FATHER of all mankind and Giver and Sustainer of life, we bring thee in the arms of our faith today, with all their loves and longings, the mothers of our race. Let them not struggle unsustained up the steep slopes of motherhood. Soothe the pain of their travail and fruit their longings in loving ministries from those to whom they have given life, and on whom they have lavished the largeness of their love. Grant them patience and wisdom amid the daily discouragements, the clash of ideals, and the fret and care of life. Let not the anguish of bereavement destroy their trust in thy love; help them keep faith that thou canst mend even the broken lives that stab them with a sorrow worse than death. Company with them in their lonely hours when their children pass from the home-roof to build homes of their own. Reward their sacrifice with love returned and the consciousness of having helped their sons and daughters to find God, their heavenly Father, and a worthy life. We ask through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Amen.—Dr. Joseph A. Vance in The Expositor

This is the closing sentence of a prayer I heard lately in a great gathering: "And we have received many other blessings which we cannot mention now for lack of time and for all these also we thank thee." It must often be necessary to tell a speaker that he must crowd his thirty minute speech into ten minutes; and I have known chairman who asked the leader of the devotions to make his prayer short. But never before had I heard any one actually tell the Lord that he would have received more detailed thanks except for the pressure of other business.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Shall Youth Drive?

In a manner representative of the youth attitude of all time, youth today is asking for a turn at the wheel

BY FRANKLIN D. ELMER

EMERSON used to say, "Every man is an omnibus in which all of his ancestors are taking a ride." It is fully as true now that the world is a big family bus in which we are all together taking a ride. The moot question is, "Who shall drive?" In a manner representative of the youth attitude of all time, but also in a way peculiarly twentieth century, youth today is asking for a turn at the wheel.

"Suppose I drive a little while now?" says youth. Jehu thinks it high time he had his turn!

This obvious request is causing considerable commotion and some embarrassment.

"What, Jehu drive," exclaims father Jehoshaphat, "I guess not while I can hold a chariot rein!"

"Jehu drive!" echoes grandfather Nimshi, "not while I can struggle to the wheel. I propose to die with my boots on!"

So the eternal dispute goes on, but somehow the family bus rolls along, with Jehu, Jehoshaphat and Nimshi all aboard, for of course Jehu is permitted to get out and down and under when there is oiling to do or a tire punctures. It is always well to have Jehu along.

Kings at best today are only an anchor to leeward. The "ruling" passion is still the ruling passion. Lust of power, gripping the wheel, is major among all desires. This seems true in all social institutions. It is at once the weakness and strength of society. But something is happening, some leaven is working, call it democracy, call it the teaching of Jesus, what you will, the privilege of staying continually at any wheel for anyone, is being generally denied. The world shakes itself free from the shackles of limited, centered control and personal whim. Every man is to have his chance. From statescraft to touring this is increasingly true. "Honest Abe" led the way from his cabin woodyard. Woman drives today, youth drives. Premiers rise and fall, secretaries come and go, presidents take their turn, dictators give place. Is it not possible that hard coal would have reached our bins sooner and at reasonable prices if the miners had been permitted to feel full responsibility for the situation?

Assuming Responsibility

Driving, a turn at the wheel, the feel of responsibility is not only the thrill of control and adventure, but is equally sobering and interest awakening. The trip takes on more definite personal features if Jehu is rescued from the back seat for his "watch on deck." At most it will not be long before he is called on to lead as his generation wings to the van. He would better begin to assume responsibility by armfuls than by wagonloads.

There are three stages in our governmental relations with the young. During the first we should command; during the second, reason; and during the third, cooperate. Probably there is a fourth stage, when we should follow. The problem is as to the time when each stage should begin. There are some who are quite willing to extend the "command" area to cover all three, or four. Certainly youth should be permitted, even gently forced, to drive at the time of reasonable cooperation. Jesus did this when he sent his disciples away alone on missionary tours. Here were young men under divine leadership against whom the Pharisees and ruling ecclesiastical class lifted their hands in holy horror. Yet in the hearts of this youthful group a great new world was in the making, new heavens and a new earth. Jesus was wiser than the Sanhedrim; he said, "new skins for new wine," new men for a new day.

The turn at the wheel does more than harden young Jehu to responsibility; it helps to keep older Jehoshaphat and still older Nimshi young. If by some chance of fortune the son finds himself in full control at the wheel he does wisely indeed to yield at times to father and grandfather, for he must live with them and his own happiness depends on keeping them fit to live with.

The need is for a wholesome family democracy which believes in taking turns, sharing the good of life, distributing inspirations and responsibilities—a life that gives and takes, yet is structurally whole, not overdeveloped at this point or that, never at another's expense. Here is a rule for families, churches, communities, nations and world relationships.

Some Answers

How has all this recent evidence, if not of a youth movement, at least of youth in motion come about? There are several answers. Some indeed do not believe there is any unusual stirring of youth at this time; others consider our age of jazz and many inventions as responsible. They say that emotions are being subjected to forced draft, that minds and hearts of our boys and girls are being fanned into immature expression. A number of my friends, among them some who have recently returned from world travels, others who are professors of history, and still others who were adult war workers, believe that the source of this stirring of youth was clearly enough in the terrible upheaval of the world war. Those were serious days for all young people. No one knew what was around tomorrow's corner, or when another class would be called to the colors. The heavy load was upon young shoulders and the response was both gratifying and prophetic. We saw carefree youth turned to responsible manhood in a day, and vision beyond horizons, and idealism ready to feed the flame of sacrifice. These influences reached far down into youth, both girls and boys, less mature than the brothers who were marching away behind the drums and the flags. The boys who offered themselves as the covenant price for a better world, if God spared them the ultimate sacrifice, are settled back into the affairs of life, busy in enterprise and home. But the impact was felt by youth as a whole. The canoeist on moving waters knows that the "boil" from hidden rock or sunken log appears down stream, not directly over the obstruction. So comes from youth today this expression which amazes and alarms unless rightly appraised and understood.

No one should be surprised at what is happening now, that youth, who, in the regulation order would serve next as cannon fodder, should further occasion arise, ask for a turn at the wheel. Hendrik van Loon says, "Youth has been fooled by the Wise Old Men who arranged its wars and its war-making treaties. Today youth's eyes are opening, and its memory is fresh." When there was trouble along the road Jehu was called upon to "repair" and "remedy" and open the way. When trouble abated he was told to go back to his place, "as you were," the order of the Old Men, expecting to hold at the driver's seat. But Jehu is saying, "You have not proved that you did not make a mess of it. Suppose I drive; don't you think it's my turn now!" With twenty million of youth's choicest own on the fields of war, how may the request be gainsaid!

When youth is at the wheel three things will happen—speed, noise and accidents. So soon as it was known some years ago, in the church circles where I was then serving, that the pastor was to have an automobile, two questions were asked me, one by an aged deacon, "Pastor, tell me; you have a car! How slowly can you drive it?" The other by one of my scouts, "Say, when you take 'er out, do you speed 'er up?" Youth at the wheel is likely to go some!

As to accidents of the road, they are not by any means confined to one age. There were some elderly profiteers in this fair country who exceeded the speed limits during the war and brought some trips to pretty smashes. Wolder people have not much to say when it comes to the accidents.

There is much to be said in favor of Jehu as driver. Study his story as told in the old book of the Kings and you will see that he drove through stormy times with a strong and sturdy arm. He avenged with terrible swiftness the high-handed, lustful murder of Naboth, establishing therewith the justice of property rights, he disturbed the idolatrous worship that was gaining among his people, he reassembled his nation. Probably for his times Jehu was a good driver. Perhaps he will be again. Suppose we try him.

Church Music

The Organist

BY FREDERICK MAXSON, ORGANIST, FIRST CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

THE organist should be a Christian, thoroughly in sympathy with the devotional side of the service, and well equipped as an artistic player. A woman may be as competent as her brother organist, but is frequently discriminated against. We have throughout the country some accomplished woman organists, who are filling their positions as organists and directors most acceptably.

At this time I am considering the work of an organist per se.

In the work of the organist lies, to a great measure, the success or failure of the service as a whole. He has it in his power to enhance or ruin the religious impression being made by the service. By the character of his organ prelude he may set the mood or atmosphere of the service that follows. He should vary the style of the prelude, sometimes playing a vigorous, inspiring composition; at others, one of a quiet, meditative type. The actual service should be considered as starting with the first note of the prelude, and quiet and decorum should be observed by all, just as in the later part of the service. The prelude should not exceed six to eight minutes.

When an organ offertory is played, it should not be unduly prolonged after the actual offertory has been taken. If the offering is to be brought to the chancel for a prayer, it is well for some signal to be arranged between the organist and ushers which will give time to end the organ selection at an appropriate place, followed by soft music as the plates are brought up, finishing with very soft music during the prayer.

An organ meditation is sometimes played just before the sermon, inducing a quiet and listening attitude, which is helpful to the minister as he begins to speak.

The organ postlude is so frequently the accompaniment to loud conversation, that it should be quite short and impromptu, or dispensed with entirely.

The organist should be a ready improviser, in order to connect smoothly gaps in the service. He should play the hymns over before they are sung by the congregation, in such a way that the mood and the tempo shall be clearly understood, and the singing may start promptly in the indicated tempo. The appropriate expression for each line or phrase of the hymn should be indicated, the organ being entirely silent at times, when suitable to the expression. I am very much indebted to my devoted mother for suggestions along the line of appropriate and expressive playing of the words of the hymns.

In playing sympathetic accompaniments to the solos and concerted musical numbers in the service, the organist must call upon his skill in harmony and orchestration, as many accompaniments are only piano reductions from an orchestral score, very ineffective when played literally as written, besides being a poor support for singers. These accompaniments must be in a measure rearranged to sound effective on the organ. One of the items in the examination for membership in the American Organ Players' Club is the playing of such an adaptation.

The organist may get great help from studying work on accompanying by such men as Dudley Buck, Clifford Demarest, Doctor Bridge of Westminster Abbey and Dr. Clarence Dickinson, organist of Brick Presbyterian church, New York.

During communion service the organist may lead the thoughts of the worshipers by the expressive playing of the melodies of appropriate hymn tunes.

When an organ recital precedes a service, usually in the evening, the selections should be varied in character, the final one bold and inspiring, or soft and meditative as the case may be.

It is well for an organist to be identified with one or more organizations, such as the National Association of Organists, which holds annual conventions of great value to the profession (the next one to be held in Philadelphia during the Sesqui-Centennial). He should also pass the examinations and join the American Guild of Organists and the American Organ Players' Club, obtaining his degree of Associate or Fellow of the Guild, which stand for his proper qualification as an organist, both in theory of music and in playing. The American Organ Players' Club confers no academic degree.

Frank J. Goodnow knows China. He has written and the Johns Hopkins Press has published a book of unusual analytical clearness on conditions in China. In that book he says: "From the days of the Portuguese the Christian faith has been propagated in China by force. The missionary's missal has been supplemented by the soldier's sword. . . . It is more than doubtful if China would ever have been opened as a field merely for missionary endeavor." And he regards the net result as good. Whatever may be said of the accuracy of his statement, his opinion is a prevalent one. He states precisely one of the most critical aspects of the present problem in China. How far does missionary effort in that country represent a spiritual and moral enterprise entirely separable from the imposition of the economic and political empire of western nations? And how far does Jesus depend upon military pressure for the success of the gospel?

ROBERT GORDON!

"The Leadership of Lincoln," "Washington a Christian Patriot," "Throwing Aside Our Greatest Asset," and "Logic Lost in Laughter" have lately entertained and uplifted BAPTIST readers. Robert Gordon is their author.

From the Kalamazoo College Index, Jan. 3, 1924, we quote:

Back in 1905 Kalamazoo College won first place in the intercollegiate oratorical contest with a Scotch lad named Robert Gordon as its representative. The year before he had won first place in the state-wide prohibition oratorical contest. To be convinced that the men who make good in college continue to make good after they leave the campus, all you need to do is trace the later career of such men. Not from the college platform, but from the pulpit of the Baptist ministry Robert Gordon is still appealing to the hearts and minds of men.

Robert Gordon was a worker. He worked his way through the old preparatory academy and then through the college itself, receiving the B. A. degree with the class of 1907. Later he did post-graduate work at the University of Chicago and also at the Divinity School of the University.

Today as the Rev. Robert Gordon, he is pastor of the First Baptist church of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. As a result of his five years' ministry there he has become universally popular. Men of all creeds and faiths swear by Robert Gordon as one of the constructive forces of the community. The managing editor of the Fond du Lac Reporter, himself a Catholic, has declared Robert Gordon to be not only the best after-dinner speaker in that section of the state, but also one of the most clear-minded and broad-minded of the liberal men of the city.

When there is a civic affair that needs organizing, the men behind it turn to Robert Gordon with the chairmanship. Whatever he takes charge of goes across. Last summer peace-day celebrations were being held across the country. It was Robert Gordon who organized his city and the resulting huge open-air meeting was one of the finest expressions of community sentiment since the war. When the Y. M. C. A. needed more funds, Robert Gordon was placed at the head of the drive and the funds were secured. When an organization holds a big dinner, or some convention is held in Fond du Lac, which is known as "The Convention City," care is taken that Robert Gordon is secured as one of the speakers. His never-failing Scotch humor, his dry irony when occasion demands, are sufficient to put life into any gathering.

But he can do more than be humorous. He is a speaker who does not hesitate to say what he believes to be the truth. He can denounce with vigor the wrong and he can praise whole-heartedly the right. A student of national and international affairs, he is quick to see the significance of new situations in the light of Christian truth.

Before a convention recently he said, "Nothing is to be deplored more than the devilish work of sowing suspicion and hatred, setting religion against religion, race against race, and nation against nation. There never was an hour when there was more need for utmost activity on the part of every man of good-will that mutual understanding may be deepened and genuine faith in each other increased. I have little patience with the man who for any reason, wealth, position, learning, religion, or what-not, lives a buttoned-up life. Neither pride nor shame should cut us off from our kind. We belong together. Learn to say,

ROBERT GORDON

'Brother.' And the biggest work of this generation is the tremendous business of getting governments to speak that word 'brother' across international lines."

He exemplifies this ideal in his work, where he always is ready to serve whoever needs him. There is no time that Robert Gordon is not on the job, as one of the city papers recently reported: "If there is any person who thinks that a preacher lives a life of luxurious ease, he is due for a surprise when he reads the following list of the Rev. Robert Gordon's Sunday engagements: Yesterday he conducted seven services, speaking at North Fond du Lac Chapel at 9:30 a. m., at Oakfield at 2:30 p. m., at Taycheedah at 4 p. m. and at the armory before a state convention of engineers at 9 p. m., in addition to conducting three regular services in his own church."

The Devotional Life

Walking Softly

I shall go softly all my years.—Isaiah 38-15.

By F. J. H. HUMPHREY

THESE are the words of a man upon whom sickness had fallen, who had the sentence of death in himself; but in the Providence of God and the use of medicine, he recovered. The experience bit deep into his life and made him a different man. From this field of affliction, Hezekiah reaped the harvest of a new sense of God, and a new meaning for life. This king learned that above us all is eternity's King, and that life is a solemn procession.

The Greatest Lesson

The uses of illness, affliction, trouble are manifold, the lessons they convey even fools are made to heed; but incomparably the best are those which this ancient king tells us he learned—the lessons of trust in God and a humble walk in life. Our bitter experiences can teach us truth about ourselves, very humbling, and truth about God, very uplifting. And that is the blessed end, the grand purpose in heaven's design in all such passages. Frequently that end and purpose are accomplished. Self-sufficiency is shaken, "lips cry 'God, be merciful' that ne'er said 'God be praised'"; in the affliction a Voice has seemed to say, "Hearken unto me and I will teach you the fear of the Lord," and from that lesson the proud, hard man has emerged, with the heart of a little child. "These are they which have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes." They follow their daily calling, they mix with their fellows, but at the back of it all is a deeper seriousness; they live in time with a sense of eternity, and move as those who march to music heard by their ears alone.

A wise teacher has said that "the hardest duty of life is to remain true to our psalms of deliverance." That is sadly illustrated in the case of Hezekiah. When the ambassadors of the Babylonian prince visit him, this man who had said he would "go softly all his years" carries himself with the old arrogance and self-confidence; he seems to have forgotten the vows made in affliction.

If we have won such spoils from the field of sorrow and affliction as a deeper trust in God, a steadier though slower step in life, a tenderer heart, a humble spirit—may God in his grace save us from squandering such treasure in the temptations of prosperity.

This "going softly" does not mean walking in velvet slippers on a rose-strewn path, it is not walking at ease in aimless wander; it is softly, as contrasted with the swagger of self-confidence; softly, that is, in humble dependence upon One mightier than ourselves; softly, as men walk in procession, or as travelers for whom the journey is long and difficult but the end sure.

"God, set our feet low and forehead high,
And show us how a man was made to walk."

Is there no other way of learning this humble walk save the way of affliction? There are people who seem to go through life with little experience of heavy trial and sorrow. Let them thank God for it. Certainly in this earthly life none wholly escape trial; possibly those who know but little of it are backward scholars, not competent to take a higher grade.

In the Father's Hand

If we choose to think we must know that we are not independent, our control of our lives is a limited control. A greater Power and Reality, whom Jesus Christ reveals as God our loving heavenly father, holds us in the hollow of his hand, and out of it neither in life nor death can we for one moment escape. To think that we are self-sufficient is folly, to think that we can live independent lives is folly. Since we came from God it is wisdom to return to him. Wisdom to move through life with the humility and dignity of a worshiper, who sees at the end of his course the throne of the most high God.

If needs must, we will be taught this wisdom, sharply and smartingly. Happy those who in the full enjoyment of life and the full strength of their powers, walk humbly with their God.

—The Baptist Times.

Mother Mine

I LOVE each furrow in thy face,
The silver in thy hair;
There's naught but beauty I can trace,

There's none that's half so fair.
The lovelight shines out from those dear eyes,

How well I know the sign
Of kindness, sweetness—all that's good—

Dear mother—mother mine!

And now, when those dear eyes grow dim,

And pain clouds that dear face,
The love that you still have for him,

Who oft times fell from grace,
Will yet bear fruit a hundredfold
In love, dear heart, like thine,
More precious far than virgin gold,
Dear mother—mother mine!

Young People and the Kingdom

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topics for May 30

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meeting Helps" will be to the following books: "Modern Discipleship and What It Means" by Woods; "Twelve Tests of Character" by Fosdick; "The Man Nobody Knows" by Barton; "Gates and Keys To Bible Books" by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible" by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church" by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers" by Miller; "God's Dynamite" by Lerrigo. The books may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society. A few others may be added.

For this evening's meeting, a memorial service for those who "went West" would be fitting. At the front of the room have the church's honor roll, or if it is possible that your church did not have one, perhaps you can make up a roll of those who you and others know have died in the war. In meeting, read these names over, perhaps telling in a very brief way of how they died and what they had done before their death. At the end, while all are bowed in prayer, perhaps you can persuade a scout or some one who plays a bugle to blow "Taps."

Also prepare another "honor roll" to look as much like the real one as possible. After having the memorial service for those who died, ask the young people for suggestions as to whose names should go on the "living" honor roll. The requisites, it should be explained, are right living—honesty, truth, love for fellowmen, loyalty to church and country, etc. Perhaps the names could be those of society members, perhaps of people who have rendered a real service to the country in recent years. Perhaps these might be in generalities—as for example, our schoolteachers who lead young lives in the right way, or the Sunday-school teachers.

After this honor roll has been completed, see if the young people will not resolve to try to do more in the future for the church and country. Perhaps they might all pledge allegiance to the flag which should be at the front of the room. If at all possible, have a Christian flag also at the front of the room, and have the young people pledge their allegiance to that.

In case you do not know these pledges, they are; for the American flag: I pledge allegiance to the American flag and to the republic for which it stands; one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all. For the Christian flag: I pledge allegiance to my flag and to theaviour for whose kingdom it stands; one brotherhood uniting all mankind in service and love.

The leader may sum up all the rest by making a statement to the effect that it takes but a minute to die for the country, but it takes years and years to live for it—and to live aright.

International Good-Will Sunday

(Sunday, May 16, 1926)

ATTENTION, Baptist young people! The youth of America want to live in peace with their comrades of other lands. There is at the present time a most significant tendency toward international friendship manifesting itself among the younger generation of the several races and nations.

The public schoolteachers of our own and other lands observe May 18 of each year as "good-will day." On that day exercises stressing the thought of international friendship are held in the classrooms of the public schools the world over.

It has been suggested that the young people of our churches might well participate in a similar type of service. The Sunday immediately prior to May 18, which this year happens to be May 16, will be observed as "International Good-will Sunday."

Who Is Sponsoring This Program?

1. The commission on international formerly of Idaho, now of New York City, who will conduct the forum on law enforcement and obedience at the Baptist Young People's Convention at Los Angeles. Judge Witty spent twenty-two years in the practice of law, served two years as state senator in Idaho, one term as county prosecuting attorney and three terms as city attorney of Pocatello. Judge Witty is at present executive secretary of the Laymen's National Council of the Northern Baptist Convention and a member of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention.

justice and good-will of the Federal Council of the Churches.

2. This project has received the formal endorsement of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League and the Baptist Young People's Union.

3. Many other representative leaders of denominational young people's groups are volunteering their cooperation.

Possible Types of Service

1. Community mass meetings of young people. In many cities such a service will be held under the auspices of the local federation of churches.

2. Young people's meetings in the local church.

3. Student Mass Meetings of young people's societies on college campuses.

4. Foreign field. A beginning will be made this year and further developed in subsequent years for the observance of this day in foreign countries under the auspices, if possible, of the denominational foreign mission boards.

Suggested Outline For Program

1. Invite the representatives of other nationalities to participate in the service, giving them a definite part on the program.

2. A song service that will emphasize the cause of peace among the nations.

3. A prayer for peace.

4. One or more talks by young people and other church leaders. Quite naturally, stress would be placed on the thought of world friendship and international good-will, especially among the youth groups of the several nations.

5. A forum period might well be introduced as a part of the program, or perhaps of the pageant.

6. The adoption of "a message of international friendship." This message would be informally addressed to the youth of the world. It would emphasize such considerations as (a) The desire of American youth to live at peace with their fellows. (b) The need of sympathetic understanding between racial and national groups. (c) The purpose of American youth to strike out from all immigration laws the discriminatory clauses. (d) The importance of having a department of peace in the several governments of the world. (e) Calling upon the church authorities in every land to give greater attention to the preparation of study materials for the development of Christian internationalism.

7. This message could be given to the local press and made public in other ways. Public opinion would thus be made to feel the impact of youth's idealism on the great question of world peace.

8. Broadcast the program of the message wherever possible.

The Chimney Corner

Her Mother's Song

BY MARGARET B. PLATT

"Jesus, Lover of my soul, Let me to thy bosom fly."

IN CADENCE sweet the words of the old familiar hymn fell upon the ears of Marian Forsythe and sang themselves over and over in her tortured brain. The long night through she had tossed in a fever of unrest and indecision and at dawn was still sleepless and undetermined. She had entered her room the previous evening quite clear as to her future course—and now she was all at sea again!

"Oh, why will that woman persist in singing that old hymn?" she peevishly exclaimed. Rising, she looked out upon the street below. She could hear church bells ringing and could see happy faced children trooping by, and people hurrying here and there, some upon amusement bent, others actuated by more serious purpose. Turning away, Marian again threw herself upon her couch. She thought she had fought it all out—and now—

Months ago Marian had come to the city with hope keyed high, and with unlimited confidence in her own ability to climb the ladder of success. Gradually her buoyancy of spirit had deserted her. What was she among so many? Others there were as capable, as eager to make for themselves a larger place, as willing to serve. What hope was there that she, more than others, would reach the desired goal? She could not continue on in the old beaten path. Must she stand behind Strathmore Company's counters until old and withered and forlorn, just to keep bread in her mouth? She shuddered. No! Today she would choose a flowery way, a path of pleasure, amusement, gay company, choice food, luxury. She would be done with drudgery—

*"Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing."*

Marian rose and, going to her dresser, tumbled about the things in the drawer looking for something. Oh, would that woman never stop singing!

A letter caught her eye. How full of youth's fine optimism her first missives home had been, but lately—how long was it since she had written? Weeks; and mother's last letter had been such a tender appeal to her only daughter to "come home where at least an honorable living could always be assured. Come, rest awhile," she had said. "We can do nicely, you and I, and I need you, dear." But Marian had flouted the prayer and the letter lay unanswered.

"Leave, oh leave me not alone."

Ah, the voice of the tempter had seemed very alluring, these last tiresome days. Work had become more irksome, the monotony unbearable. Why should she go on and on this way when just across an "imaginary line" lay ease and plenty? She had thought the matter thoroughly settled. But all night, old memories thronged her mind—long forgotten incidents of her childhood days. Her mother's touch, her mother's voice had been with her through the sleepless hours; she could feel those clear eyes looking into her very soul. When had she felt like this before?

"While the nearer waters roll, While the tempest still is high."

Surely the dark waters of sin were very near her feet. Temptation like a storm beset her. She sought her mirror. Yes, she was beautiful; and her hands were fair and shapely—she had been told that many times. She would grace any company; she was altogether fit to be adorned with jewels and bedecked with costly robes. Why should she waste her beauty on the common throng and her lovely hands become inured to toil when there were easier ways—

"Safe into the haven guide."

Doubtless mother was looking for her now, hoping—hoping she would see her coming up the flower-bordered walk. Mother would be going to church now. Marian could see her moving about making ready for the service, then tripping off through the orchard, fragrant with bloom and glorious with promise, along the woods road, across the creek,

How many muddy shoes all in a row?

Nobody knows but mother.

How many little torn aprons to mend?

How many hours of toil must she spend?

to the little chapel set in the grove of old forest trees. She could scent wild flowers and the sweet, wood-smell, and hear the creek gently telling the pebbles, as it ran along, little tale about the squirrels, the flowers, and the wild things up the mountain side where it came from. And all the neighbors would be gathered in the yard about the chapel. Kindly greetings would be exchanged and "the girls" would ask "How is Marian?" And as in a dream she glimpsed a vision of a pair of earnest dark eyes, an honest face, a manly form—

"Make and keep me pure within," came the song.

"Mother, mother, I'm coming home."

Marian was on her knees now, mother's last letter in her hands, covered with hot tears and kisses. Even in this moment she noticed how cramped the writing was, how blurred here and there. Mother was tired, she was longing for her girl, and she had wept as she wrote the tender home summons.

"Wait for me, mother! I am coming. I am coming now, and I will stay with mother! I'll stay as long as you want me."

"Plenteous grace with thee is found."

Over and over the young mother across the hall crooned to the babe within her arms the old hymn. Its tender melody enfolded the girl as with an atmosphere of love and protection. She must hurry now, there was no time to lose; tonight she must be safe with mother.

An hour later a young woman, neatly gowned, with suitcase in hand, knocked at the door across the hall. "Just a moment. No, thank you, I must not stop—I'm leaving on the next train. Yes, going home. But I must tell you how much you have done for me. You did not know—it was your singing—mother used to sing just that way. Sometimes it made me feel—well, today I was going, well I was going somewhere else—but when you sang that hymn I—I saw mother and she is looking for me, and I'm going home, but I want you to know what you've done for me—just by singing."

Brokenly, and with quivering lips, she told her story. The young matron caught the youthful face between her hands and kissed the fair brow. "God bless you, child! I'm so glad! Won't this be a happy day for your mother, dear?"

As Marian crossed the street below there floated out through the open windows, in triumphant strain, the long metre doxology, and as she turned and lifted her eyes for a last look at the upper window, the madonna of the song, with her babe close to her heart, waved the girl she had saved a tender farewell.

BOYS and GIRLS

"Mother! I Love You!"

SOMETIMES there will come to our notice in the busiest moments of the day some sincere sentiment which will stir the tenderest chords of our being. A pleasant-faced woman boarded a trolley car during the busy noon hour of the holiday season. The smaller boy sat with his mother upon one side of the car, while the older, who was about four years, took a seat opposite. It interested him to look out of the window, but frequently he glanced across at his mother. At length he called softly: "Mother!" No answer. Again he spoke: "Mother!" This time it was said a bit louder, and the mother looked over and smiled. The boy's eyes lighted, and he whispered: "Mother, I love you." The mother turned a glorified face upon her small son, and men and women in the car looked tenderly from one to the other. The trolley car had suddenly become a place of blessing because a little boy had voiced this ever-beautiful sentiment: "Mother! I love you."—Zion's Herald.

No, I'll Not Forget

ONE day the mother was holding her little lad upon her lap, as she often did. But on this occasion she gazed so searchingly into his eyes that the little fellow waxed uneasy under the glance. Answering his childish questions, she told him that she was looking for his heart. "Look in your mother's eyes, lad," said she, "and say after me this: 'My mother—looked upon my heart—and found it brave—and sweet—willing for the day's work—and harboring no shameful hope.'"

She had him repeat it again and again, until he knew every word by heart. Then, at last, the mother said: "Ah, but you'll forget!" Swiftly the lad answered, "No, no! I'll not forget."

Years passed, and as the child, now a man, spoke of that distant hour of childhood, he said: "But I have not forgotten—I have not forgotten—I have never forgotten—that when I was a child my mother looked upon my heart and found it brave and sweet, willing for the day's work and harboring no shameful hope."

Seventy Persons Stared at Mary Elizabeth Eating Breakfast!

THIS little letter has been saved for our Boys' and Girls' Page until this Mother's Day number, because here is a story fresh from India from Mary Elizabeth Witter who shares with her mother and father their great task of giving Christ to India! Some of you may care to write to her, care of "The Kodaikanal School for Missionaries' Children," Kodaikanal, South India. Your letter will need a five cent stamp. Here is her letter:

Dear Miss Applegarth:

I have read the Boys' and Girls' pages and they are very interesting. I especially enjoyed "Camping in the Mountains." Those boys certainly know how to write stories.

I am now on my vacation and spending it with my parents in the hot plains of India, in Podili. In a week I start for the south to the Putni hills where I go to a nice American school at Kodaikanal where it is cool.

We have just been out in camp where we lived among the Indians and daddy preached to them. I sometimes take a Sunday-school class of those half-naked children and teach them. But it is very hard as I do not know the language very well.

They are very curious and come right into the tent and crowd around us as we eat breakfast. Last time seventy persons stared at us as we ate our meal.

Your devoted reader,
Mary Elizabeth Witter (age 11).

Mothers Hate War!

Dear Miss Applegarth:

I would like to join the Explorer's Club. I like the stories about war, because people do not seem to use their heads much about war. They are so

THEY'RE good for bumps, and good for lumps,

They're even good for dumps and grumps,

They're good for stings of "bumbly-bees"

And barks from "shinnying" cherry-trees.

For splinters, sun-burn, "skeeter-bites,"

For "injured feelings" after fights,
And scratches, scratched while Tabby

hisses—
Mother's kisses.

There's naught so pure, there's naught so sure,

Indeed, they seem a heavenly cure,
For pounded fingers, stubbied toes,

And all the long, long list of woes,
Yet did you ever think it queer

That while they're fine for every fear
They're just as fine with all the blisses—

Mother's kisses.
—Annie Balcomb Wheeler.

grateful to soldiers for going to face danger for them that they do not always see that it settles nothing. I know something though and that is that mothers hate war. I have an aunt who is a mother and three of her sons were killed in the last war. Does she love war? No, she does not. Then I have a second cousin who is a mother and she lost a son in the war, and I feel very sorry for her as she had no one but him to live for.

Mothers are the ones who suffer most because of war because they love the special soldier who belongs to them and every day is an agony wondering whether he will live through that day safely or not. I know my mother says to me many times how she wants me to love my country and help my country, but never by taking any one's life but by saving life. I think I will be a doctor when I grow up, so that I can make this country a safer place for a few people to live in anyhow.

I read the Boys' and Girls' page every week and like it very much.

Very truly yours,
Floyd R. Allen (12 years),
Pasadena.

If Mothers Were Like Us

BY PEGGY

LIFE would be perfectly dreadful, if mothers were like us! I know this, because my own mother decided one day to teach me a lesson and it was the kind of time you call a Red Letter day for all of us.

I needed a clean middy blouse, and mother had washed it, and ironed it. I was just putting it on when I said: "Why, mother, it's only half ironed!"

"Is it?" she said very calmly.

I was so surprised at her, sitting there reading a book. "But aren't you going to finish it?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't want to," she said. "I'd lots rather read just now."

I looked at her in astonishment. Timothy looked at her in astonishment. Bill looked at her in astonishment. It was too odd to have mother being a quitter.

But she kept it up all day long. When she came in she flung her hat on the dinner table, her gloves over the sugar bowl, and her coat in my chair at the table. She ate with her arms sprawled on the table and of course it was finally so funny that we all burst out laughing; mother laughed harder than any of us, and I got an awful little picture of how careless and indifferent I was, not much of an ornament to any house. So now I've quite changed my ways. I'm so glad mother didn't stay like me, you see!

With the Board of Missionary Cooperation

TIME WE DID SOMETHING

ABOUT IT, ISN'T IT?

Mr. Orrin Judd sent us, not long ago, an extract from the New York Chronicle, a Baptist weekly of which his father was editor. The issue was for Mar. 1, 1851—but the article mentioned has a strangely familiar sound. In telling of the tardiness of payments on the budget of the Baptist Missionary Union, the writer comments as follows:

"The Home Secretary of this Society says the receipts of the Union for the first ten months of the year amount only to $54,000; leaving $44,000 to be raised within the last two months, February and March, in order to meet current expenses.

"It will be necessary for every pastor, and all the friends of missions, to bestir themselves, or we shall be sadly in arrears at the next anniversary. Let us be up and doing."

After seventy-five years of first-of-the-year procrastination and last-of-the-year scramble, isn't it time we adopted more sensible and regular methods?

FINE COOPERATION FROM

THESE NEW YORK

STATE CHURCHES

A small church of thirty-nine members at Bolten Landing, New York state, sent in the money received through self denial boxes, together with the remainder of their quota which they over-subscribed by $8.52. The church treasurer says in the letter accompanying his remittance, "I think our church has raised its quota very easily by paying our one-twelfth every month."

The treasurer of the Baptist church in Middlegrove, N. Y., says in his letter to the state office, "I am sending in the balance of our quota for the year, with $3 additional for interest on the delayed money, as it was impossible for me to get it together sooner."

SELF DENIAL OFFERINGS

The Fifth Avenue church in Huntingdon, W. Va., turned in a splendid self-denial offering on Easter Sunday, amounting to $1800. Just as commendable, considering the size of the church, was the $100 offering of a little country church away up in the hills of the same state.

One hundred dollars was the amount contributed through the banks by the Sunday school of the First church in Passaic, N. J. According to the pastor, Rev. David Solly, the banks were principally filled with pennies. We understand that there was some murmuring on the part of the treasurer when he came to count the ten thousand and odd pennies, but the Sunday school felt very proud of itself.

This page is conducted by the Board of Missionary Cooperation, New York City, as a medium for circulating items about local churches which are carrying on their own and denominational projects in an effective way. If your church has developed any interesting ideas or methods we shall be glad to have you write about them to the board, at 276 Fifth avenue. Brief outlines of denominational plans, important news, etc., will also appear here from time to time.

THIS CHURCH

INVITES FRANKNESS

The Calvary church, Norristown, Pa., in its weekly church calendar appeals to its members to make it their business to know the details of the life of their church. "In a Baptist church," the article runs, "there should be a very general understanding of the whole business and other problems and methods. We are a democracy. The church is your creation under God. Feel free, therefore, at any time and under any circumstances, to ask any board or any officer or any committee for light on any phase of the work about which you are uncertain. The trustees and deacons and all officers of the church are your officers. You have a right, a responsibility to question them and your pastor. Know the reason for all action. Any other policy than absolute frankness may be easier for the time, but ultimately is fatal."

DR. BROUGHER TO SOUND

CONVENTION KEY-NOTE

Baptists who have become acquainted with Dr. James Whitcomb Brougher during the past year when he has been touring the country for the united program will learn with interest that he is to deliver the key-note address at the Washington convention. "Our Common Denominator" is to be his subject, and all who heard his plea for denominational teamwork—"Play Ball"—will realize how effectively he will be able to point out the principles which all Baptists have in common.

The latest reports which have come to us about his meetings are from Idaho and Montana. Secretary Shanks reports 1200 at the Boise meeting, and a packed hall at Pocatello. The attendance approximated two-thirds of the Baptists of Southern Idaho, and all but two churches in the state were represented. Secretary Curry of Montana says that the meeting in Montana was a great success, with over 1000 representative people there.

EVERY MEMBER PLAN

HELPS THESE CHURCHES

One of our field men has been helping to introduce the Every Member plan in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In one morning's mail he received two letters from churches which he had visited.

The first letter said: "Our first day's report shows that we have received a larger amount in pledges for the year beginning Apr. 1, from only one-third of the members, than was subscribed from the whole membership last year. Our chairman says we will go over the top. Missionary money coming on with the current in same fashion. Will give you a final report later when returns are all in."

The second letter came from a church which is giving $4100 for missions this year. When it came to make up its budget for 1926-27, it thought at first that a 10 per cent increase would be the limit. The church was going to put on a weak canvass. However, it listened to the field man's suggestions and decided to present the whole program and real budget to the church members. This was done in a masterly fashion, according to our field worker, and he has just received a letter from the church saying that it found it could fix its missionary goal for next year as high as $5000.

GETTING THEIR

BUDGET PLEDGED

The First church in Sioux City, Iowa, Rev. Lewis Jacobsen, pastor, used an interesting method of getting its yearly budget pledged. They sent to their entire membership a little leaflet in which they designated the last Sunday in January as "loyalty day." All members, and any others interested were asked to come to the church at some time during the afternoon on that day and volunteer their pledges for 1926. Twenty tables were arranged in the lower auditorium, and some one stationed there to answer all questions. On the wall hung a great board containing the name of every resident member, and as a pledge was made, the corresponding name was crossed off the board.

After the members had volunteered their pledges, they were met by a reception committee who assisted them in getting acquainted with all the other members, whom they did not already know. Refreshments were served by the women, and at five o'clock all were asked to join in a great vesper service and hear the report of the finance committee on the results of the day. Arrangements were made for visiting those who, for some reason, were unable to come to the church and volunteer their pledges.

Among Ourselves

District of Columbia

BY HENRY W. O. MILLINGTON

THE week beginning Apr. 11 was marked by two outstanding events in our Washington life. The woman's national committee for law enforcement held its annual convention here in our city. In ordinary circumstances this would have created considerable interest, but it so happened that a senate committee was investigating the question of the success or non-success of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. The week before, the enemies of prohibition had had their innings, and this particular week was to be given over to the advocates of prohibition and law enforcement. This proved a golden opportunity for the women, and under the leadership of Mrs. Lucy W. Peabody, a great demonstration was organized at the capitol, for Monday morning, Apr. 12. Thousands of women from our churches and reform organizations were in attendance and their presence made a great impression upon the committee and congress in general. The woman's national committee for law enforcement had not anticipated the appointment of the senate committee at the time their convention was planned, and they regarded this opportunity to present their case before such a body as being peculiarly providential. Certain members of the committee treated them with scant courtesy, but they were not to be intimidated, and they went at their work with a brave heart and in a good way. Their convention was in every way a successful affair. Among the speakers were some of our most notable men and women. Probably the strongest contribution was made by Mr. Sargent, the attorney general. Among the excellent things which he said, is the following:

"The law is the will of the body politic and we are in our place by the will of the body politic, put there to execute that will, and if we go about declaring in speech and in print that the law ought to be changed, so that acts which are offenses will not be offenses, we thereby weaken our causes in the minds of the tribunals before whom we must try them.

"The real source of the embarrassment to the enforcement of the law is not that the law interferes with personal liberty, as so many argue," he said, adding that any law which has any effect upon the conduct of the individuals composing society does that—must do that—"but that so many well-intentioned persons, thoughtlessly, or following some process of unsound reasoning, join hands with those who intentionally violate the law."

Our own Mrs. Peabody is a perfect

miracle of wisdom and strength. She has developed a most effective organization covering this entire nation, and is leading a crusade that must tax her strength to the utmost. We should all pray that her life may be spared and that she may be prospered in the strenuous endeavor of these days.

The next event was a missionary conference, held under the auspices of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches. By reason of our location and a policy entered upon seven years ago, all our Baptist churches are connected with both the Northern and Southern Conventions, our benevolent contributions being divided equally between both. It is natural, therefore, in the development of all our Baptist enterprises here, to seek the aid of both our great Baptist bodies. At this recent missionary conference, each convention contributed four missionaries, and in addition, several of our secretaries were present. The conference opened on Thursday night, when the speaking force was distributed among our churches in connection with the prayer services, some of the speakers visiting two churches, and in other cases, churches being grouped with one speaker. Three sessions were held on Friday in the Calvary church, the attendance being exceptionally large all the day. From 5:30 to 6:30 in the afternoon, a reception was held, and at 6:30 a banquet was served, nearly 500 people being in attendance. That was followed by the closing service of the conference, when the auditorium of Calvary church was well filled. The missionaries in attendance were: Dr. George A. Huntley, Dr. Bruce Kinney, Miss Luella E. Adams, Miss Mary D. Jesse, Rev. J. R. Saunders, Dr. John Lowe, Mrs. P. S. Evans, and Miss Edith West. In addition to these, Dr. J. F. Love represented the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention, while Dr. Frank A. Smith represented the Home Mission Society of the Northern Baptist Convention. On Sunday, Apr. 18, the missionaries spoke in our different churches both morning and night, and were greeted by large audiences, upon which they made a great impression. The plan of distribution among the churches was so arranged that every one of our twenty-seven churches was reached at some service by one of the missionaries. These men and women, in their addresses, gave the story of the work actually being done on our mission fields, and have contributed to our Baptist life a large amount of useful information and inspiration. This missionary conference is probably the greatest affair of its kind that we have ever held, and is sure to result in great good.

The first church of Alexandria, Va., Rev. P. L. Vernon, pastor, has just closed a series of meetings, the pastor himself leading in the preaching, and Mr. Percy S. Foster conducting the singing. As a result of these meetings, fifty decisions were registered, most of whom have united with the church. This church is about to erect an addition to its present property, and at the same time will redecorate its auditorium. When all this work is done, our Alexandria Baptists will have a most attractive church property.

Cortland Association, N. Y.

By G. A. FAIRBANK

THERE have been a number of baptisms in the different churches during the Easter season. Pastor Cutten of the First church of Cortland baptized seven on Palm Sunday and thirteen on Easter. The baptisms took place at the close of the evening services and served as a climax to these services which consisted of stereopticon views, music and readings portraying the events of Passion week. The First church has recently named a committee on religious education which is at work on the different phases of the educational program of the church seeking to correlate the whole so that the church may more efficiently perform its task.

Before It Is Too Late

If you have a grey-haired mother
In the old home far away,
Sit down and write the letter
You put off from day to day.
Don't wait until her weary steps
Reach heaven's pearly gate,
But show her that you think of her,
Before it is too late.

Or a loving word to say,
Don't wait until you forget it,
But whisper it today.
Who knows what bitter memories
May haunt you if you wait?
So make your loved one happy
Before it is too late.

The letters never sent,
The long forgotten messages,
The wealth of love unspent;
For these some hearts are breaking
For these some loved ones wait;
Show them that you care for them
Before it is too late.

Roger Williams Baptist Church.

Cortland is progressing under the pastoral leadership of Rev. F. W. Allen who is in the eighth year of his pastorate. The Sunday-school attendance is increasing so that every available space in the building, even the kitchen, is used for classes and the need for more room is being felt. The boys are organized into a Pioneer club which is doing some good work for and with the boys. The tithers have recently been organized into a stewardship league. Pastor Allen baptized five on Palm Sunday and five on Easter. Two others have been received by the church for baptism.

Misses Frieda Ehrlich and Mary MacDougall of the state staff of evangelists recently held a campaign with the McGrawville church. They are both earnest Christian workers. The sermons of Miss Ehrlich were strong and sane presentations of the biblical way of salvation and Christian living. Miss MacDougall is a royal helper with the cornet, and with the boys and girls. While the attendance was not large and few of the unchurched attended, nevertheless the opinion as expressed by the people in prayer meeting after the meetings closed was that they were helpful in many ways to those who did attend. There were a number of new decisions for Christ and some who have been Christians for some time have now decided to unite with the church.

Apr. 18 Pastor Fairbank baptized five young men and one young woman. These had been received by the church and were ready for baptism on Easter, but the baptism was not held at that time as the village water supply for the church was frozen.

Rev. George Briggs of Buffalo closed a ten-days' meeting with the Homer church Apr. 16. The church enjoyed the singing and preaching of the Buffalo pastor and the meetings were very helpful to the church, a good spirit prevailing in the services. Not many of the unconverted attended the meetings so the services were directed for the most part to the making of stronger and better Christians. Pastor Alban McKnight, baptized five on Easter Sunday. Others have been received for church membership and will be baptized later. Mr. Benjamin Starr who is a member of the Homer church was recently granted a license to preach by the church. He has for a number of weeks been supplying the Weedsport church and will now be available for a supply. Mr. Starr has served for a number of years as the stewardship secretary under the state board of promotion very acceptably until last fall when on account of the cutting down of expenses his services were discontinued.

Pastor Arthur Tice of the Solon church who was severely injured last fall by being run over by his automobile, is able to be around by the aid of one crutch. Mr. Walter Young of the practical Bible training school has been the pulpit supply for most of the time. The Solon church on Apr. 18, granted Mrs. Lewis Stafford, one of its members, a license to preach.

Central Church, Hartford, Conn., Dedicates

By HORACE B. SLOAT

THE Central Baptist church, Hartford, opened the doors of its magnificent new home on Palm Sunday. Hundreds of people were turned away from each service. The dedication services were held for an entire week. Sunday, April 11, was denominational day. At the morning service Mrs. George W. Coleman, Boston, spoke on "I Hear A Voice"; and Dr. J. H. Franklin, New York, on, "The Baptist Principles and the World Situation." In the evening Rev. E. E. Gates, general secretary of the Connecticut State Convention, gave a timely message, using as his subject, "All Judea." The closing message of the day was by Dr. H. F. Stilwell on, "Evangelism the Supreme Task of the Church."

On Monday evening the James L. Howard memorial organ was dedicated. This organ, given by friends of the church, consists of four manuals and an echo organ, having sixty-four speaking stops. The instrument was built by the Austin Organ Company of Hartford at a cost of $26,000. Prof. Harry Benjamin Jepson of Yale gave an organ recital. At 5:30 p. m. on Wednesday, the dedication of the dining-room and kitchen took place, followed by two dedication dinners. City night was observed in the evening. Dr. William Douglas Mackensie, president of Hartford Theological Seminary foundation, presided. The invocation was by Dr. J. F. Johnstone, First Presbyterian church. Addresses were delivered by Hon. Norman C. Stevens, mayor of the city; Rabbi Abraham J. Feldman, Temple Beth Israel; Rev. Julius Hulteen, Swedish Lutheran church; Very Reverend Dean S. R. Colladay, Christ Church cathedral; Dr. W. S. Archibald, South Park Methodist church; Rev. R. H. McLaughlin, Universalist church; Rev. F. D. Torrey, South Park Methodist church.

On Thursday afternoon at three o'clock the lecture room was dedicated. Rev. E. S. Holloway, New York, a former pastor of the Old South Baptist church, gave the address on "How Shall We Use Our Great Inheritance?" In the evening, at 7:45, church night was observed, Chas. P. Walker, presiding. The program consisted of a varied musical program, solos, quartets and orchestra, followed by the dedication of the gymnasium, bowling alleys and club rooms, and a basketball game between Central Baptist, Hartford and Calvary Baptist team, New Haven, the former team winning.

Educational night came on Friday. After the presentation by the Samuel Lyon Post Woman's Relief Corp to the Central school of a national flag and the Christian flag by the Woman's Society of the Central church, J. W. Mason, director of religious education, spoke on "The Aim of Religious Education." Then followed a pageant "The Church Victorious," written and directed by Mrs. C. H. Barrett, of Central church, expressly for educational night and dedicated to the pastor, Dr. John Newton Lackey, "under whose guidance the church goes forth in her new venture."

Sunday, April 18, was the last great day of the feast. Dr. Herbert Judson White, so long identified with the life of the church and city, preached the dedicatory sermon. An audience that overflowed the auditorium greeted the former pastor, hearing him gladly, as he spoke on "God's House—Heaven's Gate." The pastor, Doctor Lackey, preached in the evening on the subject, "The New Christian for the New Age," a fitting climax for a most unusual program. The ordinance of baptism was administered. Since occupying the new church home, the pastor has baptized fifty-six candidates. A number are awaiting the ordinance.

Throughout the entire week an elaborcational work and the development of the social work of the church has necessitated a type of church plant inconceivable a few years ago.

From outward appearance the church does not look like the ordinary church building. There is no spire or belfry. It is built along simple colonial lines, with its six massive pillars and impressive portico. There is a dignity, simplicity and beauty that is most impressive. The varicolored tapestry brick contrasts harmoniously with the limestone portico and trim. The brick work is esis indirectly lighted, primarily from the dome but also from lights shining through the opaque glass under the balconies. The eyes naturally focus upon the platform with the beautiful baptistry screen, which seems to be set in a frame created by the great arch above. On both sides of this archway behind massive grilles the organ pipes have been placed. An elaborate dimmer controls the lighting of the entire room as well as the individual lighting in and around the archway and baptistry.

The organ console appears in front and to the right of the platform, while on the opposite side a grand piano has been placed.

The woodwork throughout the room blends in a rich mahogany color, contrasting with the ivories and cream in the walls. The pews also follow out the color scheme of ivory with mahogany trim.

On the platform are seats for the chorus choir which may be removed when the choir is not participating in the services. Back of the choir and in front of the baptistry a moving picture screen has been placed. This, however, cannot be seen except when in operation. Ordinarily it remains around a drum under the platform ready for use at any time.

The baptistry screen is a beautiful piece of carving. High above in the center is a dove with wings outspread ready for flight. On both sides of the baptistry the carving appears.

The church auditorium seats in excess of 1200.

The James L. Howard memorial organ, which was given to the church by friends of the church is the latest product from the Austin Organ company. Many weeks were used in planning the specifications for the organ and the special committee secured valuable assistance from Ralph L. Baldwin, E. F. Laubin and Professor Harry Benjamin Jepson. The organ builders also have taken a peculiar interest in the planning, building and voicing of the instrument. Seventy-four stops.

On the ground floor on the north side is the lecture room. This is the room where the mid-week services, entertainments and plays will be given. The stage with the necessary theatrical properties is at one end of the room.

On the Linden street side of the building on the ground floor is found the ladies' parlor. A large and attractive fireplace appears at one end of the room. There is a grand piano, rugs, a large table and many comfortable chairs. The room is planned to be used not only as a rest room and meeting place for the women's society but like all the other rooms will be used by one of the large organized classes.

In passing from the ladies' parlor to the men's club room there is a small kitchenette with a dumb waiter connecting the kitchenette with the kitchen in the basement. Small luncheons may be readily served, preparing the food in the kitchen and furnishing refreshment to either the ladies' parlor or men's club room without difficulty.

CENTRAL CHURCH BUILDING, HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT

te musical program was rendered under the direction of Henry E. Bonander, the church organist.

The new building located on Main Street in the down-town section of the city, is the latest word in its type of construction, having an auditorium seating 1500, with 122 rooms for social and educational purposes. It was erected at a cost of $750,000. The local church budget for the current year is $43,000; the benevolent budget is $50,000. Doctor Lackey, speaking of the aims of the church where now located, called attention to the fact that "while thousands of people have moved into the section, seven protestant churches moved out." The Central church with a membership of 784 faces the down-town task with a splendid equipment to render an effective ministry "where the race of men go by."

A New Type of Church Building

By GEORGE E. MERRILL

WHEN the new Central Baptist Church building opened its doors for education services on Apr. 11, a new type of church was shown to the city of Hartford, Conn.

The church of olden days, included a large auditorium and occasionally a few small rooms which were used for the prayer meeting and other smaller meetings. The growth of the organized church and school with its complex edupecially beautiful, eleven different shades being used in the construction; no two bricks of the same hue adjoin each other. Even in the rear of the building the same quality of brick and the same high type of workmanship prevail.

As one enters the vestibule at the Sunday services, using one of the three front doors, there is a short flight of steps at the top of which stand two handsome Verde Antique columns. The foyer at the top of the stairs is of ample proportions and allows opportunity for an informal meeting place of the church people between services—a custom which has prevailed for many years at Central church. The walls are of gray Tennessee marble with a handsome valuted ceiling, from which hang three chandeliers.

At the top of the stairs to the right there is a suite of offices for use of the pastor and the church staff. Two private offices have been planned for the pastor and his assistant. A larger general office will be used by the church secretary, church visitor and director of religious education. On the opposite side a corresponding suite of offices will be occupied by the officers of the Connecticut Baptist Convention.

In the center of the building is the auditorium which, as, Doctor White once remarked, is placed as it should be—"the heart of the church." In entering the auditorium there is a feeling of repose and beauty. The entire room

There is a gymnasium sufficiently large to contain full basketball court, with ample clearance for playing the game, and a gallery seating about 200 is on two sides of the room. A large and commodious dining-room has circular tables seating 400. The tables are so devised as to be easily folded and stacked when not in use. The kitchen is equipped for practically all service demanded from it either from a cafeteria standpoint or from that of a banquet.

The class rooms surround the auditorium on three sides on the second and third floors. Each department has its own assembly room and from the assembly rooms the individual class rooms have been constructed. There is excellent light throughout and in the class rooms there is privacy which is so effectual in the educational work of the church.

There is no ostentatious display but there is a simple richness in the auditorium and lobby in keeping with the place, while the rooms used for educational and social purposes are adequate, well conceived and harmonious

Letter from India

By W. L. FERGUSON

INDIA is in the midst of annual budgeting for receipts and expenditures, and so is akin to all the rest of the world which has to experience like anxieties. If the old saying about a fellow-feeling has force any longer, the members of churches belonging to the Northern Baptist Convention ought to be specially drawn to India at this time. May their emotions take a practical turn, for our mission bodies are as hard put to it as is the government or any other body to find enough money to meet the most absolute needs, let alone making any advance.

We are hearing much these days about nation-building expenditures. The budget-makers are seeking to specialize in those things which are most essential to the development of the people. The departments calling for special attention are public health, education, and transportation. So the push is on for more and better sanitation, more medical schools, more hospitals, more dispensaries, more physicians in the rural areas; more elementary schools, more teacher-training institutions, and more colleges and universities; more roads, more railways and better equipped, and a lowering of rates where possible.

Now all these things are not coming in a jiffy. It will take years of patient and persistent endeavor to bring into operation so large a program; but it is much to know that a beginning has been made and that the desire for more and better things is being backed up by the effort to obtain them. To improve the health of the people in the villages of this Madras Presidency the government is offering to physicians an initial outfit of drugs and medicines and a small monthly stipend, so as to enable them to get a start in places now unsupplied with trained practitioners. It is too early yet to say how the plan is going to work. A new medical school, for training lower grade physicians, is being opened at Guntur, right in the heart of the Telugu Area, and the former medical school at Vizagapatam, further to the north, is being raised to the status of a medical college. The Andhra University scheme, too, is materializing. For some years the question of having a university in and for the Telugu area has been under study, discussion and advisement. A year or more ago the bill for creating such an institution was enacted into law, and just recently a vice-chancellor has been appointed, whose business it is to bring into being the university for which the act provides. One peculiar feature of the arrangement is that the constituent colleges of the university are so widely separated in space from the university's administrative offices. In time this may be overcome by amalgamations among the colleges, or by the university creating colleges of its own in the same place as its administration. The corporation of Madras is working toward a free and compulsory scheme of education for the city. In doing this many difficulties are arising. It is difficult to acquire the needed properties to house so large a project, and it is also difficult to find a sufficient number of well-trained teachers to staff the scores of schools needed. The corporation has set a scale of pay fully 50 per cent above that which the missions can afford to give, with the result that more and more of the mission school teachers are being drawn into the public service. Numbers, however, are faithfully sticking by the mission on the lower scales of pay. Owing to a readjustment of government accounting the expenses of railways are dealt with separately from this time on. The advantage of this is that the railways will more nearly reap the benefits of their own earnings in the shape of extensions and better equipment. There is much pressure in the legislative assembly for a reduction of postal rates, which are still at the war-time level; but so far the finance minister has not seen his way to accede to the demand. Taxes must come from some source, and the postoffice as good a place to raise revenue as is some other. The foregoing two references to education and postal rates may serve to give a hint to some one concerning the why of the increased cost of conducting mission work. Not that we spend all our money on salaries for teachers and for postage, but some of it goes for these items, and these increases are but typical of many others.

The time has come for a change of administrators. Lord Reading, the viceroy, is laying down his office after five strenuous years of service; and the new appointee has, according to custom, appeared before the king-emperor at Buckingham Palace, London, received his high decorations and instructions, "kissed hands," lunched with his majesty, and is now on his way to India, where he will assume office on the first of April. Lord Irwin, the new viceroy, is said to be greatly interested in agriculture, and it is expected that he will devote a part of his energies to seeing that India is brought forward in this ancient and honorable occupation, for still some 90 per cent of the population of this realm are either directly or indirectly concerned with cultivation.

Two very important announcements have been made by Lord Reading before he lays down his duties. The first was to do with the re-creation of an Indian navy. Hitherto the British navy has guarded India, and the government of India has made a contribution of £100,000 per annum toward expenses. But now, in response to a widespread demand for home-rule and national expression, the sons of India are to be recruited for the sea, and trained to guard India's coasts. A merchant marine is also being called for, but time is needed to bring this and the navy into being. The other important affair is the change in policy by which government adopts the recommendations of the Geneva conferences on opium, and henceforth exercises a rigid control over all exports, promising to do away with the auction sale of the drug, and regulating shipments to opium-smoking countries so that in a given time all exports except those certified to be for medicinal and scientific purposes shall cease. This indeed is good news.

The liquor interests are wideawake in his land. Every scrap of information which can in any way cast a shadow on prohibition in America is heralded with much advertising. The recent pronouncements of the Rev. Doctor Empingham and his church temperance society were promptly published in the leading English daily papers here; but not a word so far has appeared in respect to the fiasco that followed, whereby the hollowness of the whole claim was exposed. Just last evening in the foremost daily paper of Madras the following news item appeared: "New York's national referendum of prohibition indicates an overwhelming majority against the present law and advocates the sale of light wines and beer." Let any American read that and he will at once ask, How can New York carry on "national referendum"? But very few non-Americans have any knowledge of the methods of government prevailing in Uncle Sam's domain, and so will not spot the untruth which is hidden in this bit of wet propaganda. India is becoming more clamant than ever for prohibition. It now has an all India Prohibition League which is beginning to function in an effective way. The fight may be hard, but the day of victory will come if America holds true to the ideal she has set and succeeds in stamping out the lawlessness which the liquor traffic has bequeathed as a heritage to this generation.

Baptists are springing up in unexpected places. Recently I have been on a visit to a region in Southern India where there are twenty-three "self-owned" churches of this sort. No missionary has ever been sent to labor among them. They have read the scriptures and have sought to practice what the New Testament teaches. Their chief spokesman and leader is a very active and spiritually minded man. He has frequently written to me asking me to come and visit him and his work; but until recently I never could get away to do so. This year, however, I went and stayed some five days, assisting in a big convention for edification and revival. The crowds that came were large and attentive. On the closing day there were fully 4000 present. Our meeting place was a big temporary booth, down by the river side. The people used the fine river sand as their rugs and chairs. The meetings were about two hours long, with only a short recess between appointments. The people stayed and listened. The singing was inspiring, and the prayers were fervent. On the last day, the great day, there were twenty-three baptisms. It was a most impressive sight to witness these, in the deep, quiet waters of the river, just at sunset. The visit cost me four nights and two days of travel, going and coming, and money I could not afford to spend; but I am very glad that I went, for I have seen new things in this old land—the gospel a going affair, missionary or no missionary. Hallelujah!

President Riley's Twentieth Anniversary

By WILLIAM R. FRERICHs

ON March 1 Dr. Leonard W. Riley completed twenty years of service as president of Linfield college. In view of the significant achievements during this period the trustees and faculty felt that the anniversary should be marked by an appropriate celebration. It was also deemed fitting that Dr. James Whitcomb Brougher should be the principal speaker at the occasion, because it was he who nominated Doctor Riley to the presidency of the college. Doctor Brougher's itinerary made it necessary to have the celebration Apr. 4-5. The program was arranged with a view to participation by representatives of the denomination, the educational work, the city of McMinnville and the campus, and it was pleasing to notice that no matter from what angle the work of Doctor Riley was considered he was unanimously recognized as one who, in spite of almost insurmountable difficulties and often opposition, had achieved nobly in the cause of Christian education and kingdom enterprises.

On Sunday evening, Apr. 4, Doctor

Brougher brought his great lecture, "Play Ball," to one of the largest audiences that the community can boast. Realizing his part in the career of President Riley, he was in fine spirits and his hearers gave him sustained attention for almost two hours, enjoying the parabolic characterization of the Christian worker in the language of the ballfield and applauding his eulogy of the president and his call to the support of the college.

An appreciated surprise was sprung by President Riley toward the close of the service when, in behalf of the trustees and faculty of Linfield college, he conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws upon Doctor Brougher. The recipient, as well as the large host of witnesses, was greatly pleased with this phase of the program, and Linfield is proud to count among its honorary alumni Dr. James Whitcomb Brougher who has just completed so unique a service to his denomination.

Monday morning was Independent Colleges day. This organization of the presidents of Oregon colleges was founded with the cooperation of Doctor Riley twenty years ago and it has functioned as an advisory body ever since. Its officers asked permission to have a share in the anniversary celebration, and Pres. Levi T. Pennington of Pacific college, Linfield's nearest neighbor, brought a message on the ideals and aims of a Christian college.

A Book of Tributes

At this service President Riley was presented with a morocco bound "Book of Tributes" containing more than 200 tributes from a large host of his friends and admirers from one end of this country to the other. Nor was Mrs. Riley's noble part in the president's success forgotten; in recognition of her silent but loyal devotion to the college, the faculty presented her with a silver table service.

At the noon hour the faculty and visitors had luncheon with the members of the chamber of commerce. This affair will long be remembered as indicative of the interest manifested by the citizens of McMinnville in the college which is in their midst. At this gathering Mr. Marshall N. Dana, editorial writer of the Oregon Journal and a cousin of President Riley, gave a well-balanced message on the trend of the present time; he emphasized in an earnest way the great value of a Christian institution like Linfield in helping meet the problems of the hour.

The celebration was brought to a fitting close by a program in charge of the students, who presented in the evening a pageant depicting the struggles and triumphs of the college during the past seventy years. Here again it was made concretely evident what has been wrought during the presidency of Leonard W. Riley, who took the helm at a time when the college was about to be closed and who has with patient persistence put it on a basis, both financial and scholastic, which assures its development into one of the best small Christian colleges in the land.

The Iowa Letter

By JAY A. LAPHAM

CHANGE is the law of life and some important changes are coming in the personnel of the faculty of Des Moines University. A few days ago Dean Loran D. Osborn resigned to take effect with the closing of the school year. Doctor Osborn has labored untiringly for six years past to give to the university the high rank in Iowa and elsewhere that it has justly earned. In a former period of service, as president of Des Moines College, he did a fine piece of work in leading in a large new college administration building. Today on the university campus at Highland Park in Des Moines over five times as many students are enrolled in the different colleges as were enrolled in 1912.

Apr. 17, 1926, Pres. J. W. Million submitted his resignation to the board of trustees. Doctor Million came to the university five years ago, while the New World Movement was in progress. He has been well received all over Iowa and has made many friends for the university. He has done much to give the institution the place that it now has in Iowa and the West. Early plans that he wanted to press were more or less held in check by the $1,000,000 drive in the denomination. The task assigned to him was herculean—enough for two men to wrestle with. In addition to money that has been raised for the endowment, and the current expenses of the school, a careful study of the resources of the denomination in the state that may be cultivated for the support of Christian education has been made, and plans have been adopted that will continue to help the university. Doctor Million will move to Kansas City, Mo., where he has invested interests in an industry. He will be long remembered in Iowa where he has made friends all over the state.

The Baptist Orphanage and Home for the Aged

Reference was made to this enterprise in our last letter. The interest in the project is increasing among the churches. The wide stretch from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean with not one Baptist institution of this kind, and the appeal of orphans and dependent little ones all about can but stir right-minded Baptists. We ought to have a definite part in caring for some of these neglected ones. Several adults have already inquired about entering the home. One well-to-do man is considering with Dr. J. F. Sanders about donating a farm near the city to the Baptist orphanage and home for the aged. Doctor Sanders is having encouragement from other sources over the states that the home will especially serve. Pastors are drawn to the enterprise as well worth the attention and support of our people, and they are ready to help in the establishment of the homes.

An interesting illustration of such a project is found in the home for the aged at Ironton, Mo. Thirteen years ago Dr. and Mrs. Milford Riggs started a home there in a rented house, without a dollar in the treasury. Today after so short a time the General Association of Missouri (that finally adopted the plant) can point to their home for the aged on a farm of 175 acres near Ironton, a "great building" 182x44 feet, three and three-fourths stories high, with an ell 30x30 feet and fine porches for the comfort of the old people. The booklet sent out by the home gives a picture of this "great building" as it is called, and many other fine illustrations of the plant. No other Baptist enterprise in Missouri in the last twelve years, it is claimed, has had such a growth as this home for the aged. Much credit is due to Mr. and Mrs. Riggs, Pastor L. W. Verts of Seymour tells me.

The board is having the publicity directors, Mr. and Mrs. Lapham, send out a circular to the churches with fine pictures of the buildings and full information about the orphanage and home for the aged.

Evangelistic Meetings

Tokens of God's favor among the churches are multiplying and good reports of conversions and baptisms are heard. At Estherville Pastor W. F. Huxford has enjoyed the help of Pastor W. A. Simmons of Waverly. Eighteen have been baptized and four have been received by letter. Mr. Huxford speaks highly of Mr. Simmons as an evangelist—Pastor H. O. Meyers of Calvary church Des Moines, stresses evangelism all the year, but adds a special meeting annually. The church has just closed a five weeks' meeting in which the pastor was assisted by Evangelist Frank Schuessler, and Mrs. and Mrs. Leslie Fisher as singers. The meeting was the strongest held in many years. The whole church was greatly revived and 115 professed conversions are reported. All-day prayer services were held for a time and the evangelist and the singers too went out for blocks around the meeting house and out in the city to do personal work. God has granted them an abundant blessing.—Keokuk reports twenty-four recent baptisms. Pastor H. R. McKee had given special attention to evangelism for some weeks past. A personal workers' committee does much earnest work.—A large tent has been erected at Chariton and eight denominations unite under the direction of Evangelist Harry O. Anderson in a meeting for four or five weeks. Brother Anderson did much excellent work in five meetings held in different parts of the city of Des Moines two years ago. He returned a few weeks ago from an extended trip in the Holy Land.—Pastor J. H. Perry of Farmington reports thirty-two baptisms, with five more awaiting the ordinance. Dr. Henry W. Stough of Wheaton Illinois, helped in the meetings. Five of those baptized are business men.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools

Director Victor N. Witter gives time to special training schools in preparation for this important work. He has sent letters to all of the churches to ascertain how many will give time and attention to a vacation Bible school the coming summer. At Hamburg, Pastor J. O. Staples has, with the cooperation of his church, made arrangements for such a school. These schools have been steadily increasing in Iowa for a number of years. With competent, trained leaders they are always a great blessing in the churches.

News from Maine

By E. C. WHITTEMORE

A REMARKABLE pastorate comes to its ending with the departure of Rev. Irad B. Hardy from Sanford, Me., to the First church in Waltham, Mass. Ten years ago the coming of the new pastor brought new interest, increased cooperation of the members and organizations of the church, and new vision of the extent and joyfulness of Christian service. The church has prospered all the while. The congregations have become among the largest and most significant in the state; the Sunday school enrolls 374. The World Wide Guild, under the guidance of Mrs. Hardy, has become a strong organization, the Boy Scouts among the most successful troops in the state, the White Cross workers compete hopefully for leadership in this world enterprise, and meanwhile the benevolences of the church have increased several fold, amounting to over $23,000 in the last five years. A forceful and persuasive preacher, Mr. Hardy has had such deep sympathy with the life of the community that the men about town have delighted in his friendship and have gladly followed him. Under his leadership, the church has enlarged its influ-

"THE BAPTIST" will have a booth at the Washington convention. The field editor will be there to greet old friends and to meet new ones. Hundreds of people renew their subscriptions at the conventions. New subscriptions will be taken also. Mr. Cress will be most happy to meet any who are interested in the paper and to talk over matters pertaining to circulation and the service which the editors are seeking to render to the denomination.

ence in the community, has served well the state, and stands in the front rank of missionary endeavor. There have been large additions to the membership of the church, the Christian Endeavor Society has been specially successful, and a remarkably large number of young men and women have been inspired to seek courses of higher education. Mrs. Hardy has a state-wide reputation because of the remarkable presentation by her of cantatas and pageants of unusual significance and difficulty. The deep regret of the Sanford church and parish at the departure of these loved Christian workers is shared by the whole state. Waltham is to be congratulated.

The church at Livermore Falls, Rev. C. Harry Atkinson, pastor, is one of the best of the village churches in Maine. Its congregation is large, including a large proportion of the business and professional men of the town, while its Sunday school is in need of additional room which the church is planning to supply. Eighteen persons were baptized on Easter Sunday; in all thirty have united with the church during the present pastorate, which began Dec. 14, 1924. Mr. Atkinson has had experience overseas. While in Newton he was associate pastor at Clarendon Street, Boston. Mrs. Atkinson, also, is a trained Christian worker, and before removal to Maine was assistant pastor in a Boston church. She has rendered important assistance in the musical department of the church work and in pageantry. The church mourns the death of Mrs. Isabelle Clary, or thirty-two years church organist. Her husband, Chester H. Sturtevant, with his family, who have been in Europe for a time, will be warmly welcomed on their return within a few days.

Rev. Walter B. Bullen, son of the greatly honored and beloved Dr. George B. Bullen, is fulfilling a very unusual ministry as the town minister of Lee. Lee Academy attracts students from the surrounding country and affords special opportunity for far-reaching Christian work. Recently two leading teachers of the academy have taken a decided position in Christian service and already six of the students have made the same decision. This is typical of the outreach of real Christian service in a rural community.

Obituary

Laura Hayward Warner was born in Springfield, O., May 11, 1851. United in marriage to Jay D. Warner in 1876, she engaged actively in the work of the First church, Zanesville, for ten years. Removing to Columbus in 1886, she and her husband, discovering the need of church privileges in North Columbus, called together in their home a small group of Baptists, having a vision of future possibilities, and there laid the foundation of the Tenth Avenue Baptist church. Removing to Sanitary in 1891, she took an active part in reviving that church and inaugurating a riding movement. Her health in 1901 occasioned a change of residence to Denver. Here again, in addition to other forms of service, she, her husband and son with a few others organized a mission which developed into the City Park Baptist church in Denver. At the time of her marriage she was state secretary of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society of Ohio. Her deep interest in all with whom she came in contact greatly endeared her to every one. She is survived by her husband and three sons.

Effa Myrtle Sherman, wife of Rev. S. A. Sherman, departed this life April 12, at Memorial Hospital, Piqua, Ohio. Her home going has left a vacant place in the hearts of husband and only son Durrelle Perry Sherman, of Detroit, Mich., which only God can fill. She also leaves one sister and two brothers. Mrs. Sherman was fifty-eight years of age. At the age of nineteen she was converted while a student at Granville, Ohio, through the gracious administration of Dr. Daniel Shepardon. She accompanied her husband in helpful services on many fields. Her ability in music was known to thousands of people where she and her husband so often in duet supplied a ministry of song. The last song was sung Mar. 7, 1926, at Kings Creek church, Ohio, entitled, "My Soul is Redeemed." Interment at Milford Center, Ohio. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Bertha Agnes Sharpes, daughter of the late Rev. A. N. Sharpes, was born in Lovington, Ill., Nov. 22, 1886. Baptized by her father, June, 1900, uniting with the Baptist church at Graymont, Ill. Lived with parents various places in Illinois. Removed with them to Appleton, N. Y., in 1920, where she died Mar. 29, after a long illness, during which she never uttered one repining word. She was an active worker in church and Sunday school, and greatly interested in missions. Her amiable sunny disposition endeared her to many friends.

She is survived by her mother, and one brother, Francis, of Trenton, N. J.

David P. Ward was born in Kane County, Ill., November 18, 1851, and entered into rest at Pasadena, Calif., April 14, 1926. He moved to Iowa in 1853 and spent two years at Cedar Valley Baptist Seminary, leaving there in 1872 to engage in the work of teaching for nine years. Then followed nine years of service for the American Sunday School Union as missionary in Dakota. In 1888 he became missionary for the American Baptist Publication Society and rendered an enthusiastic and faithful service in this relation until 1916. He served the society for nine years in South Dakota and nineteen years in California. He organized the Twin Lakes Baptist Assembly in 1898 and was its president for nine years. In 1906 he organized the Southern California Baptist Assembly and was its president and manager for eleven years. Brother Ward organized 200 Baptist Sunday schools in South Dakota and 100 such schools in California. Altogether he rendered more than thirty-eight years of missionary service in behalf of boys and girls. He retained his love and enthusiasm for them until the close of his fruitful life. At his funeral Dr. W. F. Harper spoke for the State Convention; Dr. Geo. L. White for the Publication Society; and Dr. B. B. Jacques and Rev. Herbert Handel for the Baptists of Pasadena. Dr. E. E. Meredith offered prayer. Rev. B. F. Fellman, his pastor, preached the funeral sermon.

Here, There and Everywhere

PASTOR JAMES WESLEY GRAVES of the Main Street church of Binghamton, N. Y., baptized about fifty persons during April. The church budget for the coming year is $11,329, of which $3000 is for benevolences.

THE CHURCH at Tekonsha, Mich., had fifteen decisions on a recent Sunday, ten accepted for baptism. This church baptizes in living water with appropriate out-of-doors exercises. Rev. Earle A. Clifford is the pastor.

REV. CHAS. E. GRIFFIN of Homestead, Pa., has accepted the call of the Fourth church, Minneapolis, Minn., and has entered upon his duties there. The church has a membership of about 800. Dr. W. E. Loucks, now in Chicago, was the able pastor of this church for over seventeen years.

ITEM FROM AN OLD newspaper, dated April 2, 1876: "It was announced that the Rev. A. Judson Barrett had accepted a call to the pulpit of the Lake Avenue church in Rochester, N. Y."

DURING THE SIX years that Rev. A. Watson Brown has been pastor of the Calvary church, Sacramento, Calif., 200 new members have been received.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Portland, Me., Rev. W. S. Jacobs, minister, is celebrating its 125th anniversary year.

PASTOR ARTHUR D. SMALLEY of Blair, Neb., is leading his people with a strong program of preaching, worship and service.

REV. W. E. BOWYER leaves the Warren Avenue church of Detroit, Mich., in its best condition in years. After eight years of service there are about 400 members, a good Sunday school, a budget of $12,000 annually and a parish visitor, Miss H. J. McHale.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Fulton Heights Community church of Medford, Mass., Rev. J. S. Franklin, minister, showed that sixty-seven had made public profession of faith during the year, twenty-seven baptisms, twenty-six accessions otherwise. The building committee reported $10,619 spent on the property and $1,159 on hand for further use.

REV. CHAS. P. COLLETT, pastor of the Emmanuel church of Batavia, N. Y., was called to this church in 1905 and served it seven years. He then entered the mission field. He returned and was called again and entered the second pastorate, Apr. 1, 1922. A new edifice is now to be built at a cost of not less than $62,000. It will be 94x80 feet and the auditorium will seat 250.

PASTOR JAMES F. GOODMAN of Imlay, Mich., had the assistance of Evangelists Pease and Nyburg and speaks highly of their service. Nine were baptized and the cause much strengthened.

MRS. JENNIE FRELEIGH EGERTON, wife of George Egerton of Twining, Mich., recently passed away. Funeral conducted by Rev. James F. Goodman of Imlay, assisted by Pastor A. A. Glenn of Twining. Besides the husband there are left two sons, Oswald of Jackson, Mich.; Bertram G. of Detroit. Also two daughters, Mrs. Florence Frary, wife of Rev. T. B. Frary of Lapeer, Mich., and Mrs. Della McClellan, wife of Rev. Ray McClellan of Highland, Kansas. Mrs. Egerton lived for some years at Upper Alton and was widely known in central and southern Illinois.

ITEM FROM CHURCH BULLETIN: "Our choir will be augmented by at least seventy-five voices from the — dry goods company of this city next Sunday evening." This is not the first time a choir has been augmented through drygoods.

REV. H. J. POWELL, formerly located at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and later of Santa Ana, Calif., is spending the summer in Michigan.

Boys conducted an annual boys' night program in the First church of Iliou, N. Y., Rev. Frank Anderson, pastor. The boys had their own orchestra, chorus and other features. Thirty-six persons were baptized in April.

PASTOR BRYANT WILSON of Sacramento, Calif., assisted the pastor at San Bernardino, Calif., in special meetings.

"THE PROBLEM of Pin Hole Parish" is a six reel picture used in the evening services at the Immanuel church, Salt Lake City, Utah, by Dr. G. W. Cassidy who had something to do in the original making of this feature film.

THE SOUTH CHURCH, Milwaukee, Wis., Rev. Geo. B. Davis, minister, received forty-six new members the past year, twenty-eight of whom were baptized. Eight of those baptized were heads of families.

THE DELAWARE STREET CHURCH of Syracuse, N. Y., was organized in 1899. It now has 967 members. There have been only three ministers, and the present pastor, Rev. Chas. F. Banning, began his work last June. All pastors have been graduates of Rochester seminary. At the last annual meeting four trustees and three deacons were elected. Of these officers four are under thirty-five years of age. The average attendance of the Sunday school for the past year was 476 and of the prayermeeting, 101. Total receipts for the year were $27,553 of which $10,877 was for missions.

ON THE ONGOLE FIELD in South India there are eight churches with 12,285 members. It is hard to administer the Lord's Supper to church members who may be scattered over a thousand square miles, and the need of solving this difficulty, together with a spiritual awakening, led fifty-seven congregations last year to secure licenses to administer it themselves. This Rev. J. M. Baker regards as a token of spiritual progress and he expects that the fifty-seven groups will soon become independent churches.

DR. CLARENCE A. BARBOUR of Rochester seminary spoke at the annual dinner of the First church of Adrian, Mich., Rev. M. Forest Ashbrook, minister, Apr. 22.

IN THE FIRST CHURCH, Santa Ana, Calif., Rev. O. S. Russell, pastor, nearly 350 persons enrolled for the school of missions. "Latin America" will be the main theme for study. A pageant will close the effort to visualize the needs of this area.

DELEGATES to the convention of the International Council of Religious Education held at Birmingham, Ala., from northern West Va., included Rev. Walter Dunlop, Rev. Eugene Neubauer, Dr. A. R. Withers and Dr. F. E. Brininstool.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Casper, Wyo., Rev. L. S. Bowerman, pastor, has received eighty-one since Oct. 1, forty by baptism. Prayer meetings average seventy-five. Owing to business conditions, removals are frequent. About 120 have been lost to the church in two years.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Joliet, Rev. R. S. Carman, minister, dedicated its new building on May. 2.

"THE VALLEY VISITOR," a monthly bulletin of the Valley church, Marietta, Ohio, on Apr. 15 carried the best advertisement for THE BAPTIST that has appeared for some time.

REV. E. O. SMITH of the Tabernacle church, Chillicothe, Ohio, completed five years of service, Apr. 11. During his ministry here, 200 have been added to the church, 115 by baptism. The church is sending Mr. and Mrs. Smith to the Washington convention.

MISS ELIZABETH WINAN STEDMAN, church secretary and pastor's assistant in the First church of Glens Falls, N. Y., Dr. P. H. McDowell, minister, died recently. Special memorial service was held on Apr. 11.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Bayonne, N. J. has given the pastor, Rev. C. H. Rannels, the fourth substantial increase in salary. Mr. Rannels began his eighth year with this church, Mar. 1.

THE BOULDER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS for the Rocky Mountain district of which Mrs. F. I. Smith is president, will hold its seventeenth annual session at Boulder, Colo.,

June 15-24. The approaching session offer children's department, girls' camp, young women's lodge, Bible exposition, classes in home and foreign missions and stewardship, discussion periods and addresses by missionaries. Dr. Agar will present stewardship, Mrs. Marion Humphreys will teach the foreign textbook dealing with the Moslem challenge. The home mission text on rural America will be taught by Rev. Paul Buchholz. Mrs. Lydia Lord Day will be present throughout the session and will have charge of the Bible study hour. Those planning to attend should write Mr. Edward C. Hensley, 1401 Race street, Denver, Colo.

REV. G. C. WALTERS of the church at Parsons, Pa., baptized four persons, Apr. 18. Personal evangelism is stressed in this church.

REV. THEO. WHITFIELD of Desloge, Mo. has been called by the church at Mt. Vernon, Ill.

DR. HENRY ALFORD PORTER of the Third Church, St. Louis, Mo., recently assisted the pastor of the First church of Vicksburg, Miss., in revival meetings. During Doctor Porter's absence the pulpit was supplied by President Wayman of William Jewell college.

THE JUDSON MEMORIAL CHURCH of Minneapolis, Minn., Rev. H. A. Vernon, pastor, held an "international night" service with Japan, China, Korea, Philippines, Ukraine, Italy, Armenia, Africa, England and France represented about the tables.

REV. G. A. SWORD, of Namkham, Burma reports that the past year was by far the best one in the history of the mission there. More than 200 families have been added to the list of Christian households. There are now thirteen schools in the district.

THE CHURCH at Petaluma, Calif., Rev. W. T. Scott, pastor, entertained 150 members from the Pacific association at a rally in Napa, Vallejo, Graton and Santa Rosa were represented. Dr. O. C. Johnson of Tacoma, Wash., was the principal speaker. Men of the Petaluma church served the banquet.

DR. JOHN SNAPE baptized twenty-six in the last meeting held in the old Euclid Avenue church in Cleveland, on Apr. 9. Six hundred persons, many of them guests from other churches, attended the first prayer meeting in the new edifice on Apr. 9. The old Euclid Avenue structure was in service fifty-one years.

THE SECOND CHURCH, Holyoke, Mass. Dr. J. C. Sycamore, minister, reports a gain of thirty-four members last year with $24,000 raised. Of this $9797 was for mission. Average attendance for twenty-two midweek services was 152. Four hundred attended together at the annual meeting. The pastor is in his twelfth year.

THE SPRING MEETING of the Pittsburg association for Bible-school work met in the Shady Avenue church, Rev. R. N. Jessup, pastor, Apr. 23.

THE EIGHTH AVENUE CHURCH of Terre Haute, Ind., dedicated a new edifice on Apr. 18. Dr. S. G. Huntington and Dr. C. M. Dinsmore were the principal speakers.

New Books

What After Death? by L. Franklin Gruber. Lutheran Literary Board: Burlington, Iowa. $2.

A reasonable and scriptural presentation of an important and interesting subject, in a lucid and entertaining manner. A careful reading of it will answer perplexing questions in the searchlight of the scriptures that cannot be refuted, such as: Does the soul sleep between death and the resurrection? Will there be an opportunity to be saved after death? Is there eternal punishment? Is there a place like purgatory? Will everybody be saved? A good book for a series of sermons. It should be put into the hands of believers to comfort them, and into the hands of the unsaved to warn them, and win them for Christ.

—JOSEPH CROFT DENT.

The Mystery Religions and Christianity, by S. Angus. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.50.

Popular scientific studies in the social, philosophical and religious backgrounds of Christianity have been lacking, but the lack is in the way of being supplied by fresh and scholarly studies. Professor Angus goes into the subject with wide research, accurate information, clear analysis and an easy, readable style. After a careful orientation of the subject he defines the mysteries, develops their appeal to the human mind, points out their defects and finally indicates what Christianity owes to them and why it triumphed over them. This study covers one branch in the investigation of the great generalization that the person of Jesus is the assembling center of all of the selected best in all of the ancient lines of spiritual and social evolution. Why do our preachers neglect such studies? He who gives to them a due attention strengthens his power to interpret, to appreciate and to vindicate the gospel.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

The Junior, by Ernest J. Chave, Ph.D. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. $1.25.

Professional workers with boys and girls, parents and all lovers of juniors, nine to eleven years, will welcome this handbook as one of the new and significant aids in understanding the social control of their life-situations. Its conclusions are based on a detailed study of the actual life-situations of a specific group of 650 children. These are presented in a series of living pictures, as fascinating as those in a movie or a novel. In five short chapters, each of which may be read in a half hour, the author reveals the factors in their life situations—such as time distribution, physical development, reading, games, sights and sounds in the home, church, public school and community; presents the problems of adjustment, examples of problem-solving and definite conclusions of greatest value for the religious education of the junior. In appendixes he includes the questionnaires he uses with suggestions as to how these may be used with other groups.

—WILLIAM J. SLY.

Between Black and White, by Henry Hugh Proctor. Chicago: Pilgrim Press. $1.50.

It is no longer necessary in introducing any achievement of a negro to make his color a matter of remark, because talented negroes have become so common as to be commonplace. But in this instance color is the very theme of the book, which is the author's own autobiography. Doctor Proctor's rise from a poor boy in a Tennessee cabin to the pastorate of a great church in Brooklyn has immersed him for more than half a century in the experience of his race in its struggle towards the sun and in its trying contacts with the white race. The whole comes to life anew in this book, but freed of all of its bitterness and nearly all of its pain it is made radiant throughout with Christian faith and love and hope. The last eloquent sentence is worth quoting here: "I see the rainbow of hope like a silken scarf spanning the shoulder of the dying storm of racial hate, blending into one every color under the sun—one race, the human; one language, the English; one religion, the Christian."

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

The Life of Alexander Whyte, D. D., by G. F. Barbour. New York: Doran.

Every minister should read this book. It is stiff and stern but stirring, like the solemn old Covenanter of whom it speaks. To be permitted thus to live intimately, a little while with one so great and good as Alexander Whyte is an enriching experience. For over twenty years his evening sermons were published in the British Weekly. His books brought expressions of gratitude from all quarters, Protestants of every name of course but also from the Orthodox Church of Russia, the Vatican, and the leader of the Persian Bahai movement. This was possible because of his scholarship and especially his catholicity of outlook. To the end, he was rigidly orthodox and held his own conservative views with an intensity of belief but he put supreme emphasis upon love. "Rather let error live than love die". He had no confidence in force as a remedy, not even the force of brain or logic. Although he never adopted liberal views, he stood for liberty in the church. For forty years his counsel never varied: "Let those in the church, always the great majority, who have not the talent or the opportunity for exact scholarship, trust those who are carrying on, earnestly and believingly, some of the church's selected and most delicate work." He warned against the attempt to "graft the sword upon the crook". From his boyhood in "Thrums", he devoured books. When he spoke on Dante, the Edinburgh book store sold 150 copies the next morning. He urged young men to sell their beds and buy books. I advise you to invest in this one.

—ROBERT GORDON.

Outlooks on God, by Wilbert C. Blakeman. New York: Abingdon Press. $1.

Comparing the soul to a house of many windows through which God may be seen, the author presents fifty-three inspiring views of God which he has selected from more than one thousand many told in not more than 500 words. Through the small windows presented here one beholds the tenderness, compassion, forbearance and love of the Heavenly Father with his plans for redeemed man.

—F. H. FAHRINGER.

Paul of Tarsus, by T. R. Glover. New York: Doran. $2 net.

With keen historical perception Doctor Glover has gathered all that is known of Paul's life, and, winnowing truth from tradition, has given us a volume of amazing erudition and unusual spiritual insight. The traditional usage has been to magnify Paul's Hebrew elements of origin, training and work. Here the Hebrew is no less but there is added a study of the Hellenic qualities which place Paul among the greatest of the Greek writers of antiquity. Only Homer and Plato among the Greeks whose writings are widely read today can be ranked with Paul. Paul was bilingual and as a Semite thought and wrote in Greek. Yet he never forgets Jerusalem and Canaan. Paul will speak a new message to every reader who

FROM "PLAYTIME," PUBLISHED BY DORAN

Station WCOY

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"Greetings to our friends in every land. WCOY has fine range. This message is being picked up in the jungles along the Congo. In the far reaches of West China and the Philippines, it is heard. Japan, India and Europe all report getting our programs clearly.

"A lady subscriber wrote in the other day saying, 'It would be interesting to know how many years I have taken "The Standard" and THE BAPTIST. I cannot see how Baptists can get along without their denominational paper.' Since she signed her name 'Miss,' we are not going to ask how many years she has read the paper. But we know she is a real 'quality lady' because she takes THE BAPTIST and 'Missions' and enclosed $3 to renew them both for another year.

"And then comes Ida May Dennison of Denver, Colo., saying 'I notice in the Jan. 9 issue of THE BAPTIST that some one claims to have subscribed for "The Standard" since its first number. I can go farther back than that. My father, Rev. Armstrong Stuart Dennison, one of the pioneer Baptist ministers of Illinois, was one of the first subscribers for "The Christian Times," the predecessor of "The Standard." His family has literally been "brought up" on "The Christian Times," "The Standard," and THE BAPTIST. Pretty well educated in Baptist principles and polity, wouldn't you think? Yes, indeed. Another 'quality lady,' for certain. And we will be glad to hear from others who have such records.

"The other day another 'quality lady' of Seattle, Wash., wrote us saying, 'My subscription to THE BAPTIST has expired. The reason why I have not renewed is simple—I was scalded so badly that I have been laid up five weeks. Then I indulged in a light attack of pneumonia, hence my days of labor have not been many these last few months. But I will soon be at work again and then I will mail you my check for THE BAPTIST for I feel that it is one of the needful things in my life.'

"And here is one of God's 'quality men' acting as chaplain in a great state prison. He writes, 'Herewith you will find list, as per your request, of fifty-one Baptists in our prison. These Baptist men have an organization of their own in the prison. They are doing real work. The copies of THE BAPTIST that you are sending these men are doing the work you are so anxious to see done. I want to thank you for your help in this prison. I hope to have time soon to send you a letter of gratitude for the work you are doing here. At this time we have 3273 inmates of which sixty-five are women.' We need funds to continue sending the paper into this institution. There are several hundred names on our waiting list of men carefully selected by the chaplains who ought to receive THE BAPTIST. If you cannot send a check will you not put this matter on your prayer calendar. Help us to minister to this class through the printed page of our denominational paper.

"Here is another 'quality lady' with a record hard to equal. We doubt if there are a dozen persons in the Northern Baptist Convention who can match the following from Miss Adelaide V. Rutherford, of Girard, Macoupin county, Illinois: 'I am filing both THE BAPTIST and "Missions." Do not wish to miss a single copy of either. Have taken "The Standard," now THE BAPTIST, since 1882, and must be one of your oldest subscribers. And so far I believe I have an unbroken record since 1882. Enclosed find check for $3 for the paper and "Missions." This pays for one year. Thank you for waiting a little and continue to send the paper until I send you word to stop.' We surely will do just as this good lady directs us. Our friends all over the world will rejoice in this wonderful record of achievement. Subscription and preservation combined. Hearty congratulations, Miss Rutherford.

"The office boy says that out in California the other day a pulpit committee recommended to the church that they do not extend a call to a certain candidate for their pulpit, because he was bald. Some objected to the report saying they had not noticed that the brother's hair was unduly scant. To this the committee replied that 'this brother's baldness was on the inside of his head. He was not called. Moral: read THE BAPTIST. Trial subscription: Six Months for $1. Regular price, $2.50 per year. With 'Missions,' $3. Club rates, $2 per year.

"WCOY now signs off. Meet us in Washington, D. C., May 25-30."

It takes time to digest the great chapters of this fascinating study of Christ's great and slave.

—G. CLIFFORD CRESS.

Paul's Life of Christ, by Gwilym O. Griffith. New York: Doran. $2 net.

In the propaganda literature that has come down to our times in the form of the New Testament there are four pamphlets that we are accustomed to call "the four Gospels." But Paul spoke of "my gospel," and insisted that he did not get it from men. That is, the historic as well as the spiritual Christ had registered in the mind of Paul in a manner peculiar to himself and not identical with the representations given in "the four Gospels." Paul conceived of Christ as having lived, died and risen to everlasting life, and first or last in his writings he sketches the features of his Christ in such a way as to supply material for a respectable biography of Jesus from eternity to eternity as Paul saw him. To discover, distribute and interpret this material is no small task, but Mr. Griffith has undertaken it and the result is impressive. Here is a gold mine for the preacher whose sermon currency is running low.

The Gift of God and Other Sermons, by Rev. W. A. Cameron. New York: Doran. $2.

In reading these sermons printed as they were delivered last year in the Bloor Street Baptist church of Toronto, one can readily see why the author as preacher and lecturer has met with such enthusiastic receptions everywhere. Since he is convinced that a sermon is an appeal and not a literary essay, no attempt has been made to elaborate the literary style. The brilliant illustrations and the scintillating quotations give life, color, and point to these sermons which are so full of prophetic vision, human sympathy, and evangelical loyalty.

—F. H. FAHRINGER.

When Jesus Was a Carpenter, by Muriel Clark. New York: Abingdon Press. 75 cents.

It is only a fanciful, idealized Jesus we see, but the author has woven the spirit and ideals of Jesus into a simple story depicting the young carpenter as the great friend, especially of the children who visit him in his shop or meet him when out walking. Each of the short thirteen chapters illustrates in story form some teaching of Jesus on friendship and love. This is a good story for children, and especially for girls.

Things That Have Interested Me, by Arnold Bennett. New York: Doran. $2.50.

The works of Arnold Bennett cover a wide range of subjects. He seems as much at ease in writing an essay on insomnia as character sketching, Shakespeare or narrating about the stage. This book is a group of essays sparkling with human interest and charming in its portrayal of the deep realities found in the commonplace experiences of life. We all need to read such books as this to help us appreciate how great is the wealth and beauty of those things that lie near at hand and those experiences of every-day life that seem merely mechanical but which are often filled with romance.

The Guests of God, by George Jackson. New York: Doran. $1.25.

One of the series of "Little Books on the Christian Life." There are fifteen themes and meditations each complete in itself; on various phases of the communion service. These meditations are most suitable for young Christians who desire to know the meaning and value of the Lord's Supper. Rich in poetic thought and scripture quotations it should be of value to any minister of Christ as he prepares his heart and mind for the table of his Lord.

proved cotton and corn seed into fifteen provinces. Forty bushels of improved corn seed were distributed in this way. The exhibits at the conference included all kinds of material available for country leaders, including preachers and teachers. This college, in the work of which Baptists cooperate, has more orders for the products of its nursery and for its seeds than it can fill.

THE WHITE TEMPLE CHURCH, Mitchell, S. D., Rev. Norris McCann, pastor, prints a bulletin called the Templar. Recent issues show unusual activities over Easter, the closing of the year and in beautifying the church and parsonage grounds.

PROF. HOWARD K. LLOYD of the Ottawa University is in southern Louisiana collecting information about snakes. He expects to bring back a number of specimens for the museum.

650 WERE PRESENT in the Sunday school at Anderson, Ind., on Easter morning. In the evening the pastor, Rev. S. W. Powell, preached for the Knights Templar.

MRS. A. T. ROBINSON, wife of Dr. Robinson, tithing evangelist, died at St. Louis, Mo., Apr. 13. Mrs. Robinson was born in Melbourne, Australia. She was interested in many reforms and had spoken and labored in all the larger cities of the world. She married Doctor Robinson in the First church of Vancouver, B. C., in March, 1909. Pastor F. A. Lowry of the Tower Grove church of St. Louis conducted the funeral. Interment was at Los Angeles, Calif.

PASTOR WILEY R. DEAL of the First church, Doylestown, Pa., has conducted evangelistic services for his own church, First church, Chester; First church, Glenside; and Nicetown church, Philadelphia, all in Pennsylvania.

EIGHTY MEN ATTENDED the annual banquet of the Geil Memorial men's class of the First church, Doylestown, Pa., Rev. F. R. McArthur, pastor of the First church, Bethlehem, Pa., was the speaker.

MRS. ROBERT J. BURDETTE was a speaker at a recent convention in San Francisco, Calif., of the California women's committee of five thousand for law enforcement.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Geneva, Ohio, Rev. Theo. G. Erler, pastor, has dedicated a reconstructed and an enlarged plant. The main unit of the educational plant is 107 feet long and two stories high. The ladies parlor was completely furnished as a memorial to the late Mrs. C. S. Chamberlin by Mr. Chamberlin and daughters. It is one of the finest in Ohio. There is a new baptistry, rebuilt organ, and auditorium redecorated. $5000 was raised on April 11. About $6000 yet remains unpledged. Dr. T. F. Chambers preached the dedication sermon. Dr. C. W. Kemper of Charleston, W. Va., was a week-night speaker.

ON APRIL 15 THE board of managers of the Arizona State Convention unanimously invited Francis W. Starring, pastor of the Beth Eden church, Denver, Colorado, to become executive secretary. Mr. Starring was greatly impressed with the state's spectacular growth and it is believed that he will accept the position.

THE BASKETBALL TEAM of the First church, Waterloo, Iowa, won the city-wide league trophy for the past season. The victory was recognized by the whole church and a Sunday morning service was dedicated to the young people. The pastor, Rev. R. E. Williamson, preached an appropriate sermon.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH of Rochester, N. Y., recently secured an insurance policy of ample amount for its pastor, Rev. Clinton Wunder, protecting him and his family against accident, sickness and death.

PASTOR J. H. HUGHES of the Temple church, Chicago, baptized thirty on two recent Sundays.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Metuchen, N. J., Rev. C. A. Hare, minister, has had an increase of 19 per cent in the membership

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for May 16

ABRAM AND THE STRANGERS
Lesson Text: Gen. 18:1-8, 16-18. Golden Text: Gen. 18:18

The vehicle and the truth which it carries must always be distinguished in reading the Bible. The truth is carried in all forms of literature in the Bible. Fable, riddle, parable, poetry, history, legend, are all made to do service in the interest of the truth. This lesson is highly anthropomorphic. Three men represent Jehovah. They speak for him and yet they are so human as to dine with Abram. Temporary incarnations of God some have called this incident. Perhaps it is better to leave the story just where the Bible leaves it and find in these three messengers men who act and speak for Jehovah.

The Speaking God

The Bible from Genesis to Revelation is clear on this one great fundamental truth that Jehovah is a speaking God. He reveals himself. He communicates with men of faith and vision. In every way he seeks to express himself so that man will understand him. By creation, by judgment, by providence, by history, by revelation and by human experience God is forever speaking to men. But all men do not hear. Only the Abrams seem to catch the message and hear the voice of God through the various means which God employs to reveal his presence and purpose in the world. Men sunk in materialism receive no message from Jehovah. The word of God is heard and heeded only by the man of faith. This is beautifully illustrated in the lesson of Abram and the three strangers. The two communications which the strangers brought were received by Abram without question. Sarah might laugh a bit at the first communication, but to Abram it was evidently the revelation of a truth which he accepted by faith when it seemed to contradict both reason and nature. The speaking God found in Abram a responsive soul.

The Supplicating Man.

Abram is at his best interceding for Sodom. There was really no good reason for sparing Sodom from destruction except it be the reason which Abram made the basis of his prayer; viz., not to destroy the righteous with the wicked. And such is the mercy and justice of God that he heard the prayer of Abram and granted his requests until he stopped interceding on the last decimal point. One wonders what might have been the result of the intercession had Abram refused to stop at the ten righteous persons. Prayer reaches its highest altitudes when it passes from personal petition to altruistic intercession. It is difficult to reconcile an orderly universe governed by law with the prayer of intercession which calls upon God to change his mind. But may there not be a law of intercession just as there is a law of gravitation?

during the past year which was the seventh of the present pastorate. A new heating plant has been installed, $600 paid on a parsonage and the missionary budget raised in full.

DR. J. W. WEDDELL has concluded his work as stated supply at Clarksburg, West Va., and has returned to his home in Chicago.

THE MEN'S LEAGUE of the Creston Avenue church of New York City debated the question: "Resolved that the times past, commonly known as 'The Good Olde Days,' were more conducive to happiness and welfare than the present."

THE LEWIS CLASS of the church at Galesburg, Ill., Rev. C. A. Carmen, minister, announces that it will give a complimentary banquet to the mothers and daughters of the congregation during the week following Mothers' day—"men cooks, men waiters, men managers, and men everything is the lineup for a classy banquet."

THE SECOND CHURCH, Lincoln, Neb., Rev. Henry G. Smith, pastor, received twenty-eight on Easter, twenty-three by baptism. The church voted to pay its missionary quota monthly for the coming year and instructed its officers to borrow if necessary to make regular monthly remittances on state headquarters. Pastor Smith is in his sixth year.

THE MEXICAN DEPARTMENT of the South Chicago church has from fifty to seventy-five in the Sunday school. There are twenty men in the Bible class and sixteen Mexicans are members of the church.

THE CLEVELAND, Ohio, association has thirty-four churches with 13,000 members. In 1931 the association will celebrate its centennial. Secy. D. R. Sharpe has outlined the program for the next five years.

THE EUCLID AVENUE CHURCH of Cleveland, Ohio, Dr. John Snape, minister, was obliged to vacate the old building before its new temple is completed. Services are held for April and May in two downtown theaters. The attendance is very large.

THE TRINITY CHURCH, Cleveland, Ohio, Rev. G. C. Cole, pastor, has received eighty-five new members during the first seven months of the present pastorate, twenty-eight of these by baptism. The prayer meetings overflow the usual room.

REV. W. H. HOCKMAN for twenty-five years a missionary in China supplied the pulpit of the First church, Marion, Ind., on Sunday morning, April 11 and Prof. Barton Rees Pogue of Taylor University, spoke in the evening. This church, under the leadership of pastor D. L. Woodward, has exceeded its quota for missions.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Agawam, Mass., has spent $14,000 in enlarging and furnishing its plant. There are additional classrooms, assembly hall, gymnasium and social rooms. Rev. Daniel Thompson is the pastor.

DR. TILMAN HOBSON and Prof. B. P. Stout have joined forces for evangelistic work. They have just conducted a union meeting in Long Beach, Calif., with four churches cooperating. They may be addressed at 1297 E. Orange Grove Avenue, Pasadena, Calif.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Clarion, Pa., Rev. Wayland Zwyer, pastor, has celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. Four of the seven living charter members were present. The communion service was the largest ever held in this church.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Waukegan, Ill., Rev. W. D. Whan, pastor, had an Easter offering of $230 by the young people. Sixty-two new members came into the church over Easter, thirty-five by baptism.

MRS. C. L. DAKIN of Oswego, N. Y., has complete files in perfect condition of Tidings for 1900-1911, of Helping Hand for 1900-1914, and of Missions for 1910-1918, which she would be glad to place in the custody of some institution that will make proper and permanent use of them. They are tied together in the order of the files, but not bound. She has also a flat-iron made to be used with the Delco lighting system which she will give to some missionary. Persons interested may address her at 156 East Third street, Oswego, N. Y.

DR. TERROT REAVELEY GLOVER, of Cambridge, England, gave a series of addresses at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago during March and early April, on "The Influence of Jesus Christ on the Graeco-Roman World."

THE PREACHER for the five Sundays of May at the Park Avenue church of New York City is Rev. Ambrose W. Vernon of Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.

The Saving Sense

"There is not another boy in this town as clever as my Charles!"

"Go on; how is that?"

"Well, look at those two chairs. My Charles made them all out of his own head, and he has enough wood left to make an armchair!"—Good Hardware.

"You a Scotchman and don't play golf?"

"Na, na! I used to play but gave it up twenty years ago."

"But why?"

"I lost my ball."—Capper's Weekly.

An elderly woman was boasting of her retentive memory. "My memory is excellent," she said. "There are only three things I can't remember. I can't remember names, and I can't remember faces, and—and I forget what the third thing is."—The Continent.

A colored man was whitewashing a fence. A passerby watched him awhile and asked:

"Sam, why don't you get a brush with more bristles in it?"

"Wha' fer?" replied the aged and contented worker.

"Why—if you had a good brush you could do twice as much work."

"Yeh, but Ah ain't got twice as much work to do!"—Wall Street Journal.

Uncle: "What became of that kitten you had?"

Niece: (In surprise). "Why, don't you know?"

"I haven't heard a word; was she poisoned?"

"No'm."

"Drowned?"

"No'm."

"Stolen?"

"No'm."

"Hurt in any way?"

"No'm. She growed into a cat."

Emil Fuchs, the artist, tells of a physician, a professor in a medical college, who was raised by Queen Victoria to the rank of physician in ordinary to the queen. The man was exceedingly vain, and anxious that every one should know of the event, so when he next entered the lecture room of the college he took a piece of chalk and under his name on the board wrote his new title. After the lecture, as he was leaving, he turned at the door for a last proud look and saw that some one had added: "God save the Queen."—Christian Register.

To no D.D. do I pretend,
Though Doctor doth some honor lend,
Preacher, Pastor, Rector, Friend,
Titles, almost without end,
Never grate and ne'er offend;
A loving ear to all I bend.
But how the man my heart doth rend
Who blithely calls me reverend!

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Five mothers of soldiers who served in the Union army in the Civil war are still on the pension rolls of the government. They range in age from 92 to 102.

The constitution of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics expressly reserves to the constituent republics severally the right of secession. But Georgia finds in trying to act upon that right that it yields to a doctrine of public necessity at Moscow. She tries again and again to get out of the union, but soviet troops persuade her at the point of the bayonet that she will promote her peace and happiness by forgetting her dreams of independence.

Interesting plans are being developed for two gatherings of graduates of the B. M. T. S. of Chicago who may be in attendance at the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention. The annual business meeting and breakfast for alumnae only, will be held Thursday morning, May 27, at half-past seven. The banquet will be held Friday evening, May 28, at six o'clock. Both reunions will take place at the Blue Triangle Hut of the Y. W. C. A. 20th and B streets, N. W. The tickets will be on sale in the lobby of the convention auditorium until six o'clock Wednesday evening, May 26. All graduates of the school in Washington at this time are earnestly urged to be present.

In the agitation over prohibition, Dr. Henry Van Dyke was quoted in a prominent paper as saying that the dry laws are "demoralizing," and as having urged that "the farce be stopped by modification." He denounces the report as a falsehood and he would like for his friends to understand his actual position. He thinks that the Volstead act ought either "to be enforced or changed." He further says: "That the present state of things is deplorable seems to me a self-evident truth. The trouble is that both the proponents and the opponents of the present law appear to be indifferent to the actual condition of affairs. They content themselves with howling at each other. This would be funny if it were not so sad. Crime increases. Confusion prevails. How long must it be endured? Sober, temperate, thoughtful people, good Christians and faithful Jews, are distressed and alarmed. They earnestly desire a better state of things. I think the Bible (Old and New Testaments) should help us to find it." But some of his friends—and who is not his friend?—will question whether his correction contributes much towards either the clarifying or the solution of the problem.

Joseph Cook is quoted in the Continent as saying that "no man has a right to tell another man anything to do to be saved which the man could die doing without being saved." Like many of the sayings of Joseph Cook, this one requires some hard thinking in order to get the heart and range of its meaning, but when once you see it you will never escape from its implications.

Representative Christian scholars in Great Britain continue to state in the British Weekly and in weekly succession their estimates of Doctor Machen's new book, "What Is Faith?" Their reviews are marked by the balance which characterizes typical religious thought among British scholars. It is interesting to note a general agreement among them to the effect that Doctor Machen is insisting upon the central values of Christian faith, but that he presents it in terms of an "unnecessary antagonism to modern religious thought."

The Baptist Times notes in England a marked growth in the spiritist movement, and comments thereon in these words: "Side by side with the churches in the towns and even in the villages there are growing up spiritualist assemblies, numbering in all hundreds of thousands of members. There is no reason to doubt their sincerity. It is indeed obvious that, as they affirm, they find in the spiritualist creed something which they do not find in the ministrations of the orthodox churches." Why is the pulpit so strangely reticent about the spirit world? Our fathers found great delight in singing about heaven. The Bible says a great deal concerning the spirit life, and people with aching hearts long to know. But when did we last hear a sermon upon the subject?"

A small group of students in Rochester university, like the brummagem bear and the kangaroo, which for want of something better to do, put out to sea in a soup tureen to see what had never before been seen, organized an atheistic society; whereupon there is great agitation over the decline of faith among young people. The fact recorded in THE BAPTIST a good while ago that the general student body has publicly and definitely condemned the organization, seems to have escaped the attention of a number of religious editors. But the Biblical Recorder offers a suggestion worthy of study. It says: "One of our greatest dangers now is that by continuing the agitation about doctrinal statements we shall drive thousands of our young people to institutions sufficiently 'broad' to permit, if not encourage, such clubs as the one about which we are writing."

It is announced that Dr. W. B. R. will tour the foreign missions fields in the interest of the Bible Union. A special fund has been placed at his disposal for this purpose.

Berkeley Baptist Divinity School announces that the resources of the corporation now make it possible to offer scholarship aid to regular students in the Baptist ministry. The amount of this aid will depend upon several factors, viz., actual need, amount of previous preparation, grade of scholarship maintained and regular activity in some kind of religious work. The amounts of the annual scholarships will vary from $100 to $240.

A luminous comment on American politics as related to the enforcement of law occurred in the court of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson of Chicago. Having sentenced some underlings for violations of the liquor law, he said: "District Attorney Daniel Anderson: 'See here, Mr. District Attorney, the owners of the places are the real offenders. These men were hired to do what they did and are entitled to immunity if they testify against the principals.'" Mr. Anderson replied that many of the offenders took their sentences rather than tell about their bosses, fearing death if they talked under present conditions in Cook county. To this the judge replied: "That is a peculiar state of affairs and a strange statement for a district attorney to make in the United States of America in the year 1926."

Dr. J. Heinrichs calls attention to an error on page 386 of THE BAPTIST regarding the division on caste lines in the Telugu country. It is correct, he says, that American Baptists have hitherto been reaching the Madigas mainly and the Lutherans the Malas. But these classes belong to the non-caste population and are therefore below, rather than above, the Sudras. The latter is the lowest and most populous of the four recognized castes. These castes are the Brahmins or sacerdotal, the Kshatriyas or military, the Vaishyas or mercantile, and the Sudras or agricultural caste. About one fifth of India's population belongs to the non-caste classes, so often erroneously called castes. Reports indicate that the gospel is gaining increasingly great victories among the Sudras and is gradually working its way upward. The latest news from the Lo Star mission is that last year 7125 were added to our churches by baptism—the largest number in a single year since the great ingathering in 1878, and that the number of caste converts is growing year by year.

An ultimate alliance, a merger organization which will draw to itself all ecclesiastical and doctrinal liberals from many denominations, is the outcome which the Word and Way visualizes for the present religious controversy, and it says: "Let it come. The sooner the better." The same invocation is applicable to any group of Baptists who may have become dissatisfied with the historic principles and program of the Baptist movement.

Kip'tchi-mak'-wa, an Indian legend, will be portrayed in pageant by almost three hundred women students of Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, on Saturday, May 22. The purpose of the presentation is to raise funds for a much needed women's gymnasium building at Carleton. It is an annual event, known as the May Fete, and given on the George Huntington Lyman Memorial grounds on the campus. The music is arranged by members of the music faculty, and the college band will play the accompaniments, when tom-toms are not in use. Thousands of spectators from all over Minnesota visit the Carleton College May Fete every year.

The congressional hearings on prohibition are over. The net showing is distinctly favorable to the continuance of the Volstead law. In fact an immediate result was the introduction of bills to strengthen that law and to make its enforcement more effective. Particularly, it has become clear that if the prohibition law or any other law is to be enforced faithfully, the enforcement agencies must be taken out of party politics. Even the Chicago Tribune, emboldened by the recent murder of Officer McSwiggin, says in the issue of Apr. 30: "It is a huge charge to lay against law enforcing officials, to say that none of them is capable of rendering a decision in this murder case which will receive the full confidence of the people of Chicago. But we believe that condition prevails. We believe no one, no matter how optimistic and trusting he may be, can doubt longer that there is a workable connection between politics and crime."

Eastern Pennsylvania colleges will be represented by Bucknell University at the sectional elimination contest for the National Intercollegiate oratorical championship to be held at Washington, D. C., on June 1. Representing Bucknell will be T. M. L. Drum, a member of the senior class. Drum is the son of Professor and Mrs. M. L. Drum of the Bucknell faculty, who resides in Lewisburg. The Bucknell representative was selected to represent the Pennsylvania district at a contest held recently at Bucknell, in which representatives from Muhlenburg, Penn State, Gettysburg, Temple, Marywood Women's College, Juniata, and Bucknell participated. Walter Heist of Juniata was awarded second place in the contest. The winner of the Washington contest will be awarded a prize of three hundred dollars and the right to participate for a three-thousand dollar prize and the national intercollegiate oratorical championship at Los Angeles, Cal.

From Ceylon is reported the death of Rev. S. R. Perera, a Baptist minister who wrought in the English mission thirty-six years at various places including Kadugannawa, Balangoda, Gampola, Colombo, Katugastota, Ratnapura and Matale. He was born a Roman Catholic and was intimately acquainted with both Romanism and Buddhism.

There is time yet to attend to one thing that in some churches may have been overlooked. It is the matter of providing for delegates to represent the church in the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington. In many a church the best immediate investment for the strengthening of the local work would be to send the pastor to the convention, with his expenses paid. Look into it.

General Brusiloff was one of the most brilliant commanders in the world war. He led a Russian army, ill-equipped as it was by the incompetent czarist government, to some of its most splendid victories. When the revolution came, instead of joining the emigrant czarists, he and his wife remained with the Russian people and shared their lot in poverty and suffering. A few days ago he died in Moscow at the age of seventy, leaving a stainless and honored name.

The peoples of Europe seem to be making progress in their difficult task of reaching a good understanding and co-operation. The League of Nations was a step in the right direction. Then came Locarno. Now it is reported that an agreement has been reached between Germany and Russia and including the border states which is in effect a common security pact. The road is a long one. It will not end until one can travel from Gibraltar to Vladivostok without a visa and without crossing a tariff boundary. But Europe is on the road and America wishes her a prosperous journey.

Church property is nationalized in Mexico. Its use is granted to congregations for religious purposes. As a protest against the policy of the government in prohibiting the activities of foreign ecclesiastics, some of the Catholic churches have suspended services, whereupon the government notifies them that unless services are resumed the buildings will revert to the state.

Now it is told. The mystery of the reason for the continuance of war in the Riff country has come to the surface in the news. There is abundant mineral wealth in the Riff territory awaiting development, and "with the peace negotiations between the Franco-Spanish allies and the rebel Riffian tribesmen still uncompleted, the first rush of pioneers bent on developing the natural resources of the Riff as soon as peace is established already has reached Oujda."

Julius Rosenwald, Chicago philanthropist, has donated $30,000 to be used by Prof. James H. Breasted in digging up and translating the inscriptions on the tombs of the Pharaohs of Egypt, it was announced by the board of trustees of the University of Chicago. Professor Breasted has been negotiating with the Egyptian government for the establishment at Cairo of a museum for which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has offered $10,000,000.—The American Israelite.

The biennial meeting of the Christian colleges in China was held on the Shanghai college campus for five days during the Chinese New Year time. It was a fine meeting with about 180 in attendance; there were numbers of outstanding Chinese who are engaged in the work of higher education, as well as foreigners. Shanghai college has more freshmen than any other Christian college in China and has never been in a better position in regard to its student body and its relation to the Chinese than it is today. There are 376 full college students.

A notable jubilee is announced in the Christian World of London. On Sunday, July 4, the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence, the jubilee of Christ church, Westminster-bridge-road, S.E., will be celebrated. American interest in the church (which carries on the memory of the old Surrey chapel and Rev. Rowland Hill) has always been great, owing to the advocacy of the cause of the North by Dr. Newman Hall. A sum of £7000 towards the cost of the Lincoln tower was received from the United States. There will be special services during the jubilee celebrations in which Dr. W. C. Poole, himself an American citizen, and Dr. F. B. Meyer, as minister emeritus, will take part. At the public meetings which are being arranged at Christ church and the old Surrey chapel, now the "Ring," Blackfriars-road, on the following days, speakers, it is expected, may include the American Ambassador, Sir John Simon, M. P., Captain Wedgwood Benn, M.P., Dr. Sidney Berry, Dr. John McNeill, Dr. Dinsdale T. Young, and Dr. F. E. Clark.

FOR ANNOUNCEMENTS APPLY TO DEAN SHAILER MATHEWS, THE DIVINITY SCHOOL,

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Of sufficient value for special mention is a little book written by Rev. James S. Kirtley and brought out by the American Baptist Publication Society under the title, "The Baptist Distinctive and Objective." Pastors who wish to attempt something in the way of grounding their people in Baptist principle will find it worth investigation.

Commencement of Crozer Theological seminary has been changed in order to enable alumni to attend on their way to the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention in Washington, May 25-31. The date will therefore be set back to May 23-25; the alumni banquet will take place on Monday evening, May 24, and the commencement exercises proper will close at an hour quite early enough to enable delegates to the convention to reach Washington in time for the evening session.

Mar. 20-26 Dr. Bruce Kinney delivered a series of evangelistic addresses before the entire student body of Haskell, the union meeting being sponsored by the various religious organizations in the school. On Tuesday evening of the following week a meeting for Baptist students was held by Rev. Chas. W. Thomas, Baptist director of religious education at Haskell and the University of Kansas. At that time several students signified their desire for baptism and on the Sunday following twelve were baptized by Rev. J. F. Watts, pastor at Lawrence, Kan. Other baptisms are anticipated. Students of other church affiliations also were converted as one result of the Kinney meetings.

Il Testimonio, Baptist paper published in Italy, contains the announcement of the death of Antonio Fiori, a leading Italian Baptist minister, and the announcement is accompanied by warm tributes of appreciation.

Over fifteen hundred foreign missionaries on furlough or retired from active service are being invited to attend the forty-third annual meeting of the International Missionary Union, to be held at Clifton Springs, N. Y., from June 2-6, 1926. These missionaries are scattered from Maine to California. The Rev. A. E. Armstrong of the United Church of Canada will open the conference with an address on "World Wide Missionary Advance," Wednesday evening, June 2. Bishop W. F. Oldham of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for many years missionary bishop in India, will deliver the

At last it seems to have become clear to all that the question of the right of a Baptist church to receive members without immersion is not involved in the pending motion to amend the by-laws of the Northern Baptist Convention. The simple question is whether a church that recognizes something other than the immersion of believers as scriptural baptism shall be recognized as a Baptist church entitled to representation in the convention. In the Baptist consciousness no immersion means no baptism. But the right of a church to receive into its membership in some form persons who have not been baptized has not yet come before the convention for formal consideration.

Kavali Field Baptist Association of India is composed almost exclusively of converts from among the outcastes, namely, the Madigas (leather workers) and the Malas (weavers), together with about 300 Christians among the criminal tribes people in the Erukalu Settlement work. There are about 1100 Christians in the association. Recently the association held one of the best annual meetings in its history, in a stable which had been cleaned out for the purpose. Rev. S. D. Bawden is the missionary in charge.

In order to understand precisely what is the question at issue in the Southern Baptist Convention with regard to evolution, read the declaration of the convention on this subject in 1923: "The evolution doctrine has long been a working hypothesis of science, and will probably continue to be because of its apparent simplicity in explaining the universe. But its best exponents freely admit that the causes of the origin of species have not been traced. Nor has any proof been forthcoming that man is not the direct creation of God as recorded in Genesis. We protest against the imposition of this theory upon the minds of our children in denominational or public schools as if it were a definite and established truth of science. We insist that this and all other theories be dealt with in a truly scientific way, that is, in careful conformity to established facts." Agitation continues because some of the constituents of the convention demand more positive repudiation of evolution

Clarifying Our Option

GRADUALLY the precise issue that has confronted the Northern Baptist Convention with regard to the identification of its constituency is being clarified by discussion, and with increasing clarity comes increasing mutual understanding and respect. This is the democratic and Baptist way, and it still works.

Survey the field of discussion. There is no dispute about the subjects of baptism. All who have participated in the discussion agree that baptism is for believers in Christ and for nobody else. All agree that baptism is immersion. All agree that the immersion of believers is the only scriptural baptism. All agree that a scriptural church is locally self-governed in all things that pertain to it as a church. It is a recognized fact that some Baptist churches accept to some form of membership persons who have not been scripturally baptized.

All agree that no general organization, whether the Northern Baptist Convention or any other has any right to prescribe the constitution of a Baptist church. At the same time all agree that the Northern Baptist Convention has the right to prescribe its own membership. But the difference of opinion arises over the terms of such prescription. The convention by-laws prescribe at present that "any Baptist church" may send delegates, leaving the identification of a Baptist church to be determined in the usual denominational ways, and leaving every such church free to determine the qualifications of its own delegates. Some of us think that the convention ought to recognize as a Baptist church no church that admits to any form of membership any other persons than immersed believers. Others of us think that the convention ought not to impose any such restriction. Some of us think that only immersed believers ought to be admitted as delegates. Others of us think that the churches ought to be permitted to decide for themselves who shall represent them in the convention. Some favor an amendment to the by-laws covering the matters in question. Some think that a resolution on the subject will be sufficient. Some would lay the whole matter on the table, thus eliminating it from consideration.

It is interesting to note that the whole dispute, so far as there is dispute, deals not with the interpretation or authority of Scripture but with considerations of denominational expediency. The Bible says nothing about the Northern Baptist Convention. Nobody seems to have attempted to decide any phase of the discussion by quoting Scripture. The argument on which greatest stress is laid is that of the effect of particular action on limited groups of churches. On the one hand we are told that if certain proposed action is not taken, certain groups of churches will withdraw their support from the convention. On the other it is apparent that if such action is taken it will automatically exclude another group of churches from representation in the convention. If the argument is valid, the Convention would seem to face the alternative that unless it expels some good churches, other good churches will withdraw from its cooperative work.

The alternatives seem to turn upon the limits that we see fit to set to our cooperation among Baptist churches. If we favor making the convention the organ of cooperation for the whole Baptist movement within the field of the convention, we naturally favor the inclusive policy. If we wish on the contrary to restrict cooperation to churches of a particular and preferred type within the Baptist movement, we shall as naturally favor a corresponding restriction in terms of the convention constituency. The whole problem is one of fixing the limits within which we are willing to cooperate in the extension of the kingdom of God.

The attitude of THE BAPTIST has been clearly stated. We are striving to realize the ideal of an organized cooperation of all Baptists of whatever specific type in the work of making the full Baptist contribution of truth and service to the world. We hope that the Northern Baptist Convention may prove acceptable to all of them as the organ of such cooperation. To this end we favor making the constituency of the convention as inclusive as the Baptist movement itself is, and of admitting to representation all Baptist churches which are taken and accepted as such among their own neighboring Baptist churches.

At the same time we favor a persevering research into the history, genius, and principles of the Baptist movement, by competent and unprejudiced scholarship, with a view to clarifying the ground, tracing the field and discovering the task of that movement, and a similarly persevering dissemination of the results of such research among the Baptist people in the hope of more completely enlisting and unifying them in the endeavor to perform their whole task in the world. To the results of such a policy we are willing to trust the future of the Baptist movement under the effective spiritual and providential leadership of our Lord in the light of his word.

Sniveling Vice Versus Civic Virtue

FOR the ten-thousandth time let one argument against prohibition receive its quietus. It is the argument of personal liberty. Complainers against the Volstead law say that it interferes with personal liberty. So it does. All laws do so. And liberty is precious. It is a hard-bought heritage of humanity. It ought to be preserved. But it is worth preserving only when it is coupled with sensible and virtuous self-control. Humanity has no vital stake in maintaining a free run of vice and folly. A group that cannot govern itself must be governed by somebody else. No bill of rights can guarantee freedom to moral and intellectual morons. For them government provides guardianship against even their own folly.

Government by the people is a device for giving to liberty the largest possible opportunity to realize itself among them on the basis their social competency. Its goal is the common good as the mass of the people themselves shall come to understand that good. It registers their understanding by the method of popular suffrage and the mind of the majority is law. It provides against mistakes by the processes of free research and discussion, in which no democracy can impair liberty without committing suicide. When any cause with such open opportunity of public appeal cannot win to itself a majority judgment it can make no valid complaint in the name of personal liberty.

Here is and has always been the vital difference of technique between the liquor and the anti-liquor forces. Prohibitionists have stood for the common good, have appealed to the public judgment and have stood for the orderly processes of government. The liquor interests have stood for the freedom of a vicious class, have habitually resorted to fraud and violence, have never been willing to submit to the judgment of the people as expressed democratically in the form of law, and have perseveringly encouraged and condoned the most unscrupulous violation of law. This has been the unvarying experience of this nation in its efforts to restrain the business of making drunkards.

In the light of these elementary facts what value is there in the complaint that the Volstead law is a despotic interference with natural rights? None. The same complaint has followed every effort of law from local option and screen ordinances to prohibition that sought to reduce the evils of alcoholism. Its slogans of liberty and of true temperance are historically as false as the devil's lie in Eden. They are the whine of whipped but unrepentant and sniveling vice. They are used to shield a business that never did accept the public good as its test of validity, that was always as predatory as its poison-peddling bootleggers are today, that never did respect a single human right that stood in the way of its rapacity, and that has always measured its loyalty to the government by its license to evil.

What Is God Saying Now?

WHAT God spoke to the fathers is secure. The Bible places it in our hands for continual guidance. What he has written in the experience of mankind at large is finding a progressive record in history. What he has expressed in nature is yielding its message more and more to scholarly research. What he has registered in the human spirit, even when uttered by the lips of children, is the "Open Sesame" at the door of a rich life.

But occasion also speaks. Thomas Carlyle said: "The crime of being deaf to God's voice, the crime of being blind to everything but parchments and antiquarian rubrics when the handwriting of God is abroad on the sky, there is none other crime than this that the gods do more utterly avenge." The duty for today cannot be altogether known except by taking account of the situation today, and that situation thunders the will of God with a voice louder than that of Sinai.

To every nation, every generation and every fellowship group comes the call of an opportunity which God has opened to it once for all. History records on every page the disastrous consequences of failure to hear and follow that call.

Northern Baptists are not exempt from the law of the occasion. By all consent they are trustees of God for a contribution which only they can bring towards the enterprise of making Christ regnant in the life of the world. They have a rich spiritual heritage. They have material abundance. They have apparently an adequate organization and a sufficient variety of effective agencies for all varieties of approach to their task. They have vast and growing contacts with the world as a field. Their free spiritual fellowship wins the heart of the people wherever. Baptists themselves exhibit its warmth and beauty. Their evangelistic appeal, when once its significance is realized, is irresistible. Their polity is sufficiently flexible for adaptation to all forms of cooperation with all of the servants of God in all the work of God. And the need of the world for the contribution they are fitted to make was never more obvious nor more insistent than at this hour.

If there should be found at the coming meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention any person or group of persons who, through spiritual dullness or through preoccupation with lesser things, shall fail to hear God's call of the occasion and to rise to it in the sublimity of a Christ-born fellowship of salvation and service, that failure will be a tragedy too deep for words. See to thyself and listen to him.

Better Not Play with Fire

ANY man who thinks that he has a good reason for the repeal or modification of the Volstead law, has a right to urge its consideration. But the condonation of crime is not either right or safe for the country. And just this is the policy and practice of a group of influential newspapers in the United States. They not only oppose the law, as they have a right to do, but they do everything in their power to encourage the violation of the law. Every bootlegger in the land knows that so far as their influence goes, his business is made safer. And yet they make pretense of being special guardians of American patriotism. They are sowing the wind by educating the people to lawlessness, and it is not known that God has any new way of paying old scores.

The World in Transit

BY THE ASSISTANT EDITOR

"Let Us Rejoice With the Baptists."

Under this column head the Michigan Christian Advocate felicitates the Baptists on the result of the Chicago Beach conference. It says: "Last week a company of Baptists met in Chicago and agreed to one of the godliest compacts ever made, revealing the fineness of their spirit and the keenness of their minds." And it states the conclusion of the conference to be this: "Re-emphasize the Baptist contention that immersion is the only form of scriptural baptism, adhere to that form strictly, but the local church is given the right to declare that baptism is no longer to be a condition of membership in that church." Moreover, the Advocate proposes that "if our Baptist friends will point out anything in Methodism that as obviously calls for an operation, we are 'willing to be made willing' to cut also." We reciprocate the spirit and accept the invitation. One simple operation on the part of our Methodist brethren will be a distinguished exhibition of godliness, fineness of spirit and keenness of mind, and will conduce greatly to spiritual harmony. It is this: Cut out all insistence on baptism that is not clearly prescribed in the Bible. Please to try a Chicago Methodist conference on that proposition.

Those Debts That Will Never Be Paid.

From the eleventh of November, 1918, observers who kept their judgment clear knew and said that the war had left a burden of debt for the labor of the white nations to pay that they never would, could or should pay. At last, after eight years of troublesome dickering, the fact has become apparent even to business men and statesmen, and the most favorable settlements that can be secured by such a process are being accepted. These settlements with moratoriums and postponements will permit governments to get on a while longer. But they merely postpone the day of actual reckoning. Wait thirty, forty or fifty years until the heavy paying is due to begin, until American capital controls the major industries of Europe, until a generation not yet born finds itself loaded with obligations it never incurred and drains its energies to enrich a nation which it has learned to regard as a Shylock—wait till then and observe developments. It may not be necessary to wait five years for developments in Great Britain. Or suppose that the Old World should turn some shade of red from Liverpool to Yokohama. No, this is not a cry of alarm, it is simply proposing advisable discounts in the interest of economic realism. It is taking account of the necessity for coming down out of the clouds far enough for our feet to touch the ground.

The British Coal Crisis and Its Interpretation

At the date of this writing, May 3, papers announce a general suspension of industry to begin in Great Britain within a few hours, the center of irritation being the coal business. A practical dictatorship is said to impend. What may occur any day cannot be foretold. Any statement of the status will be out of date within twenty-four hours. But what does the crisis in general mean? Englishmen themselves are not of one mind about it. All points of the world seem to be equally favorable for observation, and distance may aid judgment. No partisan judgment is worth much. Ramsay MacDonald's formula that the crisis is a breakdown of capitalism, whatever of truth may be in it, is too simple. What is needed is a program which will provide for the steady employment of the people of Great Britain upon conditions that sustain life and satisfy a sense of justice in the minds of the workers. On the basis of an industrial organization of the country as a whole for the common good, such a program is ideally practicable. How it can be longer done on the basis of commercial competition and of profit in the interest of a class no man knows. But to shift from one of these bases to the other involves changes so vast as to amount to revolution, and there is serious question whether there is in Great Britain sufficient capacity for community engineering to support it. Besides, the nation is not yet willing to try the experiment. Behind this crisis looms the dark background of political disappointment and mutual suspicion. Two years ago a government commission investigated the coal problem as a whole and recommended a solution which the miners, it seems, regarded as a pledge, but which the government ignored. Moreover there have been mutual threats and plots of communism and fascism, either of which meant the overthrow of parliamentary government. All of this muddling has gone too far, and now the price is to pay. Hope for the best and expect almost anything.

Making Americans Aliens By Technical Error

It is said that 1500 persons in the United States are now deprived of their citizenship for political offenses such as opposition to the war and to military service. Be that as it may, petitions are in extensive circulation requesting congress to restore citizenship to such persons. But now comes Morris Hilquitt with an open letter in which he contends that there is no law by which their citizenship could have been forfeited for such offenses, and that the imposition of such penalty upon them was a legal or administrative blunder. Being himself a lawyer of ability, his opinion calls for consideration. In response to an inquiry addressed by him to Attorney General Sargent on the subject, Mr. Sargent is reported as saying: "This department has not expressed an opinion on the subject." If Mr. Hilquitt is right, we have the interesting situation in which some hundreds of citizens may be deprived of citizenship by nobody in particular and without any process of law, "due" or otherwise.

Does Baptist Democracy Need a Referendum?

Baptists boast of their peculiar democracy. In particular they would have all the world observe how their local congregations are self-governing. Moreover, in theory the state and general conventions represent the local churches, receive instructions from them and speak and act according to their will. But no denominational machinery has been devised by which the churches are able to assure themselves that their collective judgment shall be actually assembled and put into effect. In specific cases it is of course possible for a church to send instructed delegates, but even so most of the churches send no delegates, and they cannot foresee what questions may arise in which they have a vital interest. At best the competency of a convention to express the mind of the denomination is limited, even when the convention is unanimous, and the competency is far less when there is division in the convention itself. There are times when the convention could act more intelligently if it actually knew what the people are thinking in the churches large and small throughout its constituency. Besides, the very effort to investigate and to form responsible conclusions on matters of general denominational interest would be a valuable discipline to our people. Is it possible for our denomination to utilize for advisory purposes an occasional referendum?

Religion and Education*

A sermon preached, Oct. 5, 1924, in Mandel Hall at the University of Chicago

By ERNEST DE WITT BURTON

RELIGION and education are natural allies. It is true that they have not always been associated together. When religion has undertaken, as it sometimes has, to suppress freedom of thought and enforce conformity of opinion, it has tended to destroy education even when ostensibly maintaining it. When education has aimed wholly at preparation for some gainful occupation, or has defined itself wholly in intellectual terms, and has ignored or denied the right of the spirit of man to reach out after those higher spiritual possibilities which are confessedly irreducible to exact scientific statement, then it has become the foe of religion. But these are both abnormal situations, however frequently they may have arisen.

Religion and education are natural allies. Both recognize and have to do with the spiritual as over against an exclusive attention to the physical and material. Both seek to emancipate a man, not from contact with his environment, but from slavery to it, to enlarge his horizon and to quicken his aspirations. On the whole and in the large they have actually been allied.

In Christianity above all other religions, and broadly speaking in modern Protestantism above all less democratic forms of Christianity, religion and education have been so conceived that they have actually been co-workers. Wherever Jesus' estimate of the value of human personalities has prevailed and his thought of the possibility of a human life lived in harmony and cooperation with the Supreme Mind and Will, and in proportion as these ideals have dominated the thought of the church, education has gone hand in hand with religion.

Born of Religious Impulse

Nowhere perhaps has this cooperative relationship been more fully realized than between American Protestantism and the American college. Harvard college was founded to educate "the English and Indian youth in knowledge and godliness." Its motto was and still is "Pro Christo et Ecclesia"—for Christ and the church. And if you will trace the history of American colleges from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the seventeenth century down to the twentieth you will find that the majority of them were born in the hearts of religious men and owe their existence to the religious impulse. This is conspicuously true of our own university.

Our great state universities are indeed a partial exception. It was to the spirit of democracy that they owe their origin, and without discussing how far democracy is itself the product of religion, it must be confessed that in a few cases and for a time they have been dominated by a spirit of irreligion. But such occasions have been rare and such times have been short, and today religion is about as firmly established and as fully recognized in our state universities as in any college founded by a Christian denomination. Whatever their parentage, the American college and the American university always tend to develop an alliance with religion.

There has moreover been a decided gain in this respect in the last half-century. . . .

I well remember how in my boyhood the representatives of the denominational colleges were wont to denounce the state universities as godless, and I know that though on the whole the epithet was undeserved, in some cases there was a certain basis for the accusation. To remedy this situation, the Y. M. C. A. began its work in state universities about forty years ago. The Y. W. C. A. followed, then the denominational boards of education, with much resulting confusion, but on the whole with a strengthening of the influence of religion. Partly in succession to these movements, partly parallel to them, the colleges and the universities themselves, or affiliated organizations, have established courses of instruction in religion; and latest of all, a nation-wide movement has been organized to establish schools of religion at the larger universities and to prepare men and women to fill the chairs of instruction in them and on the faculties of the schools themselves. . . .

Nor are these influences all exerted outside the colleges. Faculties of state universities, in some cases at least, consider the character-forming influence of the institution a matter of prime concern, and cooperate heartily with agencies within and without the university which make for this result.

Several Generations Ago

All this shows real progress, the evidence of which is all the more striking if we go back not one generation but several. The Literary Digest for February 9, 1924, quotes from the United Presbyterian figures which though I have not verified them are probably substantially correct:

"Statistics from 80 state institutions in 1921 show that out of a total enrolment of 152,461 students, 130,486 had religious affiliations, while 21,975 made no statement regarding their religious life. This is very encouraging when compared with our early history, when even though the colleges were church institutions, practically all the students were outside the church. In Princeton from 1778 to 1782 there was but one professor of religion. At Bowdoin College in 1807 there was only one Christian. At Yale for four years there was but one, and but four or five in other years about the beginning of the century. Many of the students assumed the name of leading infidels and atheists. Often every student was a professed infidel, or at least outside the church. Bishop Meade of Virginia said in 1811 that William and Mary College was a hotbed of French infidelity, and that for many years in every educated man he expected to find an infidel."

Certainly we have gone a long way since those days. I do not mean to say that conditions are now ideal—that there is no irreligion or indifference to religion in our colleges; that even moral conditions are wholly above criticism. I know to my sorrow that they are not. But despite all that we might find fault with or regret, I think anyone who knows our colleges will testify both that on the one hand religion has a measurably fair presentation in them, and that on the other hand a large number of students give it fair consideration and many of them whole-hearted devotion.

Believing that religion is entitled to a place in college life, and that in general it actually occupies such a place, I should like to consider with you what kind of religion will meet the needs of the college student and, because it does so, constitute an influential factor in his life.

My first answer to this question is that the religion of the college must be in substantial harmony with its general intellectual life.

We cannot proceed with a dualism which would keep religion in dry storage while all the rest of the mind is fertilized with the dew and the rain of freedom of inquiry. I remember to have heard of a college professor who described his own mental condition in about the language that I have just used, and added that he had no idea what would happen to him if ever the partition between his religion and his science should break through. But I could have told him that whatever happened to his science, there would not be much left of his religion, intellectually speaking at least.

An Epochal Event

Fifty years ago it was not uncommon to teach all the subjects of the college curriculum from textbooks and to grade the student at the end of the course on the accuracy of his memory of the textbook. It was an epochal event in the life of men educated in that way when they discovered that the author of a textbook was after all only a human being and that therefore neither he nor the book was infallible.

When history and chemistry were taught in that way it was of course perfectly natural that religion should be taught in the same way. But on the same ground, when or where the intellectual life of the college is of a different type, the religious life of the college will naturally partake of that difference. When you teach chemistry by authority you will not be likely to encourage freedom of investigation in religion. But equally when you begin to teach physics and chemistry by experiment, and history and sociology by observation, it will inevitably follow that in course of time the attitude of mind which you cultivate in your laboratories and your sociological and historical studies will begin to penetrate into those areas of the mind in which religion dwells.

Today's Professor a Thinker

And this is the condition today. The professor is no longer merely a quiz-master on a textbook. He is required to be a thinker. It is demanded that he shall have at least the spirit of an investigator. Facts must mean to him more than the assertions of the printed page. Moreover, the liberty which the teacher claims, and must claim to hold his place and his self-respect, he cannot deny to his students. The theory that the immature mind of youth naturally and properly bows to authority is a fiction that should have been discovered and discarded long ago. Not only is the difference of age and maturity of mind between the instructor and the student often too little to justify any such sharp distinction between them, but the study of the child has reminded us that he is a born investigator, who begins his independent researches in the cradle and gains most of his knowledge not by authority but by independent inquiry. To attempt to suppress this natural instinct for the period of his schooldays, leaving him to re-acquire it as best he can when he escapes the school-room, is an absurdity that approaches a crime. Whether the professor acquires this freedom by sailing across some stormy Atlantic in a frail but courageous intellectual "Mayflower," or is born free, it ill becomes him to deny that same freedom to his student. Nor will he, if he is really free himself.

But if these things be true, then it follows that in the colleges of today religion must rest on a foundation of facts and evidence, not on dogma and affirmation. The attitude of the college cannot be one of imposition by authority, but of open-minded inquiry. It is related on what I judge to be good authority that a student who entered a school of religion from a college about three years ago was called upon soon after his entrance to pass an examination. A few days after the examination he was summoned to the office of the president and asked whether an examination paper which the president held in his hand was his. Replying that it was, he was further asked where he got the answer to the third question. "I do not know," the student answered. "I stated the matter as it seemed to me after thinking it out." "Young man," the president said, "in this school you are not expected to think things out. You are to take what is given you and write down what you are taught." "Do you really mean what you say?" said the student. "I certainly do," said the president, and the student left the office and the school. This incident is related, not to cast a reflection on the school of religion, but only to illustrate the inevitable influence of the modern college on the mind of the student. He is not expected to receive with docility the affirmations of his instructor in chemistry or sociology, but to observe the facts for himself and to think through the matter to the best of his ability. The more thoroughly he does this, the better does the instructor feel himself to have succeeded. Having acquired this habit of mind in every other field of thought, the student cannot apply a different one in religion.

Open-Minded Inquiry

We are sometimes startled by the frankness with which our college students discuss among themselves all the great questions of life, and often sobered by the recklessness with which some students use their liberty and the insane extremes to which some carry not only their theories but their practice. Yet not even these things can make us forget that real morality is never produced by repression, and that what we cannot accomplish by enlightenment and friendship and persuasion will not be achieved by an attempt to return to the days of coercion. The day of dogmatism in history and science and religion is rapidly passing away. The spirit of open-minded inquiry has come to stay. It is right that it should do so. This is nature's method. It is the method that has given us the tremendous increase in knowledge that the world has gained in the last century. It is the only method that can continue to unlock for us the chambers not yet opened up, the only method that promises progress and betterment. It is certain more and more to permeate all education and all thinking. It cannot be banished from our thinking about religion and it ought not to be.

Religion the Vital Part of Life

But I must not leave the impression that I think of religion as wholly a matter of opinion or even of conviction. Religion is a life—the reaction of one's whole nature to the totality of the world, it has sometimes been called. Certainly it has its emotional as well as its intellectual side, its conduct as well as its inward spiritual aspect. Moreover, most of us practice it before we reflect much about it, experience it before we reason about it. We do not come to it as we do to chemistry or to ancient history, a something outside ourselves of which we have had no previous knowledge and no experience that we recognize as such. Thought about religion arises in a life that is already religious. One thinks about it not as an abstraction or a concrete thing outside one, but as a part of one's own life, often the most precious and vital part of that life.

Every Pastor His Own Evangelist

"When He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion."

BY SAMUEL G. NEIL

DISCREDIT has fallen on what may be described as "the carpet-bag" method of evangelism. This familiar system—by which a man, often of powerful personality and real saintliness, has been heralded by huge posters and newspaper write-ups, has come, swept the people off their feet in a tornado of emotion and has departed as suddenly as he came—has been tried; the growing conviction is that its merits are outweighed by its shortcomings. Its primary defect is obviously the lack of permanent results, due to the passion generated in the vitiated air of an overcrowded building, and the fact that the evangelist who comes out of the illimitable void returns thither. The criticism is not of personalities, but of methods—a method which differs in essence from the open-air preaching of Jesus Christ, Peter, Wesley, Whitfield, Finney, Earle, Knapp, Booth, Moody and other evangelists.

In recent times there has been a modification of this system by which the evangelist shall enter a town or city in a quieter and more pastoral way, and work through all the agencies of the church rather than mass meetings. The aim is the revival of spiritual religion within the church. The attempt to make the campaign more pastoral meets some of the criticisms leveled at the sporadic evangelistic campaign. But another method that is growing in favor and carries the pastoral idea farther is open to none of the objections which are indicated above.

It is that of the evangelistic campaign conducted by the pastor himself in his own church. The shepherd himself searches for his lost sheep. One of the glad surprises of such a campaign is that pastors who have gone on for years in the belief that their preaching genius was purely pastoral, have discovered a talent of persuasive and convincing evangelism. They have experienced the ultimate joy of the pastor that souls should find their way out of darkness into light through their preaching. And the evangelical temper has fired all their subsequent preaching with a new passion for souls.

During the past few years I have come into personal contact with three such series of meetings, differing in details but all dominated by the principle that the campaign should be conducted by the pastor.

The outline of each is interesting. The first two were honest attempts to crack the hard nut of the suburban town with its aloofness, indifference and often pathetic loneliness. The pastor in one suburban town where professional evangelism had been tried again and again without effect, proposed that a week's evangelistic services should be held in his own church. One hundred volunteers visited 4000 homes with a letter of invitation. The conclusion of the letter may be quoted as typical of the entire letter: "I hope I may address you thus without giving offence, for although we may never have met, we cannot be strangers to each other in thought and feeling. Your frequent hunger for a fresh and full experience of higher life and for a deeper knowledge of God, is mine. A reasonable faith and a truer or revived religious life are necessities today. If you are associated with an evangelical church you will, I am sure, forgive this letter, understand its purpose, and accept my assurance that anything like proselytism is altogether absent from my mind."

"If, however, you are not a church attendant, or if you have by neglect or design absented yourself from public worship and regular cultivation of spiritual life, I cordially invite you to these services, in the hope that they may prove a help and lead to the renewal of your connection with some evangelical church."

Accompanying the letter was a slip asking four questions: 1. Would you like to receive an occasional visit from a minister or church visitor, and if so, what hour would suit you best? 2. Would like to be put into communication with the local church of the denomination to which you have previously belonged? 3. Would you like your children (if any) to attend Sunday school? 4. May we leave a copy of our church paper occasionally at your home?

In addition, a copy of the denominational paper containing an article on "Why Should We Go to Church?" was left at every house, while cards of invitation to the meetings were left at offices, stores, and other places of business in the town. Several thousand visits were made. A trained choir led the singing, with an orchestra or solo in each case. For each service a special hymn sheet was printed, on the back of which was a verse, a thought and a prayer, generally from some unhackneyed source like Robert Louis Stevenson or Henry Drummond. An average attendance of 500 persons was at every service. The result is that the church is facing the future in a new spirit. The pastor has had many interviews with people who have come to him quietly sometimes weeks after the services; the membership has increased and continues to increase; and the whole community attitude toward the church is more alert and friendly.

In another suburban town a young church conducted a similar visitation of the neighborhood. During Passion week the pastor held a series of quiet services. His sermons dealt with the last week of the life of Christ, or such subjects as "Peter—the Dangers of Emotionalism," or "Judas Iscariot—a Study in Spiritual Degeneration." There was an average attendance of about 300 persons present at every service. The effect of the campaign was to convert a young congregation into an efficient church with a greatly increased membership.

The third example was more spectacular because it faced the problems of a great industrial center. The problem of the suburban church was that of getting into grips with respectability. The problem of the church in the community of working people was to draw young, palpitating life from the glittering streets. A theater was hired for the Sundays and the pastor himself conducted the services there. The theater was literally packed to the roof, largely with young people. Large posters were on the billboards. Attractive newspaper write-ups appeared in the local press. Processions were organized, sometimes led by a borrowed brass band, and at the head marched the pastor and his wife, followed by the deacons and trustees, and Sunday-school officers and teachers. The church itself was comfortably crowded during the week night services. The evangelistic message was ethical, civic, passionately spiritual, and convincing. Result—scores of persons from without have been drawn into association with the church; forty gave their hearts to Christ; the church has renewed vitality, a quickened hope, and a more passionate yearning for the salvation of men.

Church Music

Order of Worship

By FREDERICK MAXSON, ORGANIST, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

THERE is a great flexibility in the order of service in various Baptist churches, and even in the same church at different times, as it may sometimes be desirable to build a service in a special way.

The ideal service should seek for balance in the distribution of the items of service between minister, choir and congregation. There are not many items with which to punctuate the morning service, since the usual catalog contains only such as hymns, prayer, responsive reading and Gloria, invocation, Scripture lesson, benediction, Doxology, announcements and sermon. There can be no creed, confession or decalogue recited, no second Scripture lesson, gospel, epistle, etc., which would give opportunity for the use of a musical selection between. Hence the difficulty of making an order of service of much variety, on account of the necessary repetitions of items. If possible, two musical numbers should not follow each other, nor two selections of Scripture. With this in mind, the following is suggested as a possible order of service, including the material mentioned above.

|----------------------------------|-------------------|
| 1. Prelude | 9. Announcements |
| 2. Doxology | 10. Offertory |
| 3. Invocation | 11. Scripture |
| 4. Hymn | 12. Hymn |
| 5. Anthem | 13. Meditation |
| 6. Responsive Reading and Gloria | 14. Sermon |
| 7. Prayer | 15. Benediction |
| 8. Hymn | 16. Silent Prayer |
| | 17. Postlude |

This is not entirely ideal. Here the minister has items 3, 7, 9, 11, 14, 15; the congregation 2, 4, 6, 8, 12, 16; the choir 5 and 10; which seems a fair distribution. One criticism is, hymn and anthem following each other, with nothing between.

A slightly more elaborate service may be used as follows:

Organ Prelude.

Call to Worship.

The Minister—"As for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy; and in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple. I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honor dwelleth."

Choral Response—Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forever.

The Minister—"It became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons into glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. Fight the good fight of faith. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

Response—Several stanzas of an appropriate hymn, by the congregation.

The Minister—"O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard. Praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise him all ye people. For his merciful kindness is great toward us; and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. We thy people will give thee thanks forever; we will show forth thy praise to all generations."

Doxology.

Invocation. Choral Response.

First Scripture Lesson.

Anthem.

Responsive Reading.

Gloria Patri.

Service of Prayer.

Minister: O come, let us worship and bow down.

Choir: Let us kneel before the Lord our Maker.

Minister: Teach us to do Thy will.

Choir: For Thou art our God.

Minister: Cause me to hear Thy loving kindness in the morning.

Choir: For in Thee do I trust.

Minister: Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk.

Choir: For I lift up my soul unto Thee.

Prayer—Choral Amen.

Hymn.

Announcements.

Offertory.

Second Scripture Lesson.

Hymn.

Organ Meditation.

Sermon.

Prayer and Benediction.

Here items 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 11, 14, 15 and 16 are assigned to the minister; 2, 6, 8 and 12 to the congregation; and 2, 3, 5, 7, 10 and 17 to the choir.

The evening service may be more flexible—built to suit the particular occasion. It may be preceded by a short organ recital of varied selections. A cantata or large choral work may be sung, or an extra number of choir selections and congregational hymns. Or a special topic may be worked out by the minister, choir and congregation. There is opportunity and need for almost unlimited variety in the evening service, which should be made especially attractive throughout.

I cannot close this discussion of aesthetic services without referring to the wonderful vesper service developed by Doctor Lamson of the Center Congregational church, Hartford, Conn. This consisted of three sets of confessions by minister and congregation, interspersed with beautiful choral responses and hymns and was attended by crowded congregations.

WHY be afraid of Death, as tho' your life were breath?
Death but anoints your eyes with clay, O glad surprise!

Why should you be forlorn? Death only husks the corn.
Why should you fear to meet the thresher of the wheat?
Is sleep a thing to dread? Yet, sleeping, you are dead
Till you awake and rise, here, or beyond the skies.

Why should it be a wrench to leave your wooden bench?
Why not with happy shout run home when school is out?

The dear ones left behind? O foolish one, and blind!
A day—and you will not meet; a night and you will greet.
This is the death of Death—to breathe away a breath
And know the end of strife, and taste the deathless life.
And joy without a fear, and smiles without a tear,
And work, nor care, nor rest, and find the last the best!

—Malbie D. Babcock.

The Devotional Life

The Lowly Duty of Fidelity

"Thou hast been faithful over a few things."—Matt. xxv. 21.

BY GEORGE H. MORRISON

IT was very like our Lord to make fidelity the test of life. He was quick to recognize the lowly virtues. Just as he took obscure and lowly men when he wanted to build up a kingdom, so did he take obscure and lowly virtues when he wanted to build up a character, and this not merely because they were obscure, but because they were within the range of all, and his was to be a universal gospel. There is nothing dazzling in fidelity. It is not at all a rare and splendid gift. It has no power to arrest the eyes, nor get itself chronicled in any newspaper. And it is singularly like the Lord, with his passion for undistinguished people, that he should crown a virtue such as that. The inspiring thought is that our Lord should take a thing within the reach of everybody and make it the criterion of character.

It is like him, too, to recognize that fidelity demands a certain courage. In the parable from which our text is taken that is very charmingly exhibited. There is one man there who was not faithful. He got his talent and he buried it. And it is a master-touch of a profound psychology that in the end of the day, when the reckoning was taken, that man is made to say I was afraid. His infidelity was fear, and the Lord delights to hint at truth by negatives. There is a courage of the battlefield, which is often a very splendid thing. There is a courage needed for every high adventure. But perhaps the finest courage in the world (in the eyes of God, if not of men) is the quiet and steady courage of fidelity. To do things when you don't feel like them, to keep on keeping on, to get to duty through headache and through heartache, to ply the drudgery when birds are calling—there are few things finer in the world. That is not a thing of the rare moment—it is carrying victory into the common day. It does not flash in the country of our dreams—it illuminates the dreary levels. And life is never a victorious business unless our common days are full of victories, of which no one ever hears anything at all.

This was the courage of our Lord himself. Sometimes we forget how brave he was. We sing of "Gentle Jesus, meek and mild," and we dwell on his exceeding tenderness, nor in a world like this, so full of difficulty, can we ever dwell on his tenderness too much. But if we ignore his courage, we lose one of the appeals of Christ to youth, and to do that is infinitely pitiful. Did it take no courage to come down from heaven and become the tenant of a cottage? Did it take no courage to remain at Nazareth when his heart was burning in his breast? Did it take no courage to resist the devil, offering him the kingdoms of the world, when the winning of these kingdoms was his passion? To scorn delights and live laborious days, to take the long, long trail that led to Calvary, to set his face steadfastly towards Jerusalem, where the cross was waiting and the crown of thorns—never was finer courage in the world. When we feel that we are missing things (and to feel that means an aching heart), when we are tempted to rebel at drudgery and to long for the wings of a dove to fly away, we must remember him who never flew away (though white-winged angels were his servitors), but took up his cross, daily to the end.

Another profound suggestion of our Lord is that fidelity is rewarded by capacity. "Thou hast been faithful over few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." Sometimes an employer of labor says to me, "The young fellow you sent me is no use. He has proved a slacker in his task and I never can offer him a bigger one." But sometimes he says to me, "I've been watching that lad; he's doing splendidly; the first bigger thing that offers he will get." The real reward is not the bigger task. It is the capacity to do the bigger task. Real rewards are never arbitrary; they are vitally related to the toil. The reward of service is greater power to serve. The reward of fidelity is new capacity—added fitness comes through being faithful. To be faithful in the least is to be qualifying for what is greater. To do with the whole heart the lowliest thing is to be getting ready for the higher thing. So live, and whatever the world may have in store, he whose word can never pass away will make you ruler over many things. Life will deepen and be enriched for you, though your home be but a humble lodging. Your will shall be strengthened by those daily victories which, after all, are the victories that count. True wealth is augmented personality, with corresponding increase of capacity, and the avenue of God to that is faithfulness.

Our Lord associates fidelity with joy. "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Here are two men engaged at the same task, both intelligent and skilful workmen. But the one is careless, and he scamps his work; the other is laboriously faithful. At the end of the day, when work is over, and there stretches ahead the leisure of the evening, which of these two workmen is the happier? "Flowers laugh before thee in their beds," says Wordsworth of the man who is found faithful. Unfaithfulness moves towards the dark. Fidelity pitches its tent towards the sunrise. Be thou faithful, and when the task is over, and the morning breaks upon the further shore, thou shalt enter into the joy of thy Lord.

A Substitute for the Amendment

BY CHESTER F. RALSTON

THAT there are worthy advocates for and against the amendment to be acted upon at the Washington meetings there can be no doubt. The letters appearing in the denominational press during the past months prove quite conclusively that there is much to be said on both sides. Indeed it is not possible to dismiss with a wave of the hand much that has been written both pro and con.

The writer is one who believes the convention has the right and power to enact a defining clause, such as is proposed, should it decide it the part of wisdom and necessity to do so. I am equally convinced that the proposed amendment to the by-laws, as it now reads, should not be adopted. Even for the purpose for which it is intended it is too narrow and exclusive. It is not true to our historic Baptist position. It leaves out of consideration too much that is of more importance than the form of our baptism. It tends to set us, as a denomination, in a false light, for it leaves out much that the denomination has cherished even more than the form of baptism. There are other truths for which we have stood that are more vital in the teachings of Christ. To enact the amendment as proposed is to do more than to adopt a defining clause. It is to make a declaration, a declaration of our faith, and as stated in the amendment, it is woefully inadequate. This is true whether or not we would have it so.

It will not be my privilege to be in attendance upon our Washington meet-

The Northern Baptist Convention

The next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention will be held in Washington, D. C., May 25-30, 1926. The sessions will be held in the Auditorium.

The by-laws of the convention provide

Article I

Membership

Section 1. The convention shall be composed of accredited delegates as follows:

(a) Any Baptist church in the United States may appoint one delegate and one additional delegate for every one hundred members, provided the church during the year immediately preceding the annual meeting of the convention shall have cooperated in the financial support of the work of at least one of the cooperating organizations of the Northern Baptist Convention, or the work of the ministers and missionaries benefit board of the Northern Baptist Convention, or the work of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention.

(b) Accredited officers and members of the boards of managers of the organizations named in the preceding paragraph shall be delegates ex officio.

(c) Officers and members of committees of the convention during their terms of service shall be delegates ex officio.

Blank credential forms for delegates from churches may be had upon application to the state convention secretaries of the several states, who have kindly consented to attend to their distribution.

Churches that have not contributed to convention agencies during the current year are not entitled to send delegates. No delegates may be appointed to represent fractions of one hundred members of a church.

Credentials for ex officio delegates will be distributed from the office of the corresponding secretary.

All delegates to the convention must present written credentials, properly signed, in no case by the delegates themselves. Enrolment cards will be furnished in Washington. These must be filled by all delegates. The credentials and enrolment cards will be inspected by the local registration committee. Both these cards, with $2 registration fee, must be presented.

The program for the meetings will be printed in the Baptist newspapers, and a copy will be handed to each delegate upon registration.

State delegations will meet in places assigned at the close of the morning session, and select their representatives upon committees as described in the by-laws, and report the persons so selected at the afternoon session of the convention on the first day.

ings. In lieu of that fact I should like to offer through these columns a substitute for the amendment as proposed, believing that it would more accurately and adequately meet the purpose of the proposed amendment, and not be so divisive throughout our denomination as the proposed amendment, if enacted, is bound to be.

Section 2. A Baptist church, as defined for the purposes of these by-laws, is one that accepts the New Testament as guide in matters of faith and conduct that acknowledges Jesus Christ as the Son of God, requiring of its members personal acceptance of him as Saviour and Lord; that accepts immersion as the baptism commanded by Jesus, and practiced by his disciples, and follows that form whenever the ordinance is administered; that believes the gospel of Christ is necessary and sufficient for the saving of mankind, and is seeking through its cooperation with our missionary organizations to give the gospel to all people.

I submit this substitute for consideration with the conviction that such a definition and declaration will prove to be unifying rather than divisive among the churches of the convention. Such an amendment is not aimed at either the individual or any local church. It is more inclusive of the teachings of Christ as we have understood and practiced for long years; it is more expressive of the truth we as individuals and churches cherish in our hearts; it is more definite as to what our Baptist churches affiliated with our convention always have been, and may be expected to be; it will more truly represent us before a watching and critical world; and, I fully believe, more surely work toward the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord.

We should warn ourselves against permitting either a small coterie of extreme modernists, or a like representation of radical fundamentalists, to force our great denomination into any action at Washington that will result in dividing rather than unifying our Baptist hosts. That would indeed be a regrettable day in our history.

An English periodical notes the discovery by Dr. Vacher Burch in Syria of a Slavonic version of the writings of Josephus which contains a long account of the trial, death and reported resurrection of Jesus. This version is supposed to be an early translation from the original Aramaic. The Baptist Times thus summarizes the document by saying: "that in it Josephus tells 'that he knew all about the trial of Jesus before Pilate that in the time of the Emperor Claudius, and of the procurators Cuspius Fadus and Tiberius Alexander, many were the 'slaves' of the wonder-worker Jesus; that these preached that their 'rabbi' who had died, was risen from the dead, and as well they taught the New Law, which is in opposition to the old Jewish law, and that these were early messengers of Jesus were teaching others, who and what he was and is, by the help of the primitive 'documentary mode which he had inspired and all his messengers had used.'"

"Tell me how a man spends his spare time, and I will tell you what kind of a man he is."

If you will read, in Bruce Barton's "The Man Nobody Knows" from the last paragraph on page 82 to the next to the last paragraph on page 85, you will learn something about Christ's good deeds. Read, also, from the next to the last paragraph on page 190 to the end of the chapter to get some good thoughts.

By looking through the Gospels you will find many references showing Christ's good deeds daily. A few of the best may be chosen as the Scripture lesson for the evening.

Why not plan to illustrate the lesson by means of a "clock?" One can be very easily made with a circle of cardboard. Instead of having the hours marked from one to twelve, mark the spaces from 1 to 24, to indicate the twenty-four hours of the day.

In presenting the topic, this "clock" could be displayed, and an explanatory statement made as to its meaning. Then mark off on the "clock" the hours spent in sleep, those spent at work, those at play, etc. If a black crayon were used to shade the "sleep" portion, and other colors to indicate the other events of the day, this division might be more easily remembered by the onlookers.

Ask then what is done with the leisure time—is it spent in reading, in doing good deeds, in idleness?

Present the thoughts brought out by Bruce Barton in his book: that Christ, no matter how busy, had time for prayer and good deeds.

Perhaps the song "Just for Today" and "My Task" could be used as special music some time during the meeting.

Live Wires

Wyoming may not be very old, but certainly has some live young people. It seems as if the locals in that state magnificent distances are always on the look-out for something new and interesting.

From Cheyenne, Wyo., we receive a little skit entitled "The Spirit of the B. Y. P. U." in which the indifference and luke-warmness of society members and committee chairman fall off when the spirit of B. Y. P. U. inoculates them.

This little sketch was "put on" at a regular B. Y. P. U. service with the result that many more of the members are now taking an active interest in the work of the society; the committee chairmen now realize that unless the officers of the local society are "head over heels" in love with the society, the non-official members will not have the interest which they should have.

No, these young people did not have this play handed to them "ready made." They wrote it themselves. Of course, it was work to do such a thing, but think of the value gained by those who wrote it—they have broadened their own thinking; they have enlarged their capacity; have paved the way for a next writing of such a skit; have analyzed for themselves what is wrong with the society and how such wrongs can be righted; and have given expression to their innermost thoughts.

It certainly thrills leaders to have the young people taking such initiative in their local societies and churches. With such originality and initiative, we can see in our mind's eye an advance in the work of the denomination when these young people take hold in a few years. The originality now being used in the young people's society will later be used in a larger way for the larger work. The effort expended now in the interests of the young people's society will then be expended in the larger interests of world service.

It warms the heart to know that these young people are not waiting for the time when they can do large things, but are preparing themselves for those large things by doing now the tasks (which may sometimes seem small and insignificant) near at hand. More power to these young people!

Introspection

"What ails our youth?" is a familiar question to many. They have heard this question discussed by ministers and reformers. They have read about it in newspapers, magazines and books. And yet it seems as popular as ever.

The young people of the Southern California B. Y. P. U. are hearing this topic discussed at the young people's session of the state convention now in session. This time the question is being discussed in a "different" way. First, an adult person is telling what in his opinion is wrong with the young people. Then a young person will tell his side of the story.

After these two have expressed their opinions on the matter, Mr. E. Morton Rose, president of the Southern California B. Y. P. U., will tell of what they purpose to do. This is to be followed with a brief presentation of what the young people are now trying to do and how they are succeeding.

"The Doctor's Prescription," a little play in two acts, is to be the conclusion of this question discussion.

Of course there is special music and congregational singing in between times—"Singspirational", these young people call it. Devotions, too, will have a part on the program.

This meeting is significant in two ways: first, in that the state convention sees fit to give the young people the "best night", or the second night of a three day session, leaving it to them to arrange their own program; and second, in that these young people—Christians, our own Baptists—are trying to discover wherein they are not being their best, how they are able to remedy this condition, and how they can start at once.

Mrs. Edward S. Harkness has presented to the Yale library a copy of the Bible printed by Gutenberg in 1455. It is said that she paid for this rare volume $140,000.

The Chimney Corner

A Cathedral for All Children

BY ANNE LEE

A CHURCH for children has been established by the people of Walden, N. Y., a manufacturing town of 7,000 in the Ramapo Mountains, not far above the New Jersey line. It is a church of all creeds, a church wherein religion is simplified to appeal to the child mind, where children may learn to worship by taking complete charge of the service.

In its newly completed Cathedral for All Children, this isolated village—for Walden, within fifty miles of New York City, is fourteen miles from the nearest passenger station—boasts an experiment unique in the religious history of the country. According to the villagers, the Rev. Dr. J. Brett Langstaff has accomplished it all, but the rector insists that it is the people who should have the credit, for their support and cooperation made the experiment possible.

Volunteer labor built the Cathedral for All Children. Walden is not a wealthy town. It is decidedly "middle class." Large knife factories, some of the largest in the country, are established there. It is essentially a workingman's town, and it is doubtful whether a single family of great means lives there.

Townpeople of all creeds showed their interest in the project by volunteering their services. Shoulder to shoulder, day by day, after finishing their regular day's labor, Walden's bricklayers, masons, painters, plasterers, woodworkers, painters and decorators worked together on the cathedral. During the months that he directed the volunteer workers and while his dream was taking material form, Doctor Langstaff was busy organizing Walden's children into a church body.

There is room for 400 children in the brick building, which measures 48 by 100 feet. Already the congregation includes children of the Roman Catholic, Orthodox Greek, Hebrew, Dutch Reformed, Baptist and Methodist faiths, in addition to the Episcopalian children from Dr. Langstaff's own church, St. Andrew's. The Sunday service begins promptly at 9:30 and lasts just a half hour. This permits the children to attend Sunday school services at their respective churches following the cathedral service.

The half-hour service includes prayers, the recital of the Ten Commandments and the Apostle's Creed (that being the one used by most churches), the reading of the Gospel story, the sermon and hymns. It is all most serious, but done in a way to appeal to the child-fancy, and the children conduct the entire service, even to the preaching (or reading) of the sermon. They will take turns for all offices so that each may have his turn at being a senior warden, junior warden, member of the vestry, minister and so on.

"As one goes back into the early history of the Church, one finds most charming things that are sure to appeal to children. For the Cathedral for All Children I have taken from all churches whatever I thought would appeal to the child, trying to avoid slavishly copying anything by adapting the ideas to child needs and child fancies," Dr. Langstaff explained. "The ecclesiastical service has acquired much that is for grown-ups only. The child must have simple things, but things which retain all the original charm and beauty. The child likes symbolism, but it needs a symbolism it can understand, a symbolism differing from that of the regular church service."

Between the chancel and the nave is an image screen. By means of a magic lantern, pictures are thrown on the screen above the huge doors that open into the sanctuary. Part of the screen is utilized to show reproductions of paintings by the world's great artists. During service the prayers, the creed, the Commandments and the hymns are flashed on the screen.

When the service begins, the doors in the screen are opened by two boys. A third, who stands in the centre of the doorway, announces "The Lord is in his holy temple. Let all the earth keep silence before him." During the reading of the gospel story a suitable illustration is flashed upon the screen, the actions of reader and operator being properly timed. No reference whatever is made to the slide, but the children are helped to visualize the lesson, also their attention is held.

Music is furnished by an orchestra and miniature pipe organ with child players and two choirs, one of thirty boys, the other of thirty-five girls. The boys' choir, which leads the procession, takes its place in the front of the church, and the girls' choir goes into the singing gallery at the back. They sing antiphonally; one choir sings one verse and the other the next. This has been found to attract the attention and overcome fidgeting in the child congregation.—York Times Magazine.

Old Days and New

A West Virginia newspaper tells the story of a town of five thousand inhabitants that may be duplicated by the score throughout the United States today. This paper relates:

"A dozen years ago Benwood had a population of less than five thousand people, forty-eight saloons, a butcher shop, two grocery stores, a drug store and the reputation of being one of the toughest towns on the map. All the saloon quarters are now hotels, restaurants, confectioneries and other legitimate businesses.

"In the old days it was not safe for a man to walk up Main street on Sunday, when all saloons were supposed to be closed. Now the most-used street is filled with women, who go to church unmolested.

"The saloons in the old days did a land office business.

"Less than 25 per cent of the citizen then owned their own homes and in many instances had the greater part of their pay attached at the mills before pay day.

"Now 80 per cent of the local people own their own homes, have automobile and in many instances bank accounts. Officials of the Benwood bank say that there are about one thousand accounts at that bank owned by workingmen now."

Caught by the Blue Pencil

"HE accomplished what he had set out to do even although he was beset on every side."

Although means even though; use either even though or although.

"The church was formerly dedicated, when it was the intention of the writer to convey the information that the building was formally dedicated.

BOYS and Girls

If Wishes Were Horses!

THERE was, once upon a time, a fairy. She was quite tiny and quite serious. Not at all the frivolous kind, forever fluttering her wings and flying off here or there. So when she said to the two young men: "I will give you your hearts' desire; you have but to name it," they both knew she meant what she said. So the dark young man whispered his wish in her tiny ear, and instantly she waved her wand and things began to happen—

As for the fair young man he had whispered his wish in the fairy's other ear, and instantly she waved her wand and things began to happen, thick and fast—

Until, really you know, it was hard to tell which of the two young men was busier or more conspicuous.

For the dark young man found himself at the head of a marvelous parade, on a capering horse which danced and pranced to the music of a marvelous band. The parade followed the dark young man down miles and miles and miles of city streets, lined with people who waved their hands and wiped their eyes and cried: "Goodbye! Goodbye! Come back soon!" And the parade finally got outside the city into the suburbs, outside the suburbs into the country, outside the country into another country altogether; so that what started out to be a parade ended up in a very long deep ditch, and that night the sky was scarlet with the flash of tremendous guns and the fire of gigantic bombs. By morning many of the men who had been in the parade were lying all crumpled up in a sad little heap of sickness or pain or death, as the case might be, for such is the end of such a parade for half of that parade.

All this time the fair young man was busy. Very busy. And he too had a parade, of a kind. But not the kind which marched conspicuously down city streets. No one stood around for hours to watch him lead his followers. For the followers trickled away from the city one at a time, in a very hurried fashion, some in autos, some in ambulances, some in trains, all of them hurrying pell-mell in the very direction where the dark young man had led his parade. And the next morning, when half of that parade lay crumpled in sad little heaps of sickness or pain or death, there stood the dark young man with his parade of stretcher-bearers, ambulances, nurses, doctors, waiting to do what could be done to mend the pain and sickness. So after that, wherever the dark young man went the fair young man went also, and the dark young man's parade was also spick-and-span, in towns, so that people thought it must be wonderful to belong to it; but the fair young man grew pale and frail and tired, because he knew that away from the towns the other parade would again boom its guns and again burst its bombs, and again become sick or in pain.

So one day their fairy caught up with them, and she said in her serious fashion: "Dark young man, do you wish you had wished a different wish?"

And the dark young man bowed his head: "My wish has brought only trouble wherever I go. Where is the glory in heading a parade?"

But when the fairy asked the fair young man he raised his head, and said: "My wish has brought only relief and help wherever I go. There is an unseen glory in heading my parade, but still I am very unhappy because of the terror of the people I see."

Then the fairy smiled her serious smile and waved her wand: "I will undo the wishes you wished. It shall be as if they never had happened." Dark young man, what will you wish this time?"

But the dark young man was wise. "Let the fair young man wish first. His thoughts are fair where mine are dark. What he chooses I will choose. His is the glory that lasts."

Love Your Enemies

By JESSIE J. JOHNSTON

Lincoln, Neb.

JESUS said to love your enemies and I guess when Christians fight all the time he thinks that nobody pays much attention to what he commanded people 1926 years ago. It is hard to love your enemies because they don't love you, but my mother often tells my brother that it takes two to make a fight, and he needn't be one of the two. If Jesus hates war that ought to be enough to stop Christians from fighting.

War Is Wrong

By CARMEL ANDERSON

Brooklyn, N. Y.

WAR is wrong because it kills people, because it makes innocent people suffer terribly, because it settles nothing, and because the Bible especially says "Thou shalt not kill." I go sometimes to a hospital where soldiers cannot get well from wounds they got in the World War, and it is very sad to see them limping around, all their lives spoiled, and they all say, "It didn't make the world safe anyhow, look at the fighting still going on."

"No More Parades"

By NORMAN CLARK
Philadelphia

THIS is the title of a new book. I have not seen the book but I saw the title and I think it is probably about war, and if there were no more parades the people watching on the sidewalks would not get so thrilled over bands and uniforms. For when soldiers parade by everybody feels excited by the music and the fine uniforms and the soldiers walking in step. There are times when I think it would be lots of fun to be a soldier but that is only on parade days, for I would not like to kill any one and I would not want to live in muddy trenches or feel that I was making orphans and widows. That was a fine story about Mopsie's Town of Contentment, where all the contentment was smashed when peace was smashed too. I think war is wrong because God said thou shalt not kill, and to kill is therefore wrong, whoever I kill, so I hope we will not have any more parades. For no good can come from it, as it settles nothing.

Young People Know Better

By PRUDENCE HOPKINS
Worcester, Mass.

WHEN my brother was in college he went to a big conference of students in Indianapolis, out west, and he said all those thousands of young people voted never to fight. I think this is because they know better than people did before the world war, and they won't do anything so useless again as killing other young people and making people sadder instead of happier. I know I will never let my brother fight, and he is opposed to war anyway. War is wrong because God told Moses to tell everybody, "Thou shalt not kill." Killing strangers in some distant trench with bombs is just as bad as killing some one you know nearby.

War

By ELIZABETH PARKER
Spokane, Washington

SOME good can come out of war, for instance in the Civil war. Much good resulted in it. War is not Christian. I think God must be grieved by all the wars that are continually raging in Asia and such countries. It is very wrong because one of the commandments is thou shalt not kill. I know the heathens must think it queer to have Christians go against their own principles. The last war, the World War, did not settle anything satisfactorily. War kills many of our best men. Now it is up to the young people to try to stop wars and, instead, arbitrate. Therefore why can't we abandon war and then it surely would be "peace on earth."

With The Board of Missionary Cooperation

The Canvasses Are On

This is the season of the year when numbers of Baptist churches are busy getting their budgets for the next year pledged. It is cheering to receive in the morning mail letters from churches which have decided to increase their missionary giving, have just voted to use the monthly payment method, or are successfully introducing the Every-Member plan.

At its annual meeting on Apr. 9, the Baptist church of Metuchen, N. J., adopted its budget for the ensuing year. They fixed $750 as their benevolence goal—an increase of 25 per cent over the previous year, and voted to send it in monthly as heretofore. The pastor, Rev. Calvin A. Hare, reports that the meeting was a fine one, with splendid spirit in evidence. "The Every-Member plan is now in full swing," he writes on Apr. 10.

Systematic financial methods and growing missionary interest seem to have been good for the life of this church, for last year their membership was increased by 18.8 per cent, and their church school enlarged accordingly.

The First Baptist church in West Chester, Pa., is making its Every-Member canvass late in April, and the pastor wrote in March, "We are now at work on the details of putting on the canvass, and find a fine spirit of cooperation."

Courage and Faith in This Local Church

The trustees and deacons of the Church of the Redeemer in Yonkers, N. Y., Rev. Robert Ashworth, pastor, recently held a joint meeting. There the question of raising the full quota by Apr. 30 was brought up and discussed. The trustees and deacons decided that in case they did not collect the full amount of their quota by the end of the fiscal year, it was not fair that the denomination's missionary work should suffer or that it should be obliged to pay interest on borrowed money because local churches did not meet their obligations. They decided to set an example in this respect and voted accordingly that if any money remained unpaid on the missionary quota by Apr. 30, the church itself should borrow the remainder so that the full amount of the quota might be turned in to the denomination. They decided that they would not count the money taken in through the self-denial banks on their quota but would send this in as an over and above offering. They also voted to increase their missionary goal for the next year.

This page is conducted by the Board of Missionary Cooperation, New York City, as a medium for circulating items about local churches which are carrying on their own and denominational projects in an effective way. If your church has developed any interesting ideas or methods we shall be glad to have you write about them to the Board, at 276 Fifth Avenue. Brief outlines of denominational plans, important news, etc., will also appear here from time to time.

Thanks Its Members For Liberality

"The Reminder" is the title of the weekly calendar issued by the First church of Haddonfield, N. J., Rev. Paul Hayne, pastor. In the Apr. 25 issue appeared the following note:

"The missionary committee desires to thank the membership for their loyalty and liberality to the cause of world-wide missions during the fiscal year which closes on Friday, Apr. 30. A detailed report will be published in next week's Reminder."

More Church Calendars

Since the last article we printed on this page about mimeographed calendars in small churches in rural communities, three interesting new ones have been sent to us. One comes from a little country church in Mexico, N. Y., and another from Bath, in the same state. The latter, in addition to printing the church service and local announcements contains striking quotations, facts about Baptist mission work on various fields, and items of Baptist history. The pastor of the First church in Hoosick Falls, N. Y., has been personally responsible for the printing and circulation of calendars in his church, and he has produced a very attractive little leaflet. The calendars have been mimeographed on gray paper with a cover design drawn on the first page showing a sketch of the church.

A Nebraska Pioneer

Rev. Henry G. Smith, pastor of the Second church in Lincoln, Neb., sends us a note in which he says, "Our church voted unanimously last evening to send one-twelfth of its missionary quota to state headquarters each month. This is the first church in this state to take this action though I am sure it will not be the last."

Early in the fiscal year, 1926-27, we want to remind the denomination about the stairway which was featured so much last summer.

The white steps represent the ideal method of paying in money required for denominational purposes—one-twelfth every month. The black steps show the results of neglect—easy going at first, then a crushing burden of $100,000 a year interest charges, a goal out of reach, and every Northern Baptist activity crippled.

If each Northern Baptist church will adopt an adequate missionary quota early in the present fiscal year, and send one-twelfth of it to the state office each month, the denomination will achieve its budget goal in April, 1927, without worry or strain, by means of the white stairway.

Among Ourselves

A British Causerie

BY FREDERICK C. SPURR

I AM just back from Wales where the annual meetings of the National Free Church Council have been held. I have been attending these meetings off and on for nearly twenty-five years, and I return with the conviction that the meetings just concluded have reached high-water mark. Rev. Thomas Nightingale is a great genius for this kind of work, and his general program this year has revealed his insight in a striking way. The subject has been "conciliation and cooperation," and it has been treated from all points of view; religious, national, industrial and international. Nothing could have been more timely, for nothing is more urgent than these two things. Capital and labor; State church and Free church; Briton and foreigner, have spoken together in the language of conciliation which is the language of Christ. The spirit of the meetings has been wonderful. Naturally there have been different points of view expressed, but in every utterance the spirit of Christ has appeared. The daily press, with the exception of the Northcliffe section, has devoted large space each day to a report of the assembly. Of course I cannot attempt anything like a record of the happenings, but I propose to offer a few impressions.

Prophetic Preaching

First of all there has been great preaching of a prophetic character. We have had no nice dainties of sugary rhetoric served up; the time is too serious for that kind of foolery. Doctor Hutton struck a great note on the first night when after a wide sweep he brought us round to the cross. His sermon was a remarkable piece of psychological insight and it was delivered with amazing passion; an apostle was speaking to us. Dr. Charles Williams, whom I heard for the first time, is an artist and he possesses the grand style, so rare in these days. I almost envied him his leisure. He is the minister of a tiny church hidden away in North Wales, and he preaches once or twice a month in his own church and the rest of his time all over the land. He has practically no parish duties, hence he can devote all his time to sermon preparation. No wonder he preaches so well. He is in enormous demand throughout the country. It would be well if a few more men of outstanding gifts could be similarly released. Rev. Henry Cook, the successor of Charles Brown, was another of the preachers and he too has the prophetic gift. It fell to my lot to deliver the closing address of the conference, and I could not refrain from remarking that we had with us today as great men as any in the past. We are too fond of saying that the great preachers are all dead. Do not believe it. Some of the speakers at Llandrindod Wells are every bit as great as any of the giants of the past whom we never cease to praise. Let us thank God for the unbroken succession of the Apostles of Jesus Christ. Church union of course came up for discussion. It was felt by all that the Anglo-Catholic movement in this country stands in the way of any real church union. The Rome-ward movement must be resisted; we cannot associate ourselves with it. We feel that the very life of evangelical religion and all human liberties are threatened by a system that enthrones the priest and belittles the saving work of Christ.

I had the great joy and honor of sitting day by day at the same table in the hotel with Doctor Deissman of Berlin, Doctor Keller of Zurich, and Mons Paul Fuzier of Paris—a rare trio of continental worthies. Doctor Deissman is probably the greatest scholar in Europe today. He is a man of great charm and wonderful modesty. Out of his vast store of learning he poured forth daily the most helpful things. I was glad to learn that a new edition of his famous book "Light from the Ancient East" will appear in the autumn. This book when it first appeared marked a new epoch in New Testament study. The new edition will take us much farther on. The most dramatic moment of the conference was when, after two addresses by Doctor Deissman and M. Fuzier, the president bade the entire audience stand while he commended to God the representatives of France and Germany standing together on the same platform and united in the love of the same Saviour. It was an object lesson to the world of the sole way in which reconciliation can be effected. The church holds that secret. A final word about the president of the Free Church Council who this year is Dr. Elvet Lewis, poet, preacher, mystic and Arch Druid of Wales. A more beautiful soul I do not know. He seems to me to possess the perpetual vision of God. Gentle, forceful, scholarly and brotherly, he has charmed us all. He is a living example of the union of knowledge and love. It was a benediction to be with him. The Free churches are safe enough so long as men of his power and piety are granted to us.

Baptists and Reunion

It is six years since the bishops of the Anglican church issued the famous Lambeth appeal for reunion. The Baptist reply has now been published. The delay is well accounted for. Many negotiations have been entered into with a view of arriving at a better understanding of what was really meant by certain terms used by the bishops. And on our side there have been many difficulties, not easy to overcome. It will generally be admitted, I think, that our answer is noble, firm, and yet conciliatory. The points stressed are: Infant baptism which we regard as subverting the conception of the church as the fellowship of believers only; Episcopal ordination as a sine qua non of a valid ministry which we cannot accept; and the church with its state connection. The general conclusion is that union of such a kind as the bishops have contemplated is not possible for us. But we say that the time has come when there should be a "federation of equal and autonomous churches united to meet the crying needs of the world." Many of us are persuaded that on this line alone can there be that real union between Christians which is so necessary if the world is to be won for Christ. The Baptist witness is more than ever needed in the presence of sacerdotalism which means spiritual backwardness and degradation. I wonder what the next step will be. The next move is with the bishops.

Easter in Paris

After Llandrindod I went to Paris where I spent Holy Week and early Easter. I went over expressly to hear two preachers; Wilfred Monod of the Oratoire, and the new "star" at Notre Dame. Last year there burst upon Paris out of the blue a man whose name was entirely unknown to the general public. He came without reputation and commenced a Lent at Notre Dame. Within a week France rang with his name. Each Sunday forthwith ten to twelve thousand people stormed the doors of the cathedral several hours before the hour of service. Half of them had to leave disappointed. Loud speakers were Donation receipts, including lone star, approximately $4,965,000, representing almost same amount raised last year excluding lone star $300,000 below last year. These results are encouraging in that we have stopped serious for year downward trend in missionary giving. They are disastrous in that we are $660,000 under operating budgets.

installed so that those in the farthest corners of the vast basilica could hear the preacher. I read his sermons as they were published week by week, and it was apparent that a new voice was lifting itself up. People said that Lacordaire had returned; others that a new Savonarola had been raised up. I heard this preacher Père Sanson four or five times and I am bound to admit that he mightily impressed me. People may have exaggerated his importance in comparing him with the mighty orators of the past, but there can be no doubt that he has impressed Paris as no one else has done for many a year. On Good Friday night the place was jammed with a vast multitude of men. I had to fight my way in and only secured a seat as a writer for the press. The sermon lasted seventy minutes, and it swept the audience like a storm wind. I heard no word from this Catholic preacher that Spurgeon might not have uttered. He preached Christ and him crucified, and in this I rejoiced. I ask myself whether he will continue to preach in this manner or whether he will become a tool, like so many others, in the hands of the papacy. If the latter, then his sun will soon set. His immense success has been due to his fearless preaching of Christ. As I listened to him I remembered that from that same pulpit Father Hyacinthe once preached, and that when he was brave enough to resist the papal dogma of infallibility he was speedily silenced. France is in so sorry a plight that one can only thank God for any voice that is raised on behalf of the gospel, even if that voice does not proclaim all that we know to be the truth of God. M. Wilfred Monod greatly attracts me, naturally because he is a Protestant, and especially because I am greatly indebted to him for much inspiration. He is the author of thirty books and any minister possessing them is rich indeed. I heard him on Good Friday morning, and stayed to the communion afterwards. The simplicity of the service was in striking contrast to the garishness of the Roman ritual. At the Oratoire I felt nearer to the spirit of the Upper Room than I ever felt amidst the splendor of the tinted cathedral.

West China Letter

By JOE TAYLOR

THE other day, there came into my study a man whom I and most missionaries in Chengtu delight to honor and listen to. He was on his way from Tachienlu for furlough. Tachienlu is a city eight days beyond Yachow on the way to Tibet. It is the meeting place for Chinese and Tibetans who come for trade. The tea that is packed in Yachow is carried on the backs of men to Tachienlu and then transported over the mountains to Lhasa. At Tachienlu, the China Inland mission has a station and Mr. Edgar—my visitor—has been stationed there for some years. Once upon a time he went into Batang to work. This is the jumping-off place between China and Tibet; and it is the town where the heroic Doctor Shelton of the Foreign Christian mission was stationed at the time of his tragic death. That death consecrated the town and district and eight families and a single woman hold it for our God and his Christ. It takes a special grade of missionary to live up there—one who is not afraid of

A Treasure Offered

"WATCHING"

By MRS. EMILY C. JUDSON
Amherst (Burmah) 1849

*"On the pagoda spire
The bells are swinging,
Their little golden circlet in a flutter
With tales the wooing winds have dared to utter,
Till all are ringing,
As if a choir
Of golden-nested birds in heaven were singing;
The music floats around,
And drops like balm into the drowsy ear;
Commingle with the hum
Of the Sepoy's distant drum,
And lazy beetle ever droning near.
.....
The bells a melancholy murmur ring,
As tears were in the sky."*

Editor of THE BAPTIST.

Dear Sir:

In this time of anxiety when we all fear lest we finish the fiscal year of our missionary societies with a deficit, I have thought of a treasure which I would exchange for money to offset any debts or curtailments to the missionaries' salaries or their working plans.

It is a pagoda bell which was originally from the top of the Schway da Gong pagoda, Rangoon, Burmah, and was sent to me by my brother, Rev. Louis Agassiz Gould, formerly pastor of the Highland Park church, when he was visiting Burmah.

It is, according to the director of the East India department of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, "probably bronze". A bronze leaf belongs with it, being a copy of a leaf belonging to a tree supposed to be a "sacred" tree. The bell with the leaf weighs sixteen ounces.

It is three and a half inches high, two and a half inches in diameter. The leaf is four and a quarter inches long. There are decorative lines cut in the bell, three near the top, five lower down; all encircling the bell.

I would pay express charge to any purchaser when found. I am not now able, on account of an auto accident to go about and seek a purchaser although it has been offered at church.

Considering our Baptist work in Burmah and other East India missions, I feel that the price should be set at $50.

The poem, by Mrs. Emily C. Judson was not written at Rangoon, but at Amherst, near enough to Rangoon to know how the bells there sound.

Hoping for the desired result, I am

Yours faithfully,

loneliness. But there they are; getting Tibetans ready to carry the gospel into their own country. Not that all Tibetans live in Tibet; they roam the plateau and the mountains lying between Szechuan and Tibet proper. It is inviting to go on and tell something about these intrepid missionaries of the cross; but I must get back to Edgar.

He has the Tibetan language and is using it in various ways to get the gospel across to the Tibetans. One way is to translate it and its teachings into the language of Lhasa. This Edgar is doing and thereby making a very great contribution to the spread of this gospel on the "Roof of the World." But any one who knows the man will at once agree that he cannot be tied down to a desk, dictionary and pen. He is a son of the open road and wide spaces. He pines away in a city. So he goes out after the Tibetans and mingles with them. He told me that within the last three years he has put 500,000 books and large tracts into circulation among the nomads. This is far more than the figures, big though they be, signify. It connotes snowdrifts and merciless winds. Rough roads, hard travel with coarse food; loneliness and dangers from unsafe roads and robbers; all these are part of the day's work for one who goes after Tibetans. Mr. Edgar visits the camps of the Tibetan traders with a table, stool and a pack of books and tracts. He spreads out his wares and begins to talk. He believes that a speaker should make himself picturesque and so get a crowd. He lets it be known that he is possessed of false teeth which he can put into and take out of his mouth. The more strange features he can get into the picture the more do the people want to see him. That is his first objective—get the crowd. Then he begins to talk and glides into the gospel story. This he keeps up for four or five hours. Then he gets back to town and distributes more tracts there. At times he sits outside the gate of the mission compound and just talks with any one who cares to stop; but sooner or later he begins the distribution of literature. Why? Because a caravan sometimes stays for only a few hours and then is off again in the direction of Lhasa.

Tibetan Script

Perhaps some one will question: Can those Tibetans read? That is not of first consequence; for every Tibetan family has a lama in it and he can read and will do so, even if only to show that he can. So these books and tracts get read. And they travel all over Tibet and the hills about it. Camps are strewn all over the plateau and caravans are continually going back and forth between Tachienlu and the capital of the lamas. The Tibetan script is revered by the people, so little is lost. Once the tract has been got into the hands of a nomad it will be cared for.

Lhasa is the center of Lamaism and is the Mecca of the Tibetans. But even yet the foreigner is not welcomed there; indeed he is not safe anywhere in Tibet. So the only means open at present is to send in Christian literature to the folks.

Some of it will get into the lamasaries and be read by the priests. Some will go into the shops and be discussed by the people. Some will be found in the tents of the herders out on the hillsides. Where it will enter the heart and begin to work, no one can tell. But one indefatigable missionary took lots of comfort and encouragement from the fact that Paul may plant and Apollos may water but God giveth the increase, Edgar's share is to plant; we can water by our prayers and eternity will alone reveal the harvest. Last year in spite of the chaotic state of the country, of oppression by soldiers and officials and raids by robbers, this apostle of the Tibetan highlands disposed of 76,000 books.

I said that Mr. Edgar was coming through Chengtu on his way to the coast on furlough. Well, even this is not to be a regulation affair if our friend can help it. He has suggested to his mission that he be allowed to spend his furlough in Eastern Turkestan. The China Inland mission has one station in that country opened by a missionary whom they cannot persuade to come out for furlough. So they sent a young man in to keep him company. This young man's furlough is due; and Edgar proposes that he be sent as relief so that the Solitary may have another white man with him. He does this because he thinks that he will get an opportunity of following up some investigations on which he has put years of study as to the origin of Lamaism. Near this lonely outpost of Christianity, he hopes to find material that will help to establish his theory as to whence sprang this wonderfully virile religion of Tibet. Some advance the theory that it is an offshoot of Buddhism and have certain facts on which to found their claim. Mr. Edgar is looking in another direction and so wants to get into Eastern Turkestan after further evidence for his theory. One furlough he spent among the Maori of Australia. He is never quite so happy as when he is in some out of the way corner of the world delving into the beginnings of a religion. With all his simple methods of work in spreading the gospel this man is a very close student of anthropology—indeed can write a good share of the alphabet after his name when he has time to do so. He has been called the Livingstone of the Tibetan Marches. Now, perhaps, you can understand why I was delighted when I opened my study door and found him standing on the threshold.

The Evangelistic Program for Next Year

BY FRANK A. SMITH

THE evangelistic campaign in the Northern Baptist Convention, which has been signally blessed during the present year, is to be continued for the year to come. There is a widespread feeling that the task is only begun and that it ought to be carried forward to completion until every section has been reached. Returns received thus far would indicate that there has been great success in certain districts. It is desirable that this blessing should be brought to every hamlet and every home. Each year there is a new generation of young people to be won for Christ. Our great cities are a tremendous challenge to our gospel, and the first duty of Christ's church is to win men to him. For this reason the cooperating committee on evangelism announces the following program for 1926 and '27:

First: To complete the organization of states and associations. The complete organization has been delayed for several reasons. In some instances only the state has been organized and some of the associations have not yet undertaken systematic work. In the effort to reach every church in the Northern Baptist Convention this complete organization is the only open road, and it is desirable that it should be effected.

Second: To recommend to state conventions and associations that evangelism be given a very prominent place on the annual program. Many pastors and churches desire to engage in evangelistic work but they need inspiration to set them going. In addition to the pastors the lay members will be confronted with their privilege to win men and women to Jesus Christ.

Third: To emphasize especially the evangelism of youth. Three avenues of approach are open. First, the Bible school. Second, the young people's society. Third, the schools and colleges. A special committee consisting of Dr. W. E. Chalmers of the department of religious education of the American Baptist Publication Society, Mr. Edwin Phelps of the Baptist Young People's Union of America and Dr. H. F. Stilwell, superintendent of evangelism of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, was appointed to consider the first two items, namely, Bible schools and young people's societies, and present a plan. Another committee, consisting of Doctor Stilwell and Dr. George R. Baker of the board of education, was appointed to consider the third item, namely, schools and colleges, and present a plan. When these plans have been carefully considered a definite program for the evangelism of youth will be presented to the denomination.

Fourth: To hold regional conferences in those sections of the Northern Baptist Convention which were not covered last year. Many requests have come asking for these conferences and their value has been amply demonstrated. The dates and places have not been announced but will be planned in such a way that they will not conflict with the programs of the state and national organizations:

Fifth: To hold simultaneous evangelistic campaigns in a given city. In these meetings all the churches will be expected to unite, and the cooperating organization will endeavor to furnish the very best evangelists and workers possible. The details of this cooperation are not complete and the cities have not been selected, but already requests have been received from several communities. During the present year some experiments were conducted along this line and gave great promise of the effectiveness of this type of evangelism.

Sixth: To request that February and March be definitely set aside by the denomination for special emphasis in evangelism. The fact that many churches and many pastors reserve this time for the final evangelistic effort of the winter is a weighty reason why, during this period, evangelism should have the right of way.

The committee announced last year that it did not restrict its interest to any single type of evangelism, recognizing that local conditions rightly determine the type of work, and that the Holy Spirit will bless all efforts put forth in sincerity and in truth to win men to Christ. It desires to reaffirm this position. In many places there is a growing conviction that personal visitation is the most effective method. In others the extended meetings are preferred. It must be recognized that behind every human effort there lurk dangers that grow out of human frailty, and wise methods of conservation must be employed. It must also be recognized that God has promised that his word shall not return to Him void.

There are seasons of the soul. There are special days in the church when the appeal comes with unusual emphasis; and there are often distinctive crises in the community life, or in personal experience, when the hearts of men are open and responsive. There are tides of emotion and popular sentiment when men and women are swept on a current up to the throne of God, and above all, the Spirit of God "bloweth where it listeth." Our great aim should be to preach Christ and his saving gospel in all these ways. The pastor who is in reality a "man of God" will lead his people so that there may be a united church for a great year in evangelism.

Impending Changes in Foreign Missions

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

THE leading editorial in THE BAPTIST of April 17, "Neither Jew Nor Greek," is most timely. It reflects the situation accurately when it states that "changes in the missionary landscape within the last fifteen years, although not unexpected to careful observers, have been marvelous." It shows true discernment again when it declares that "problems of the most grave and fundamental sort are involved." Indeed, the editorial as a whole sounds a prophetic note. Many missionaries will rejoice that at home there is a growing understanding of the rapid changes in the Orient which will inevitably have a bearing on the missionary program.

If our eyes are open to discern the signs of the times, and if we are given wisdom and bravery to adjust our methods to the rapidly changing conditions, the outlook is inspiring "in the missionary landscape." One dislikes to think of consequences should we miss the way. At such an hour the missionaries, boards and executive officers are the first to admit wisdom is insufficient and that there must be fresh reliance on God for guidance. At this crucial moment in the missionary enterprise the denominational papers are in a position to render far-reaching service through a sympathetic and intelligent interpretation of conditions in the Orient and the world at large. Too much cannot be done by them to give the denomination an understanding of the problems, and a confidence that He who has led us thus far will point the way for the future.

For several years the boards of managers of our own two Foreign Mission societies have been aware that changes in methods were impending, and with a view to a fresh study of conditions affecting our work and an inquiry as to necessary readjustments about forty missionaries from our ten fields were invited to sit recently for two weeks in serious conference in New York City, after a year or more of preparation for such a gathering. That conference endeavored to ascertain what changes, if any, in attitude and methods are required to enable us to do our part more quickly and more surely in the effort to realize the ideals of the pioneer missionaries and to achieve our own objectives, which are one and the same, namely, the redemption of men everywhere through their acceptance of Christ as Saviour and Lord. The conference did much through its suggestions to the missions and the boards to prepare the way for the inevitable readjustments if the Christians of the western world are to cooperate most helpfully with oriental churches which, even though weak and struggling in most cases, are coming into self-consciousness and a desire for autonomy and freedom for self-expression.

Many missionaries are wondering how quickly the churches in America can be given a sympathetic understanding of the kaleidoscopic changes on the mission fields and the consequent necessity for changes in attitude and methods. They are earnestly asking, too, if the churches at home, in the light of new conditions, will feel the thrill of the new challenge and in prayer and sacrifice rise to meet the problems and promise of the days ahead. In this connection THE BAPTIST and other journals can render a great service.

North Dakota News

By FRED E. STOCKTON

FRANK D. HALL of Fargo, president of the North Dakota State Convention, was taken suddenly ill several days ago and is in a serious condition in his home. Overwork for several years as superintendent of the North Dakota children's home was responsible for the physical breakdown.

Rev. A. A. Holmes, pastor of the Bismarck church, is in Mounds Park sanitarium, St. Paul, recovering from a nervous breakdown. During the past year Mr. Holmes has received forty-one by baptism and seventeen by letter and experience into the membership of the Bismarck church.

Noah E. McCoy, pastor of the Guthrie church, was ordained to the gospel ministry on Mar. 23. Dr. Fred E. Stockton, convention superintendent, was moderator of the council and Rev. J. N. Start of Glenburn, clerk.

Rev. H. M. Wyrick, pastor of the First church of Grand Forks, reports eighty-four additions to the church during the past year, fifty of these by baptism, with no special meetings. A personal work and Sunday school campaign was carried on under the direction of the pastor.

Olaf Carl Hogfelt, pastor at Rutland reports fifteen baptisms as a result of the special meetings held by Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Aldridge.

Dr. H. R. Best of the First church Fargo, reports fifty-seven additions during the year, thirty by baptism. Work on the new Sunday-school plant will begin at an early date.

Rev. C. F. Brown of Shellrock, Iowa has accepted a call to the Roseglen church and will begin work about June 1. Roseglen is located on the edge of the Berthold Indian reservation and is about twenty miles from the railroad.

Rev. C. W. Finwall, pastor of the Fargo Calvary Baptist Church, reports fourteen additions by baptism and six by letter and restoration.

Rev. S. E. Gregg of Bottineau has received thirteen new members since beginning his work at Bottineau last July. Fourteen others are awaiting baptism as soon as the weather permits.

Rev. William C. Erickson, pastor at Kenmare and Niobe, reports eight baptisms and twelve received otherwise. Mr. Erickson has conducted two series of meetings at Norma, and reports fifteen conversions.

Rev. W. E. Pool at Minot reports seven baptisms and fourteen received by letter. The state convention will meet with the Minot church, Sept. 30-Oct. 3.

Rev. Bengt Anderson, pastor of the Swedish Baptist Church at Kulm, has been appointed by the foreign mission board for work in Assam. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will start for their new mission field next September.

Rev. W. A. Weyhrauch of Valley City has received twenty-five by baptism since May 1 and sixteen by letter and otherwise. Rev. Ira L. Deal of Waterloo, Iowa, conducted a series of meetings at Valley City preceding Easter.

Rev. J. Maurice Hupp of Jamestown is enthusiastic about the results of the two recent revivals held in that city. Fifty-two have been baptized since Feb. 1. Eleven have been received by letter and otherwise. Mr. Hupp anticipates that at least twenty-five others will be baptized in the near future.

Rev. O. H. Hallgrimson of the graduating class of Northern Baptist Theological Seminary of Chicago has accepted a call to the church at Ellendale and will take up the work immediately following the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Rev. G. E. Sprong has served as interim pastor at Ellendale during the winter.

H. G. Ellsworth, of the graduating class of Bethel Seminary, will become pastor at Lone Tree following his graduation.

Rev. Ellis L. Jackson of Red Deer, Alberta, Canada, has accepted a call to become pastor of the First church ofilage. He will take up his work as soon as school closes.

A number of students have been engaged for work during the summer. Harold B. Oyer will serve the Sawyer church; Alvin Johnson the Mandan church; Clarence Wallin the Deapolis church, and Lloyd Lenning the Coleharbor church. Ralph Erickson and Mr. Meseneaur will spend the summer on the Powers Lake district.

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

A Great and Beautiful Charity

FOR a long time, the Massachusetts Baptist Home has delayed its necessary expansion, on account of other large and pre-occupying drives that have come in succession, and nearly overwhelmed us. Indeed the certain succession almost banished the word "drive" from our vocabulary.

But strange enough, we are opening our Baptist arms to a great drive as though it were a brand new thing, because of what we know of the sheer beauty and necessity of the enterprise. I am alluding to the Massachusetts Baptist Home now at Cambridge, where it occupies the former residence of Deacon W. Chipman of Tremont Temple, and the Lamson residence beside it. The home has quietly served there for 35 years, until it has proved no longer either suitable or adequate outfit. At last when the demand had come more than ample to exceed the supply, and another location at Newton in the beautiful Chestnut Reservoir district became available, the strong friends of the home rested upon the expansion. Deacon H. Kendall, our accomplished Baptist architect of Newton Center, has furnished an impressively complete plan, which will fully meet present needs and anticipate expanding requirements. It is really a scheme that fills us with pride.

A charity so perfect as the home ought to have a lovely and adequate setting.

A Good Start

Doubtless the princely bequest of $40,000 from Deacon O. M. Wentworth of Tremont Temple set the ball a rolling. Other noble gifts from Temple people will keep it going, and the "drive" will do the rest. It is perfectly organized, is now in motion, the competent and cheerful "teams" covering the churches, the churches too are as happy over it as if they would not have to be driven. It looks now as if any good Baptist guilty of having money would never escape. It will take $300,000. When it is all done, and Deacon Kendall's beautiful building stands facing Commonwealth Avenue and backed to the picturesque Reservoir Country, it will be worthy of a pilgrimage.

Missionary Education Institutes

We are having a series of regional institutes in the state in the interest of missionary education. The last two were comparatively near the city. One at Leominster on Apr. 11, and the other at Stoughton Street church, Boston, on Apr. 12. They are planned and manned by the departments of Religious Education and Missionary Education in the State Convention, and the Northern Baptist Convention. The Dean of the first is Miss Gertrude Hartley of our State department, and the Dean of the second is Rev. Miles W. Smith, the head of our department of Religious Education in Massachusetts.

The institute team is composed of Rev. Floyd L. Carr, Miss Elsie P. Kappen, Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, Mrs. Perry A. Beck, and Miss Mary L. Noble, all field secretaries in the different specialties of our educational endeavor. The Institutes are carefully planned to attract our best workers, covering completely each educational feature, and are brief, snappy, suggestive, and informing. They pack into four hours the entire scheme of instruction and inspiration. They show how to lead in church and Sunday school endeavor, how to build their own local educational and missionary programs, and just how and why to organize and develop their own activities. All of the team know how to make a fire and keep it burning, and it is surprising how many of our workers come to catch some of the light and heat. Then the last evening hour brings our China missionary, Dr. Geo. A. Huntley, on for the cumulating and informing arousal. He is the best kind of a voice for our Board of Missionary Cooperation.

It Ought To Be Said

We are highly favored in our kindling and intelligent leadership in these matters. The large, trained, and devoted following that it wins in our churches and Sunday schools, is clearing the air, and raising the standards in our religious instruction. Here in our state, gratefully do we remember Dr. Peterson our path-breaker, and as thankfully do we cherish Miles W. Smith, and Miss Gertrude

Hartley who are carrying on in devoted and often exhausting labors. The upshot of it all is a complete transformation on many of our local fields.

Some News Bits

It is a very pleasant and even exchange with New Hampshire that Massachusetts makes in gaining Rev. W. D. Swaffield for the sturdy church at Taunton, and in yielding Pastor C. Raymond Chappell, the young scholar of Middleboro, to the church at Keene, N. H., just vacated by Pastor Swaffield. The ministers were classmates at Brown, and chums at Newton, and their churches are in the same class, thus to all of them it will seem like the strong continuance of an old experience. Besides, it holds the jug level between two noble states.

Dr. Joseph C. Robbins, our Foreign Mission Secretary, always does us good. He is a great "pinch hitter" in world missions. Besides his actual knowledge of the world field, his practical experience as a missionary comes in. But his amplest endowment is his glorious optimism. This was proved again in his clinching little speech at the Ministers Conference on Apr. 26. He was facing some frowning figures just as the financial year was closing, but his optimism seemed the more solid when based, as it was, on his triumphant confidence in the churches.

The recent installation of Rev. W. Douglas Swaffield into the pastorate at Taunton had some unusual features. The Swaffield ministerial family majored in the program, the father, Pastor Swaffield of New Jersey giving the charge, and the brother, Pastor F. M. Swaffield of West Somerville offering the prayer. Ex-pastor J. V. Garton presided, and his successor, Dr. O. J. White of Watertown, gave the charge to the church. With a strong church, and an able minister, we shall look for steady success at Taunton.

Three Speakers

For the speaker at the May meeting of the Social Union, Dr. M. Joseph Twomey of Newark, N. J., was presented. His theme was "Dressed up Baptists." The subject piqued our curiosity, but the treatment justified it. He was insisting upon a "thinking cap" for Baptists in the face of present great issues upon which to exercise the loins of their minds, shoes in which to run upon holy errands, and the robe of Christ's righteousness to be both worn and adorned.

The other two speakers were at the ministers meetings Apr. 26 and May 3. The first was Professor Brightman, the commanding scholar and theologian of the Boston University Divinity School, on "Some Problems of Theism." It was a remarkably able address, timely to analyze the modern emphasis upon humanism, and the warranted insistence, which it provokes, upon the theistic argument. Professor Brightman regularly lectures to our theologues at Newton, and awakens responsive interest, confidence and admiration.

The address on May 3 was by Dr.

C. T. Brownell of First church, Haverhill, on the "Bible as Literature." It was a carefully wrought out paper, looking at the Book of Books from the angle of literary comparison. It showed familiarity with the biblical flavors and wonders of style, and acquaintance with our literary masters and their masterpieces.

"Looking to Washington"

Sympathetically is borrowed a heading from the letter of your Chicago correspondent. The average Baptist face looking to Washington lacks hope or expectancy. It wears something of dread as though "fears were in the way." All wonder why. The issues seem so small, so imaginary, so unnecessary, so out of drawing in the great spiritual perspective, so possible of solution to the really Christian temper. Why then the difficulty? THE BAPTIST gives us at least one answer in the printed abuse of President Mullins from the pen of the Toronto troubler who is afflicting the entire Dominion. The zealot who determines to be a traducer instead of a helper, is in the mind of many a Baptist as he looks to Washington.

David P. Ward

An Appreciation

By B. B. JACQUES

A MATCHLESS, eternal victory has been won, and yet a great loss has been sustained in the home-going of our brother, David P. Ward, who died at his late home in Pasadena, Calif., Apr. 14, 1926. His life was rich in service for and with his Master, and his death triumphant and complete in victory.

The writer first met him in the city of San Francisco a little over thirty years ago, on the day of arrival in the great western city to become missionary in charge of Chapel Car Emmanuel on the Pacific coast; or, rather, it would be more proper to say it was Mr. Ward who met the writer, for he had been on the coast a few months, having been sent out as Sunday-school missionary by the American Baptist Publication Society. His reception both in word and deed was most cheering and helpful, and there was begun a bond of union and fellowship that has continued through the years.

No one could ever get really acquainted with David P. Ward without loving him and being helped by him. He was preeminently a man of faith and of strong confidence in his God, but he believed that "faith without works is dead," and so untiringly he labored on in his God-given task until failing strength compelled him to lay it down.

His was comparatively pioneer work—"blazing the trail" for those who have succeeded him; but he made a safe and sure path, leaving nothing undone that he could possibly do.

Besides organizing hundreds of Sunday schools in Dakota and California, he was active in many other ways—such as conducting institutes and holding meetings, especially for the boys and girls in whom he always delighted. He also did a wonderful work as president of the two great summer assemblies, one at Twin Lakes in Northern California, and the other later at Long Beach in Southern California.

True in his belief in the Word of God, optimistic in his vision, clear in his thinking, clean in his character, cheerful in his disposition, considerate of others under all conditions, consistent in his consecration, and constant in his service, his life has ever been a benediction to all with whom he came in contact.

His life on earth is done, he rests from his labors, but his works will follow him.

Mrs. Celora E. Roe

By J. S. KIRTLEY

ON Monday morning, Apr. 12, there passed away from earth one of the most remarkable women I have ever known—Mrs. Celora E. Roe, of Elgin, Ill.

Everything about her seemed unusual.

She had unusual connections—she was a cousin of Ralph Waldo Emerson; a sister-in-law of the late Dr. Henry C. Mabie; mother of the late Charles M. Roe, widely known in publishing circles; mother of Fred W. Roe, a writer of stories for boys; widow of Rev. Charles T. Roe, pastor at Rockton and other places in Illinois; a true mother to an adopted son, A. E. Lundine.

She was unusually gifted—a fine musician both with the instrument and voice, though her talents were obscured by years of poor health; gifted with a keen insight into character and a still keener insight into truth; gifted with the power of effective self-assertion in a modest, humble and sympathetic way.

She was unusual in her attainments as a Christian. I have known many thousands of good men and women, but I have never known any one who surpassed her in ability to know God's mind and skill to apply it to all the problems and phases of life—her own and others. I have never met a person who understood God and knew how to deal with him in prayer better. Her prayers and counsels were of the highest value to me as her pastor in Elgin years ago.

Her education began in Rockford, Ill. high school and in the Jennings seminary at Aurora, Ill., but it had gone on in a superb self-discipline to the end. She had been growing in richness as the wife and effective helper of a minister in the home, in the Sunday school where she had served as both teacher and superintendent; and there was a saintliness in her that was full of attractive sanity.

She was unusual in the love and confidence that she always inspired. Shrouded up in her home for years, she was one of the mightiest factors in the prosperity of the First church in Elgin. People came to confer with her upon the most delicate and complex problems; and she had a way of throwing God's light on those problems in a most helpful way. The devotion of the good people of the Elgin church to her was beautiful beyond description. She had taught the Ann Judson class there and she had grown, in spite of her poor health, into the very heart of the church life. Her influence is still at work and always will be.

Mrs. A. B. Meeker

An Appreciation

By FANNY B. LESTER

WITH the passing of Mrs. A. B. Meeker, whose death occurred March 25, 1926, Chicago has lost almost the last one of that splendid group of women whose influence and work helped to lay the best foundations in both the religious and social life of the city.

Mrs. Meeker came to Chicago with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Griggs, when both she and the city were very young in 1845. While still a very young girl she united with the First church—Doctor Howard, one of its earlier pastors, was one of her cherished friends. Mrs. Meeker came of a family whose names will always hold an honored place in Baptist annals, and in Chicago's roll of distinguished citizens. Mr. Charles Walker, a pioneer who had much to do with bringing the first railroad into Chicago; Cyrus Bently, one of Chicago's foremost lawyers, and Mr. J. K. Burtis—all three were her uncles.

When she was eighteen, 1856, she married Mr. A. B. Meeker, one of Chicago's coming business men. Her wedding was the first large church wedding in Chicago. The ceremony was performed in a brick church, that was afterward taken down and rebuilt on the west side, where the Second church was formed. It is still used by that congregation as Aiken Institute. Dr. J. C. Burroughs was also one of her pastors. After he became president of the "old university" Mrs. Meeker became interested in the students, and many of these young men were the recipients of her help and gracious hospitality.

Mrs. Meeker never sought or wished to occupy a place of prominence, but all who knew her valued and often sought her wise counsel. When the Women's American Baptist Home Mission Society was organized, and all through those difficult and trying early years she worked on its board of managers. After many years of active service she continued as an honorary member of the board. She gave herself with untiring devotion to the establishment of the Missionary Training school and its missionaries often enjoyed the hospitality of her home.

When that fine group of 200 men and women left the beloved First church with Mr. George C. Lorimer to rehabilitate the Emmanuel (Michigan Avenue) church, Mrs. Meeker was among that number. At her burial service her pastor, Dr. Johnston Myers, paid a tender and appreciative tribute to her continued loyalty to the church. When she was no longer able to attend the services, a letter of encouragement for her pastor could always accompany her gifts.

Her two daughters, her son, her grandchildren and great-grandchildren rise up to call her blessed—and all those who have known her will cherish the memory of this strong and gracious personality that has pervaded the social and Christian community of which she has been a part for nearly three-quarters of a century.

Obituary.

Mary Palmer Cooper died Apr. 23 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Thomas Leete, Detroit, Mich., two days after her ninety-first birthday. She was the widow of Rev. James Cooper, D.D., a district secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Until shut-in by deafness, she was active in all Christian work. She is survived by Harriet P. Cooper and Mrs. Leete of Detroit; Rev. Henry C. Cooper of Perth Amboy, N. Y.; by twelve grandchildren and twelve great grandchildren. Services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Mark Johnson of the First Baptist church. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

FELLOWSHIP WITH CHRIST

It is with deep sorrow that we announce the death of Herbert Melville Brooks, for many years a conspicuous and consecrated leader in the Baptist forces in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The call to higher privileges and service came to Mr. Brooks suddenly on Tuesday evening, Apr. 13, at his home 134 South Bryant Avenue, Bellevue Station, Pittsburgh, Pa. He had recently returned from a short tour made in Christian service when the Master laid his hand upon him and said "Come with Me."

Mr. Brooks was born in New Brighton, Pa., in 1871, and removed when a youth to Allegheny (now a part of Pittsburgh) where he united with the Nixon Street Baptist church at the age of twelve years. From 1891 to 1910 his membership was with the old Fourth Avenue Baptist church of Pittsburgh, and during those years he served the church not only fully, being assistant superintendent in charge of the work among the Chinese, but also as president of the B. Y. P. U. of the Pittsburgh association and as an active worker in the Y. M. C. A. From 1910 to the time of his death he was associated with the First Baptist church of Bellevue.

For many years an able business man whose word was his bond, he applied his Christianity to business and was highly respected by his business associates. For the past several years his business necessitated his traveling much, but he neglected the work of the kingdom and he established "prayer leagues" in many places which he visited.

It was Nov. 1, 1925, that Mr. Brooks realized his ideal work when he became the day secretary of the Christian Laymen's Association, Pittsburgh. It was in this work that Mr. Brooks was most happy and the value of the service he rendered to the Christian Laymen's Association is incalculable.

The outstanding characteristics of Mr. Brooks' life were integrity, unflinching courtesy, devotion to the cause he represented and adherence to the Christian ideals which constituted the mainspring of his life. He was in very truth, a "Christian gentleman," with all that term implies; and besides losing a faithful co-worker we shall sadly miss the companionship of one whose friendship was an inspiration and whose counsel was always sane and thoughtful.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mae Brooks (formerly Miss Mae Beam, of Allegheny) and one daughter, Mrs. Eleanor Brooks Cotton; his mother, Mrs. B. A. Brooks; one sister, Mrs. J. Joyce, Mt. Oliver P. O., Pittsburgh; and four brothers—Dr. E. R. Brooks, Drexmore Road, Cleveland, Ohio; Clyde Brooks, Clinton Place, Bellevue, Pa.; Earle P. Brooks, Pasadena, California and Merle O. Brooks, Dewey Avenue, Ingram, Pa.

The Baptist church of Bellevue thus pays tribute to the gracious qualities of mind and heart of one who served faithfully, loved deeply, lived serenely and who has now gone to hear those blessed words, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

HERBERT MELVILLE BROOKS

The funeral service held at his late residence, 134 South Bryant Ave., Bellevue, Pa., Thursday afternoon, Apr. 15, was conducted by Rev. Fred F. Shields, pastor of the Bellevue Baptist church.

A memorial service was held in the Bellevue Baptist church, Sunday afternoon, Apr. 25, under the auspices of the Christian Laymen's Association of Pittsburgh. The president, Mr. Walter P. Fraser; the executive secretary, Dr. Arthur F. Purkiss; the pastor, Rev. Fred F. Shields; Rev. Royal N. Jessup, Mr. Ralph R. Standley, Mr. James H. McConkey and others, by their words of tribute showed the high regard in which Mr. Brooks was held throughout the Pittsburgh area by men of different denominations. "He will be missed for his seat will be empty."

The bereaved family have the loving sympathy of a large circle of friends.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Australia may be far away but its telescope is in good working order. With reference to a report that the pope will end his "voluntary imprisonment" and do some traveling, the Australian Baptist observes: "It may be interpreted as a sign of grace, perhaps, that the pope's sulking days are over. And then again, the reported decision to break the prison bars which an ecclesiastical imagination alone created, if it can be relied upon, may not be an evidence of grace at all. There has been a remarkable suggestion of somersaulting by Mussolini in his attitude toward the Vatican and in the Vatican's attitude toward Mussolini. Possibly the Vatican is contemplating a bold bid, counting on Mussolini. In such event, anything may happen."

The London Missionary Society reports that a single missionary in Madagascar has been instrumental in the organization of fifty-seven new churches.

The fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in the Washington auditorium, Washington, D. C., on May 25th, 1926, first session at 8 P. M., and succeeding days, to act on any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and members of the Executive and Finance Committees, and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting. By order of the Executive Committee, Mrs. W. S. Abernethy, Recording Secretary.

The Woman's State Officers Conference of the Northern Baptist Convention is to have its Annual Luncheon and Conference at the Washington City Club 1320 G. St. N. W., Monday, May 24, at one o'clock. "The Year As We Make It" has been selected as the topic for the Conference Hour—to be considered under three headings: First—Each month's special activity in developing Mission Work. Second—The most interesting and stimulating feature of this past year's work. Third—Any question pertaining to missionary activities, which come under the supervision and guidance of state officers. Reservations for luncheon tickets at $1.00 per plate, should be sent to the secretary, Mrs. Robert Barrie, 2106 East 36th Street, Kansas City, Missouri, before May 20.

THE TWIN CITIES Swedish Baptist Brotherhood held its annual spring fellowship supper at Bethel Institute, Apr. 12. Speakers were Rev. R. A. Arlander, Dr. G. Arvid Hagstrom, and Rev. Eric Anderson. Principal A. J. Wingblade presided. The subject for discussion was "Our Baptist Denomination."

THE CHURCH AT Banza Manteke, Belgian Congo, had an addition of 419 by baptism during the past year and many others are on the waiting list. In spite of transferences, deaths and some exclusions, there is a net gain of 267 for the year.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Titusville, Pa., Rev. E. H. Tomlin, pastor, dedicated a tablet recently placed in the church vestibule and bearing this inscription: "Affectionately dedicated to Emma Gibbs Carter, 1846-1902, earnest Christian worker and life-long member of this church. In whose memory her husband, John J. Carter, erected and presented to the church the memorial parsonage, Feb. 6, 1904."

EMMANUEL CHURCH, Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. A. A. Shaw, minister, has raised in cash and pledges for a new building the sum of $108,200.

THE CHURCH AT Roundup, Mont., suffered the loss of a fine piano through a recent fire that burned part of the interior of the building. The building loss was fully covered by insurance.

MR. F. L. DOLE of the Berwyn (Ill.) church, recently returned from a business trip to South Africa. He gave an illustrated lecture on his trip, using pictures he himself had taken.

REV. E. L. HURLEY has resigned as pastor at Dillor, Mont., after two years of successful ministry.

MR. EDWIN PHELPS, general secretary of the B. Y. P. U. A., spent May 2-4 in Billings, Bozeman and Missoula, Mont. He attends the state-wide rally in Immanuel church, Salt Lake City, Utah, on May 12.

THE CHURCH AT El Dorado, Kan., will dedicate a new building with a week's special program May 16 to 23. Rev. Ray E. York will be in charge of the program, with Pastor M. O. Clemmons, Secy. J. T. Crawford, Pres. Erdmann Smith of Ottawa and Dr. W. A. Sharp as speakers. Dr. George W. Truett of Dallas, Tex., will speak five times. The church will entertain out-of-town visitors on the Harvard plan.

The annual budget of the Lake Avenue church of Rochester, N. Y., for the year beginning May 1, 1926, carries the following items: current expenses, $45,710; general denominational societies, $32,000; work in Monroe county, $6500; city federation, $2600; miscellaneous benevolences, $5600; special objects of missionary type, $10,500; building fund, $28,300; total, $131,210. Dr. A. W. Beaven is the pastor.

THE BETHEL CHURCH of Salt Lake City has expended $200 on its building, increased the pastor's salary $300 and baptized nine since Jan. 1.

THE CHURCH AT Glasgow, Mont., received eleven members by baptism and a number of others by letter and experience. Secy. E. R. Curry assisted the pastor in special meetings.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH, Logansport, Ind., Rev. W. A. Steinkraus, pastor, has had twenty-one baptisms in April, making a total of fifty additions during the past six months. The church will send its pastor to the Northern Baptist convention at Washington.

THE MUSIC DEPARTMENT of the First church, Oak Park, Ill., Dr. J. S. Kirtley acting pastor, gave its fourth annual Ma music festival on the evening of May 1. One hundred twenty-five voices rendered Haydn's "Creation."

"AUNTE" MARY SHAW, ninety years of age and greatly beloved, died in Salt Lake City on Apr. 5. She was a member of the Burlington church.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH of Los Angeles gave Dr. and Mrs. Brougner a farewell reception on April 28. Doctor Brougner occupied the pulpit of the First church of Oakland on May 2. Dr. Herbert S. Johnson supplied the Temple church of Los Angeles on the same date.

DR. JAMES H. SPENCER of Colorado Springs, Colo., has been called as interim pastor at Ogden, Utah, and began his work there on May 2.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Lewistown, Mont. assumed self-support on May 1.

MISS MARY SUNDELL, convention missionary in Montana, is at Guildford for short time.

THE CHURCH AT El Dorado, Kan., Rev. M. O. Clemmons, minister, held a three weeks' revival meeting with a different speaker each evening. The speakers came without remuneration, some of them paying their own expenses. Forty-seven were added to the membership.

THE ANNUAL visitors' day was held at the Bethel Institute, St. Paul, May 1. Dr. Frank Nelson of Minnesota College spoke in the afternoon and Dr. Earle V. Pierce in the evening.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Kankakee, Ill. Rev. Fred Young, pastor, held a two weeks' meeting with the pastor preaching and Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Kindig of Mattoon in charge of the music. During the past ten months forty-four new members have been received, forty-one being adults. The visitation plan of evangelism was blended with the preaching type with good results.

DURING THE THREE years of the life of the Northwestern church of Detroit, Mich. it has increased in membership from 29 to 662. Three years ago the budget was $7700, this year it is $30,000 of which $8000 is for missions. The pastor, Robert White has been given an increase in salary and an assistant.

REV. HERBERT WHITING VIRGIN urges pastors in the region of Chicago to interest the women of their churches in the summer school for Christian workers to be held by the Baptist Missionary Training School through August. He says: "When one has had the privilege of inspecting the magnificent property which is occupied by the Baptist Missionary Training School and realizes the usefulness to which such a fine equipment can be put, during at least a month of the summer season, it is not surprising that the women who have in charge this work have caught the vision of a summer school, in addition to the regular term. When one notes the real hungering desire, on the part of many church workers, to increase their usefulness by better preparation for the con-

ON MAR. 21 a beautiful church edifice was dedicated by the Calvary church of Albert Lea, Minn. This church has been known for a number of years as "the Finnish church," but as the work is becoming more American the organization adopted the present name. The first building was erected in 1876, just fifty years ago; it was enlarged in 1888 and still another addition was built in 1909. The new building is of brick and up-to-date in every way with fourteen class-rooms, modern kitchen and proper equipment, dining room and other conveniences. The total seating capacity is nearly 500. The cost was about $40,000, not including the lot and parsonage. The present valuation of the entire property is $40,000. Elaborate services were conducted three times at the day of dedication. Rev. E. H. Rasmussen of the Minnesota State Convention gave a brief address and had charge of the thank-offering. Rev. A. Broholm, a former pastor, preached the dedicatory sermon and Rev. W. Warren of Clarks Grove, Minn., offered the dedicatory prayer. Many other visiting pastors and laymen had parts in the services of the day. In the evening the pastor, Rev. I. Fredmund conducted the first baptismal service in the new building.

I Offer You $15 a Day

Make $15 a day selling this wonderful new household article that has taken the country by storm. It is CED-O-BAG a moth-proof, damp-proof, dust-proof, germ-proof storage bag for clothes, blankets and furs. It is the greatest, fastest selling household article that has come on the market for years. Every housewife wants one, buys on sight.

CED-O-BAGS are made from rubberized fabric which has been chemically treated. They are patented. Nothing else like them. Instead of a small easily torn paper bag or a clumsy, expensive cedar chest, a CED-O-BAG provides adequate space for two to four garments. And yet, with all of these distinctive advantages CED-O-BAGS are priced for quick sale.

Ced-O-Bags Offer Big Profits

There is a chance for you to clean up a lot of money in your town at once just by taking orders for CED-O-BAGS. L. H. Green went out and made a clear profit of $12 in one afternoon. J. V. Davis took five orders in one evening and was $5 richer. Edith Phillips made $53 in one week's spare time (evenings.) You can do as well, or better.

No Experience Needed

You don't need experience or training. Every home in your town is a live prospect. All you have to do is show the housewife a CED-O-BAG and take her order. We deliver and collect. You get your profits at once, and move on to the next house and take another order. Everyone buys. Geo. Jones took 22 orders in two days spare time and had a clear profit of $22. 21 agents report an average profit of $3 an hour.

How Much Money Do You Want?

Would you like to make an extra $100 or $200 a month, in your spare time? Would you like to gather a lump sum of $500 or $600 in a couple of months? If you would, here is your chance. Mail me the coupon and I will tell you all about this money-making proposition. I will show you how you can make $15 a day or more in this easy, pleasant, engaging work. I will show you the way to quick profits—big profits. Mail the coupon now.

Station WCOY

THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"It is May, glorious May. It is time, as the good deacon said, to 'hop to it and get something done.' There is no month in the year better suited to the joyous exercise of separating shekels from our friends and transmuting them into subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. This makes the alchemy of the ancients look like thirty cents. This idea of selling the best Baptist paper in the world to our generation is big medicine.

"Tonight we shall call credible witnesses to this truth. First let us hear from New England. Let the glorious commonwealth of Massachusetts be heard through in illustrious citizen. Pastor William R. McNutt of the First church of Worcester, what do you say? Ponder well his reply: 'Your minister is convinced that no investment, of like amount, will bring returns to Christ and our church commensurate with that made in a good, constructive religious journal. We commend THE BAPTIST and Missions at $3.00 per year for the two.' Thank you, brother.

"Now let us cross the Hudson river into New Jersey. Here are some of the best Baptist churches in America. And one of the rising young pastors in setting forth his program for 1926 says, 'The largest budget in the history of this church as just been adopted. The choir is to be vested. A men's club is already organized. One of the best features is that we are out to have at least one third of my people regular subscribers to THE BAPTIST.' Thank you, brother.

"Now let us cross the mighty Alleghany mountains to Ohio. Here we have friends who believe in advertising the paper. In the bulletin of the Valley church at Marietta we read: 'THE BAPTIST is making a special offer of six months for 1. Don't miss it. Doctor Spurr's articles on "Immortality" alone are worth the price. Or Doctor McGuire's page, "The World in Transit," will give you a dollar's worth of mental stimulus. You need THE BAPTIST for what you cannot get in the daily papers. What is happening to your missionary investments in China? What do you know about Mexico? Are all missionaries there agitating for intervention? THE BAPTIST will tell you. If you cannot afford the cost, share it with your neighbor. The pastor will send in your subscription.' Thank you, brother.

"Now let us cross the Mississippi river into the corn belt of good old Iowa. Pastor R. E. Williamson of the First church, Waterloo, says, 'Do you know that every home in our church should be receiving THE BAPTIST, our own Northern journal of religion? About twenty-five copies a week come to the First church folks. But that isn't enough. We must have sixty or seventy. No Christian home complete without a religious journal. THE BAPTIST is ours. You may have it weekly along with Missions, the greatest missionary paper in the world, for $3 a year. Start these two great journals of information and religious inspiration coming to you at once.' Thank you, brother.

"And now over the Rocky Mountains to a little city by the Pacific. One of the elders will bear witness: 'I am a retired Baptist minister in my 82nd year. Fifty-two years were given to active evangelistic labors for my Lord. With my beloved wife I am living in a little cottage that was given me. We have a new pastor. He does not get THE BAPTIST. Last Sunday I took him the six preceding copies of the paper. I used to be agent for the paper here and we had thirty-five subscribers. I have taken a Baptist periodical for nearly sixty years. God bless you and THE BAPTIST while the world stands.' Thank you, brother.

"In the B. Y. P. U. Booster of the White Temple, San Diego, Calif., we read recently: 'Once upon a time a young man found a one dollar bill on the sidewalk. Hereafter he walked with bowed head looking for more treasure. In the course of twenty years he accumulated one thousand pins, four pennies, twelve nails and a rouchy disposition.' How much better it would have been if he had invested that dollar in a Trial Subscription for THE BAPTIST, stored his mind with wisdom, looked up and out across the world and developed the habit of fellowship with God's workmen in the kingdom.

"The office boy will now conclude the evening's offerings by giving us a wee bit of a rhyme. It is entitled, "How Long Shall I Give?"

"Go break to the needy sweet charity's bread;
For giving is living,' the angel said.
'And must I be giving again and again?'
My peevish and pitiless answer ran;
'No, no,' said the angel, piercing me through,
'Just give till the Master stops giving to you.'"

"WCOY now signs off. Keep your subscription paid in advance. Goodnight friends. Pleasant dreams."

The Saving Sense

"I have nothing but praise for the new minister," said a member of the congregation to the usher after the morning service. "So I observed while passing the collection plate," replied the usher. —Presbyterian Advance.

Larkson: "I'm going up to the jail. I want to talk with the bandit who took my car."

Parkson: "What's the use?"

Larkson: "Maybe he'll tell me how he got fifty miles an hour out of her." —Life.

A class of little girls, studying drawing, was told by the teacher to draw the one thing they wanted most. All got busy except little Myrtle, who remained deep in thought.

"What's the matter, Myrtle?" asked the teacher. "Don't you know what you want most?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am," replied the child, "but I don't know how to draw it."

"Well, what it is you want?" asked the teacher.

"I want to be married," said the child. —Ladies' Home Journal.

"What position did you hold in your last place?" asked the merchant. "I was a doer, sir." "A doer! What's that?" "Well, sir, you see, when my employer wanted anything done he would tell the cashier, the cashier would tell the bookkeeper, the bookkeeper would tell the clerk, and the clerk would tell me." "And what would happen then?" "Well, sir, as I hadn't anyone to tell it to, I'd do it." —Christian Register.

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for May 23

ISAAC AND HIS WELLS

Lesson Text: Gen. 26:12-25. Golden Text: Prov. 15:1

Isaac is the least adventurous and original of all the patriarchs. His name which means laughter may have been his nature too. One rather fancies that Isaac was good-natured and always saw the funny side of a serious situation. He probably smiled when the Philistines played the fool and filled up the wells of Abraham. At any rate he was not willing to fight over it.

Isaac The Conservative

Isaac was wise enough to conserve all the values which his father had produced. He knew and respected his father as a great man. He might have his doubts about his father's wisdom in standing his ground and fighting for it, but he never doubted his father's courage and faith in blazing a path for himself from Chaldea to Canaan. Though the wells which Abraham had dug had been filled up with dirt by the envious Philistines, Isaac knew that the wells were valuable, and at the first opportunity he cleaned out these old wells and called them by the old names which his father had given them. This is a prime illustration of what is called conservatism. A conservative is one who conserves what is good no matter how old it may be or by what name it may be called. The old Bible, the old gospel, the old church and all the old virtues and graces which have adorned the lives of men from the beginning until now are like old wells which flow perpetually and give to the world the water of life which it so deeply needs. Of course there are Philistines who have little regard for these priceless wells and try to destroy them. But there are always Isaacs in the line of God's purpose who come along and rediscover and reopen the old wells and give them the old names. We need Isaac, the conservative, today as much as he was needed on the plains of Beersheba so long ago.

Isaac The Progressive

But Isaac was also progressive. He seems to be the only character in the Old Testament who anticipated the high ideals of the Sermon on the Mount and actually practiced that revolutionary principle, "Resist not him that is evil." Imagine a man today living 1500 years ahead of his time! Wouldn't he be worthy of the name, "progressive"? Isaac was not satisfied to use the wells his father had dug and no others. He dug wells of his own. In this he was a genuine progressive. And when he found that two of the new wells he had dug were claimed by the law of land tenure he laughingly gave them up after calling them contention and enmity and went on until he found room to develop his own business in peace. It is interesting to note that God approved the course Isaac followed. There is no greater need today than more Isaacs who will conserve the eternal values of the old and yet seek with sympathy and enthusiasm the eternal values of the new.

New Books

Hymns of the Christian Life, edited by Milton S. Littlefield, D.D., New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. $2 per single copy; $135 per 100.

Doctor Littlefield gives as his aim in determining the scope and character of the hymns included: To meet adequately the needs and aspirations of the present-day church. The editor has kept in mind, constantly, the varying temperaments, experiences and training of a worshipping congregation. To make a selection rather than a collection of hymns and tunes of high literary and musical quality, worthy to be the expression of religious thought and religious feeling.

The hymns are genuinely interpretative of Christian thought and experience. The convictions and aspirations of the soul, the loyalties and struggles of the will, the faith and hope and love of the life, find fitting expression. The dominant notes are praise, good will, purpose and victory. The book creates the atmosphere of vigorous life and spiritual effectiveness.

The literary quality of the words is a distinguishing feature of the book. Each hymn is a poem, lyrical and worshipful. Among the names of the great devotional singers of the Christian centuries will be found those of the leading American and English poets.

Utmost care has been taken to select tunes which are good music and which fittingly express the thought of the hymns. As literary worth and lyric quality have been sought in the words, so musical worth has been sought in the tunes. Among the composers the names of Bach, Beethoven, Gaul, Gounod, Handel, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Schubert and Schumann will be found.

The Psalms Outlined, by Arthur Emerson Harris, D.D. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $1.75.

Each psalm is analyzed and set forth with title and occasion. It is a commendable effort to assist the student in the schools and homes to understand and appreciate this old Jewish hymnal. Illustration is used effectively to assist the eye and memory. The book will be greatly appreciated by many.

—J. W. CLEVENGER.

God's Family, by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes. New York: Abingdon Press. $1.25.

These lectures were delivered in 1925 at the University of Southern California. The author spoke under collegiate auspices but very evidently this book was written in a home. It is the flowering of a father's experience and is dedicated "to the memory of two little children," his daughters. The echoes of childish voices are heard through all these pages. The book is an exposition of Jesus-revelation of the Fatherhood of God. The various chapters discuss the implications of that teaching for theology, religion, and all social relations. This is the dominant note—"the informing principle of the final theology must be found in the teaching of Jesus about the Father." Our theology will be more appealing, our religious experience more vital, and our social life more Christian when the message of this volume is more widely accepted.

—ROBERT GORDON.

The Monuments and the Old Testament, by Prof. I. M. Price. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $2.50.

This volume had passed through seventeen editions, before it was prepared and reset for this enlarged and improved edition, edited by the author. It was reviewed a number of times in the old Standard. Little can be written about it that is new to our older readers. We refresh their memories on some facts: Its author is one of the leading authorities of the age on Old Testament history and life and all that concerns the Hebrew people. No commentary, dictionary nor history throws so much light on those subjects as it does. Its arrangements with maps and illustrations presenting ancient life are the best and most modern. It contains records of the latest discoveries in the history and civilization of the Semitic race and Egyptian dynasties. Under its searching light the Old Testament is read with a new interest because better understood. This edition comprises a record of the latest discoveries in archaeology arranged by a master mind. It is a reliable classic in the literature of which it treats and invaluable aid to understand the Old Testament.

—H. O. ROWLANDS.

Tragedy and Triumph, by Timothy Prescott Frost. New York: Abingdon Press. $1.75.

The teachings of Jesus are here clustered around the main ideas set forth in the parable of the tares, which the author selects as the most comprehensive parable of the kingdom. Claiming that the main principle of the kingdom is life, the author states that the kingdom is an organism rather than an organization, of which Jesus Christ is the creative spirit, whose teachings, representing the highest spiritual aspirations of mankind, reveal that Jesus was in truth the Son of Man. The book is reverent, scholarly, and inspirational.

—F. H. FAHRINGER.

News Notes

At the Concho Indian school in Oklahoma, Revs. W. E. Park and T. J. Davis, missionaries among the Cheyenne and Arapaho, conducted evangelistic services in April that resulted in forty-three baptisms. When the young people from these several schools return to their homes they will extend the influence of the meetings to a degree that cannot be estimated.

Rev. B. C. Case gives this little picture of a conversion in the Pyinmana field in Burma. He and an elephant driver were riding together in a bullock cart on the way to preaching services in a nearby village. "As we rode, I talked to this man and found he had given up his faith in Buddhism and had come to believe that what we preached was right. I asked him if he was ready to love and serve Christ and told him what this meant. We sat on some rice straw, the dust rose up from the road and the springless cart thumped. Amid the thumping I said to him, 'You have been able to control many rough elephants, but have you been able to control your tongue?' He said, 'No.' I told him Christ would control his heart and that would control his tongue and his life. Then, between the thumps of the cart, the man said he would give his heart to Christ and become a Christian. That is the way we took one man alive that day."

At a meeting of the Ministers and Missionaries Board, April 13, Dr. George L. White, of Los Angeles, who has been the western representative of the American Baptist Publication Society since 1911, was unanimously elected to represent the board in the west. Doctor White's personality, popularity, clear vision of the denominational needs, his sound and sane judgment, his sympathy with our ministers in their present day task, and above all the confidence manifested by churches and pastors in him and his work have especially fitted him for the duties to which he has been called. He is in the prime of life and with his acquaintance among the churches and pastors he will be of great value in his new work. He has been a pastor, a State Convention Secretary and has had much experience in chapel car work and in evangelism. A graduate of the University of Chicago and also of the Divinity School, his preparation for his work was thorough and broad. He was given the degree of Doctor of Divinity by Grand Island College. His brother, Frank R. White died after twelve years of missionary and educational service in the Philippines. The date when Dr. White begins his service has been left subject to such adjustments as may be necessary in the important work he is doing for the Publication Society. Already the M. & M. Board is being heartily congratulated upon securing Doctor White for this important service and we are confident that his many friends when they learn of his election will be as enthusiastic as the board is over his appointment.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Mrs. Grace M. Rhodes of Ferriday, La., has given to the Baptists of that state a beautiful tract of land on Lake St. John, to be used as a campground by the Baptists of the northeast section of the state.

The city of Indianapolis, as reported in the Kansas City Record Searchlight, has adopted a segregation ordinance, the general effect of which is to provide that no person, white or colored, may move into a district inhabited by persons of the opposite color without the written consent of a majority of the residents in the area.

The state of New York proposes to submit to the people in the November election a referendum on the question whether the people will authorize the state legislature to petition congress to repeal or modify the Volstead law. The argument is that the Volstead law is an unconstitutional intrusion into the government of the state and of the rights of the people, and that the state has a constitutional right to petition for a redress of grievances. New York has hitherto refused to cooperate with the federal government in the enforcement of the law, but fortunately has not yet called out the militia to resist enforcement, nor passed an act of secession.

S. W. Stagg, a writer in the California Christian Advocate, describing conditions in the Philippines, notes a lack of the former amicable relations between natives and Americans, and says that those relations have been severely strained by two factors. He says: "Certain commercial interests that have large investments in the islands have begun a systematic propaganda in the United States with the specific purpose of changing the mind of the American people in favor of the permanent retention of the islands as a territory. This propaganda is carried on largely by attacks upon the ability and character of the Filipino people as a race and by a distorted presentation of conditions in the islands. This effort on the part of selfish commercial interests has inspired the Filipino with a fear and distrust of the American community which is tragic because these commercial interests do not in the slightest sense represent the mind of the American people. The second factor is political agitation on the part of the Filipino people themselves. Political leaders frequently express publicly the fear that imperialistic sentiment is growing in America and that the chances for independence are steadily diminishing. This belief is the real motive back of the present cry for 'immediate, absolute independence.' Many of the local political leaders are convinced that 'it is now or never.'"

Sixty Chicago ministers have agreed to engage in open-air evangelism. When Rev. Benjamin Brown attempted to do such work at one of the outlying communities the police arrested him. At another Rev. Norman B. Barr had his car bombarded with rotten eggs.

For the Twenty-fifth Infantry, a regiment of negro soldiers famous in army records for its corps spirit, a new order has been created with the approval of the government. The order is that of Distinguished Soldier of the Regiment. It is conferred annually upon that member of the regiment appearing to have made the best general record of service during the preceding year.

Dr. John A. Ryan proposes in order to get at the root of motives for war that manufacturers of all sorts of war materials and supplies and army and navy contractors be required to render such service without profit. Now that the false glory has faded from the war maker, he would also take the gold from the war profiteer. How it is to be done he does not say. But the Commonweal follows up his suggestion by expressing a desire to peruse "a frank history of the confidential relations between the Vickers-Maxims, Creuzot-Schneiders, Krupps and Ansaldos, and the cabinets of the countries in which they amassed their swollen profits during the ten years preceding the explosion."

A news note in THE BAPTIST of May 1 concerning the coming of the Greek church primate Gennadios to this country to raise money for a Y. M. C. A. building in Salonica, catches the eye of Rev. J. F. Love, corresponding secretary of the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention. Dr. Love inquires: "Is it impertinent that I should ask our Baptist people in particular that they in turn shall ask 'his holiness' two questions before giving him a donation on this Y. M. C. A. building? Will 'his holiness' use his official authority and influence to suppress persecution of Baptists in Roumania by the priests of Greek orthodoxy? Just what is to be the evangelical Christian value of the work which is to be fostered by this Y. M. C. A. building in Salonica?" Dr. Love further says: "Greek orthodoxy, as I have witnessed it, has very little to do with evangelical Christianity as the American people understand that term, and persecutions which are being incited in Roumania by the priests of Greek orthodoxy are becoming notorious." Both the questions and the comment of Doctor Love are pertinent and welcome. Readers of THE BAPTIST will not forget them.

The Western Recorder has learned "from an authority that cannot be questioned" that the war department has decided not to accept for chaplains men who hold premillennial views, and it is justly indignant. If the report is true, here is amen to any hot words it cares to express. At the same time it may be recalled that a certain Mr. Rutherford did time in the Federal prison at Atlanta for expressing rather strong premillennial views during the war. What was the Western Recorder saying then?

With reference to the muddle in Mexico concerning church matters, it has been obvious that the friction lay between the Mexican government and the Roman Catholic church. Protestants have feared that there might be an agitation on the part of the Catholics to embroil the United States in the controversy in some form. It may reassure them to learn that so influential a Catholic journal as the Commonweal is pleading for patience, for friendliness and for leaving Mexico to work out its own problems.

Elmer E. Vaughan, M.D., a prominent member of the Belden Avenue church, Chicago, died on Friday morning, April 30, at his home in Chicago. For nearly a year he was a heroic sufferer from a condition which did not yield to treatment. Chicago Baptists have met with a great loss in the passing away of Doctor Vaughan. In all the work of the denomination he was a generous and enthusiastic leader. Missions, education and philanthropy were enriched by his interest in and support of these vital expressions of kingdom service. He was a past president of the Chicago Baptist Social Union. For nearly a quarter of a century he was the president of the Chicago Union hospital, now the Illinois Masonic hospital, which grew out of his vision and courage. He was one of the lecturers for years in Hahnemann Medical college. His work as a great surgeon was widely known. And with it all he was a modest Christian gentleman dedicated to the service of humanity in the spirit of Christ. Born in Vermont sixty years ago, he came to Chicago as a young man for his professional education. For more than thirty years the North side of the city was his parish. The great crowd which looked upon his face calm in death at the funeral testified to the affectionate place which Doctor Vaughan held in the lives of hundreds of the people whom he had served as a Christian physician. His pastor, J. W. Hoyt, conducted the funeral service in the church assisted by John A. Earl, former pastor and long time friend of Doctor Vaughan.

Columbia University will establish a regular professional school of theology, built on the same general plan as those already maintained for other professions. Natural sciences will figure largely in the course. It is said that there are now in Columbia thirty-five students for the ministry.

The Baptist seminary at Hamburg, Germany, has four professors, five assistant teachers, and fifty-four students. Twelve of the students are foreigners: two are from Holland, two from Bulgaria, two from Jugo-slavia, two from Russia, three from Poland and one from Latvia. Education is entirely free to the students and the German churches, at great sacrifice, raise the greater part of the funds needed.

The American Freethinkers society is opposed to any arrangement between the schools and any portion of the public for the teaching of religion. It objects even to permitting the release of pupils for a limited time on certain days to attend religious instruction in the churches or elsewhere. The society is trying to raise money for a campaign against any concession of the sort whatever. This is the kind of zeal that overreaches itself through its unreasonableness. Churches have no monopoly of such folly.

Nine graduates of Munroe academy, Suifu, West China, and two outstation teachers made their way to Chengtu last fall to enter the Union middle school and university. "They faced manifold dangers, and some were a full month enroute. The fact that this number, in the face of all anti-Christian, anti-foreign propaganda, should choose to take that long and dangerous trip, so as to continue in our Christian schools at Chengtu, speaks well for their confidence in us, and their desire for what we have to offer."

The automobile business is equipped to produce more than five million passenger cars annually in the United States. The news letter of the National City Bank of New York expresses the opinion that the time of intensive competition in the industry is now at hand. This competition is likely to take the form of increasing rivalry in producing new designs and improvements in technical efficiency until something like standardization becomes possible, when makers will be compelled to merge or quit business.

Whether they wish it or not, Chinese Christians must assume responsibility for the propagation of Christianity if it is to make a real appeal as an indigenous and not a foreign religion to the national conscience of the Chinese people, according to President J. T. White of Shanghai College. He is of the opinion that if such a crisis had arisen two decades ago, Baptists would have been without resource. Fortunately, today there is a fine corps of teachers, preachers and hymn ready to take up the burden. They are still too few, and they cannot carry on without large financial help from America, and sympathetic advice from the missionary body.

Rev. J. M. Baker of Ongole, South India, has accepted the presidency of the Christian Endeavor Union of India. In his message to the members of the union, Mr. Baker describes himself as a jungle man. One-fourth of the thirty years he has spent in India have been passed in villages of his district. "If the months so spent were strung together in a ribbon, it would stretch over seven full years of jungle life."

The Washington Sentinel (negro) raises the following incisive questions: "From the armistice to the present, individualism has been increasingly on the rampage. Race prejudices, class prejudices, color prejudices, religious prejudices, sectional prejudices with all their concomitant evils, are multiplying and growing in apace. Is it not time to cease this twaddle about the unapproachable superiority of ourselves and our institutions and unite in adopting a policy and course of action which will comport more accurately with the intentions of the fathers of the republic?"

During most of the period of Dr. James Whitcomb Brougner's service for the Board of Missionary Cooperation in the pastorate at Los Angeles, his place was taken by Dr. W. W. Bustard of Cleveland, Ohio. Naturally the position was a difficult one, requiring both ability and tact of the highest order. The testimony from the church is that Doctor Bustard met the exacting conditions of the field with distinguished success. At the close of his work Temple church gave a valedictory supper and reception at which after all tables were filled 150 persons were unable to secure places. Doctor Bustard has returned to his home at 13679 Fairmount Boulevard, Euclid, Ohio, and is ready to resume his ministry-at-large in evangelistic and conference work.

Newspapers report that A. L. Pickens, professor of biology at Furman university, has resigned as a result of a clash of views on evolution with trustees of the institution. He was quoted as subscribing to the theory of evolution. Furman university is owned and controlled by the Baptists of South Carolina.

The Baptist Times of London notes that Professor H. H. Titus is visiting that country from America. Dr. Titus is a Fellow of the University of Chicago, and is spending some months in Europe under university auspices, visiting the educational centers. Upon his return to America he will take up the position of professor of history in the William Jewell college.

Five hundred thousand dollars will be received by the University of Chicago for the construction of a hospital for the treatment of contagious diseases, as the result of an agreement between officials of the university and trustees under the will of the late Mrs. Harriet G. Smith. The new hospital will be known as the Charles Gilman Smith hospital. By the terms of the agreement the University of Chicago is to provide a suitable site and building for the hospital, and is given the right to use the facilities of the hospital in connection with its work in medical instruction and research.

In the enlightening article about "Men You Want to Know" in the issue of May 1 it is stated that Dr. R. A. Ashworth is pastor of the Baptist church in Yonkers, N. Y. Yonkers is a city of 115,000 people. It has four white Baptist churches and one colored church. All three of the white churches besides the Warburton Avenue church are offshoots from it. They are all strong churches. One of them—the Calvary, is just building a new meetinghouse to cost $125,000. Geo. D. Adams is the pastor. The Redeemer church is the one that Dr. Ashworth is the pastor of.—Alvah S. Hobart.

One of the most enjoyable social events of the year at Crozer Theological Seminary was a testimonial dinner in honor of Professor and Mrs. Vedder, Tuesday evening, May 4. Professor Vedder is about to complete thirty-two years of service as professor of church history. The faculty and students met in the dining-hall of the seminary, and unusual tributes of love and gratitude were spoken by Dr. E. B. Pollard, representing the faculty; Dr. Edward Chiera, of the University of Pennsylvania, and Rev. Robert E. Keighton, pastor of the First Baptist church, Narberth, representing the former students of Dr. Vedder, who now offer courses at Crozer. Mr. George H. Clarke, on behalf of the student body, testified to the love and esteem in which Professor Vedder is held by all those now in the seminary. Professor and Mrs. Vedder were remembered by the students by appropriate gifts, presented by Mr. Frederic R. Baker, representing the Student association, and Mrs. A. H. Rowland, on behalf of the wives of the married students. President Evans paid high tribute to Doctor Vedder's scholarship, comradeship, loyalty to Christian ideals and his permanent contribution to Christian literature.

Pillars of Gold

By Mitchell Bronk

A collection of charming sketches of Christian people, places, and experiences. Here is variety—from the home of Francis of Assisi to Jacob Stainer and his violins; from an ox-cart on the way to a New England meeting-house to Rheims cathedral. Here is the charm of a story-teller who has loved what he has seen until he has wooed the wonder and beauty of it into his tale. $1.50 net.

The Psalms Outlined

By Arthur Emerson Harris

An outline analysis covering each song of the Psalter. The author has prepared this volume for all who wish to use the Psalms for devotional purposes, and who need the brief suggestions such as are contained in the analyses and the comments, mostly spiritual in character, presented in these pages. $1.75 net.

The Playtime Guide Book

By Frederic K. Brown

The author aims to present a practical graded course in play such as will help church workers to forestall the evils of wrong methods of recreation and capture the play spirit for God. Nearly one hundred games are described. $1.50 net.

Church Work with Intermediates (A Judson Training Manual)

By Elizabeth M. Finn

First is presented a study of the intermediate, then is discussed the construction and presentation of a program of instruction, the pupils' own participation, organized play, worship plans and programs, adult leadership, and finally the organization of the intermediate department. $1.25 net.

Among the grave problems of the churches in Great Britain are a decrease in the number of students for the ministry and a "tremendous slump of Sunday-school scholars." Baptists, however, have no trouble about a dearth of ministers, nor of candidates for the ministry.

National blocs in politics have been definitely recognized and authorized by the Averescu government in Roumania. Minorities of Hungarians, Germans, Bulgarians and others residing in Roumania will be permitted to form national electoral groups and to elect their own representatives.

One of the most difficult and important problems of modern medical research is that of the cause and cure of cancer, on which Assistant Professor Maude Slye of the department of pathology at the University of Chicago has been working with notable results for many years. This research will be greatly promoted by the bequest to the university of $100,000 from the late Edwin Francis Holmes, whose daughter, Miss Harriet F. Holmes, has been associated with Miss Slye in her cancer research for more than fifteen years.

Southern Baptist churches received on baptism a total of 224,191 persons during 1925 and added $24,172,151.65 to the value of their local church property. The gain in value of local church property far surpasses any previous year's record, while the number of baptisms is the highest on record with one exception. Other net gains for the year include an increase of 283 ordained ministers, 74,799 church members, 190 Sunday schools, and 154,875 Sunday-school pupils, 1,193 young people's unions, 1,192 woman's missionary union organizations, $240,105.37 in woman's missionary union contributions, 647 church houses, 100 pastors' homes, $3,275,113.42 in contributions to local church expenses, and $1,677,395.70 in total contributions to all objects.

Among the multitude of experiences, odd, laughable and disgusting that fall to the lot of Rev. Sam Bawden at Kavali station in India this is one of the latest as he tells it: "This morning about four o'clock Mr. Davis was called out to the Kavali Reformatory Settlement and found a woman with her nose hanging down over her lips by two shreds of skin, and her husband admitted that he had bitten it off in her sleep! He had two wives, both there together and for some reason or other he became jealous of this second wife and has tried to mark her for life. I am afraid I should have had an unholy desire to kick him from one end of the street to the other and back if I had been called out, but it came to me as a bit of the day's work and I have sent him for prosecution for mayhem, and I trust he may get a stiff sentence. The sub-inspector of police says that the evidence seems to indicate that the first wife abetted him in the outrage. The man is in one guard house, and his first wife in the women's lines and the second wife in the hospital, and I am wondering what next?"

If Her Wish Should Come True

A CRY of pain inspires this editorial. It comes from a broken-hearted woman on the Pacific Coast. She is the widow of one of the most influential and effective ministers of the Northern Baptist Convention. Out of the shadow of her sorrow she turns her eyes upon the Baptist denomination to which he and she have given splendid lives of service. She tries to value it as its spirit, its fellowship, its methods and its tendencies weigh out in the scales of the deep realities of life, death and eternity. And here is the picture it presents to her: "I feel that we gave years of the hardest sort of service for a thing that was too cheap to serve—the Baptist denomination. The spirit of Christ is no longer in it. It is a wild scramble for place and office. . . . What does the word 'minister' mean? If the Washington convention would take as its theme, 'How to Bring the Lost Spirit of Christ to the Ministry Today,' and really do it, modernism and fundamentalism would die a natural death."

Now the answer to this cry is of course ready to the hand. It is that this good woman's painful experience has focused her attention upon certain unlovely aspects of the denominational life that for the moment she has lost sight of the great and lovely things which lie in the heart and are being wrought by the hand of the Baptist denomination. And the answer is true. But to refute the cry of pain by showing that it is not quite logical is one thing; to remove that which has caused the pain and evoked the cry is another. If her case were an isolated one, perhaps it might be treated as a pathological exception, but what if there should be multitudes whose contact with the denomination in recent years has given them a heartache where it might have written a hymn of thanksgiving? This editorial speaks on behalf of any and all who may have so suffered, and takes the message home to this office first of all.

Searching self-examination is in order. Nothing in the spirit of Christ justifies a merely sentimental softness. There can never be too much of moral and religious vigor, courage and resolution; never a grip too tight upon the uncompromising realities of life; never a loyalty too exacting in discharging our trusteeship of truth and righteousness. In none of these things have any of us ever surpassed our Lord. But there is something else, perhaps something deeper, certainly something that can surpassingly sweeten and enrich fellowship and give perfect persuasive power to Christian testimony. And it is this transcendent element for which hearts hunger and the helplessly burdened and broken cry. Without it a miracle-working faith, and the gift of prophecy, and all the bulk and finish of either biblical or scientific lore, and all going to the stake for one's convictions, and all material largess to the poor—what did Paul call them? Zero in Christianity. In the light of his estimate, is our grieving sister as far wrong as we first thought?

After all, do we know what the word "minister" means? Does ecclesiastical technology afford a definition that will satisfy Christ? When we think of councils, theological examinations, laying on of hands, ordinations, official recognitions, regularity, authority and clerical dignity, are we within miles of the meaning that Jesus attached to the word "minister"? Do these things even help us greatly to understand what he meant? Must we not seek his meaning in another field? Does it not lie where love overflows in actual kindness and where unselfish service to others is the law of spontaneous self-expression? And if our fellowship should discover its measure and value in actually living and working together as he lived and worked, how much more would it need in order to validate it as a true Christian ministry, to accredit it as gospel testimony or to make it luminous and authoritative as an interpretation of God's revelation to men?

In asking that the Northern Baptist Convention become the creative center of such a ministry is this Christian woman asking too much? If the request meant that the convention should dissolve itself into a mere pietistic group, that it should turn aside from its big and practical collective task, that it should treat the problems of administration and finance for the kingdom of God as unworthy of its attention, that it should try to evade or to cover up questions that can be clarified and settled only by frank and open discussion, then it could not be granted. In doing so we should be self-convicted of treason to our Lord who has given us this task and continues to enlarge it. But if the request means that our whole collective activity and fellowship should be saturated anew and creatively with the mind of Christ then it cannot rightly be denied. Effectiveness and spirituality need not antagonize each other. They are mutually indispensable. But spiritual likeness to Christ is the more difficult of the two to achieve.

Such a wish sets one dreaming. Suppose that we should conceive the Christian ministry, not in terms of the church but in terms of Jesus' life and mind. Conceive it a purely lay ministry of neighborly helpfulness as his always was. Conceive all of his people filled with his spirit and making their whole life a Christian ministry, as sacred as his, as authoritative as his, as friendly as his. Suppose that the Northern Baptist Convention should become the creative source and the assembling center for such a ministry. The result would be the building of the neighborly life on a scale of breadth and beauty such as the world has never seen. And the dream is in the way of coming true. Faults, failures, infelicities, disagreements, and painful contacts are of the surface and margin. God is still in his people and the ministry of the spirit of Christ still gladdens the waste places.

We Are Not Falling Down

ANY normal person can see farther than he can walk. He may attach great importance to reaching a certain point in his journey at a certain time, but in case of failure to attain that particular objective, instead of yielding to incontinent gloom it is advisable to check up on what progress he has actually made towards accomplishing the whole task imposed by his journey, and to calculate not only by miles but also by pounds of luggage. All things considered has he made encouraging progress?

Baptists have fallen into a habit of talking of themselves in terms of failure, but some figures gathered by Superintendent Peterson of Illinois invite examination. In 1919 the 86,000 Baptists of that state cooperating with the Northern Baptist Convention raised for home expenses including buildings, $872,272, and for benevolence $382,405. In 1925, 88,000 members contributed for all home expenses $2,033,551, and for benevolence $378,998. The total contributions of these Illinois Baptists amounted in 1919 to $1,254,678, equal to $14.40 per capita; in 1925, to $2,402,549, or $26.30 per capita. Thus the total gain in both the sum and the per capita of giving is nearly 100 per cent. At the same time the number of baptisms at home has risen from 2875 in 1919 to 4564 in 1925.

A temporarily disquieting feature is that only a small proportion of the total gain, and no per capita gain, is registered in the side of benevolence. In fact the per capita giving for benevolence has steadily fallen from $7.23 in 1921 to $4.30 in 1925. This decline cannot of course continue. It has already reached the border line of denominational disaster. While the total giving for the last three years has never been surpassed or equalled in the history of the state, the benevolence budget has not received the benefit. There has been an unbalanced distribution of the income.

What has become of the gain? It has gone into increased local budgets for current expenses, improvements and new buildings. And this apparent disturbance of normal balance, although unwise, is not to be charged to selfishness. During the war and the ensuing years of the New World Movement, building was largely suspended to give way to the larger denominational program. But within the last two or three years it became apparent that in many localities building could be no longer delayed without disaster to the local work. In most instances building involved an extraordinary draft on local resources and relatively diminished support for the denominational budget. But it also involves or ought to involve a return to greatly enlarged support of the denominational budget as soon as the strain of building is over. It is a permanent strengthening of the home base for a greater future general advance.

Information coming to this office leads to the conclusion that conditions in Illinois reflect fairly throughout the field of the Northern Baptist Convention. If so, one clear reason is apparent for the falling off of contributions for benevolence, namely, the diversion of funds to church building enterprises. Another appears to be that there is a large general increase in the local current budgets for pastors' salaries and operating expenses. A third suggested reason is financial depression among the farmers, but how far this depression registers a decline in missionary contributions is not ascertained.

A general conclusion is that the missionary and benevolent enterprises of the denomination are suffering not so much from indifference or from differences of opinion as from a disturbed balance in the distribution of the Lord's money. In Illinois the ratio last year was $22 per capita for home expenses and $4.30 per capita for all benevolences. If that is the ratio for the country as a whole, it needs immediate attention from the churches themselves.

Hammock and Book

HE IS a wise man who knows how to use a vacation. For lack of such knowledge many people find the actual task of spending the vacation season burdensome and a bore. But one unfailing resource is a good book. When the sun is high in the summer sky and the "Laz Lawrence" is dancing over the stubble and other men sweat and stew and pant here and there trying to have a good time, the lover of books can loll in his hammock in the shade of the maple trees with a book in his hand—a book light enough to handle and to read, while the nymphs of romance, or travel or poetry dance around him till the sun goes down. There is no end of such books from which to select. Scan the book notices in THE BAPTIST. Get the books that suit your fancy. Having your book, seek the shade of a tree where the breeze blows free. Throw off all unnecessary clothing. Hang in a hammock or sprawl on the grass with book in hand and let the world go to the dog-days.

The World in Transit

BY THE ASSISTANT EDITOR

From Zero to Zero And Boast of the Sum

Australia plays the role of a social pioneer. She has given to the world the secret ballot, the Torrens system of land records and a parliamentary labor government. Now she is trying out the experiment of compulsory voting, with the result that the ratio of ballots cast to the actual number of legal voters has risen from 5 to 97 per cent. That the law is a success she will tell the world and the world is quantitatively impressed. It does quality count for anything at the ballot box? What is gained by adding 40 per cent to the mass of political incompetency which finds expression at the polls? Democracy suffers not from a lack of numbers but from a lack of sense. What the world needs is the discovery which will assure an assembling at the polling places of an increase of 40 per cent in the intelligence, integrity and public spirit of the voters. People often forget that in a democracy, absence from the polls is one way of voting. The mere act of casting a ballot, without meaning, purpose or effect, has little value. A situation may exist in which he who votes has done his country more harm than if he had been fishing on election day.

Voting Procedure for a Fellowship

An interesting suggestion of the Inquiry might be utilized in the Northern Baptist Convention. The proposal is that of a progressive assessment of growing opinion in the interested group with a view to arriving at an understanding that will be both common and correct. Instead of passing a motion with a vote by yeas and noes, for the purpose of securing to one of two parties a majority control, the question at issue would be submitted in such a form as to permit the expression of all of the various views that might be representatively held, and the effect of the vote would be to show merely what progress the group is making towards a common understanding. The good effect of such a vote would be at least twofold. It would serve to guide inquiry and discussion, by showing the probable direction they may best take in order to arrive at a true and satisfactory conclusion. It would also be a valuable index to those who have the responsibility of administration by enabling them from time to time to judge what weight ought to be given to a particular opinion as a guide to administrative policy. It involves the whole group of beneficial effects on morale (not to mention morals), spirituality and fellowship. It would have an adverse reaction in one direction. The incurable partisan who will have his way or nothing would find little exercise for his talent.

The North Pole Is Ours, What Shall We Do With It?

America is proud, the world is proud, of Byrd, Amundsen and their hardy companions who have unlocked the vast region about the north pole to the front of civilization. At this writing the Byrd party has returned in triumph from a successful flight to the pole, and the Amundsen party is somewhere on its long trial voyage of two thousand miles from Spitzbergen to Point Barrow. Henceforth the whole polar area is to become the home and sporting ground of human beings. Thus a few more distinguished names are added to the long list of those whose insight, skill and daring are giving to mankind the mastery of the earth. Their line is not ended. Others will follow. And the admiration of mankind is shifting from its butchers to its benefactors. But one field of exploration, broad, inviting and little known, awaits its discoverers. The people do not know what to do with their discovered world nor how to live together rightly in it. There is a call for a race of social explorers and pioneers, who have the insight, skill and daring to find the way for mankind to a brotherly community life. When they come and the world finds them out it may crucify rather than crown them, but they will be its transcendent pioneers, its finest sons of God. Some day will so reveal them.

The British Strike Still Muddles Towards War

Prophesying about the British strike is a skittish occupation. But there is no other way. The option is to say nothing in these columns about the supreme current event, or to note the facts at the date of writing and to guess what the situation will be when the paper reaches the reader ten days later. It may be that when the facts are all known it will turn out that the most desperate blunder of this whole blundering situation was that of Premier Baldwin in choosing to interpret the strike as a rebellion. The strikers indignantly deny any such interpretation. His attitude makes the government their open enemy, offering to them an ultimatum of unconditional surrender. A consequence is to bring the class struggle to a crisis in many nations. Organized workers in most of the highly industrialized nations now interpret the struggle in Great Britain as one in which the capitalist class is using the agency of government to crush labor; and they are making common cause with the strikers; while capitalists of other countries are hastening to assure the British government of their support against impending world revolution. Today it seems that only an overruling Providence or an unexpected increment of good sense can prevent civil war or worse.

Why Not Try Pedagogy Instead of Legislation?

From a legal point of view the state has a right to prescribe by law what shall be taught in the public schools. But the possession of that right does not make a state system of education proof against fools in the legislature. And the attempt to exercise it has set all sort of cliques from atheists to ecclesiastics to fighting for political control of the schools. The net result is to convert the public school into an institution for the registration of the people's prejudiced ignorance, of factional victories and of the teacher's hypocrisy. And the tablet on which the registration is made is the growing mind of youth. If any law could be a crime, such legislation would be a perfect example. Men learn by the blunderer's rule of trial and error, and some day, when it becomes apparent that the politician has almost ruined the schools, the people may discover again that education is safest in the hands of trained teachers. Pedagogy may not be perfect as a science or as an art, but it is the nearest approach to perfection for educational purposes that we are likely to get in this world. The alternative offered of turning education over to ranting sects and scheming politicians evokes pity for the children who may be the victims of such folly. Give the teachers professional training and professional freedom.

Religion and Education*

A sermon preached, Oct. 5, 1924, in Mandel Hall at the University of Chicago

BY ERNEST DE WITT BURTON

(Concluded from last week)

ONE cannot deal with religion on a purely intellectual basis. The college cannot simply teach about religion in an intellectual or scientific spirit. Religion has its intellectual aspect and from that point of view it must be dealt with on the same principles as that on which the college deals with all other matters intellectual. But it is also a life, in the continuance and development of which the college is even more concerned than it is with the discussion of it. And in its aspect as a life it is influenced by many things that are not set down in the curriculum. It is affected by the chapel service, which ought to be simple and yet so beautiful and impressive as to be a joyous memory throughout life. It is affected by the physical surroundings of the service.

A distinguished architect recently told me this story: Visiting in the city of Rheims before its beautiful cathedral had suffered the awful ravages of war, he entered the building at noon one day to study it as a work of art. It chanced that because there was a great religious festival going on in another church, he found the cathedral wholly unoccupied, and he wandered about it alone, drinking in its beauty with eyes long trained to read the meaning expressed in architecture. At the end of two hours he who had entered that building an agnostic found himself upon his knees, and when he left that building it was with a new religious experience and a new religious attitude.

This is but one aspect of the fact of which I am speaking, namely, that religion and the religious influence of a college are not merely, or indeed chiefly, matters of opinion or discussion or instruction. Religion is a life, and life is influenced by life. One man in a community whose honesty, courage, gentleness, and strength disclose themselves in his whole conduct, whose character at once makes you think of Jesus, may without his being aware of it have more to do with shaping the religious life of that community than all the teaching and preaching besides.

Living the Gospel

When Charles R. Henderson died, after having been for a quarter of a century the chaplain of the University of Chicago, he was respected and beloved as perhaps no other man who was ever in this university. And more than one of his colleagues said in effect, "I believe now in the possibility of such a life as that which the Gospels ascribe to Jesus, for I have myself seen it lived before my eyes."

But why did the colleagues of Doctor Henderson phrase their estimate of him thus? Why did they not say that he made them believe in the historicity of Moses, or Socrates, or Plato, or Paul?

For the men who themselves have the highest ideals, has not Jesus become the standard of living, the ideal of character, the moral leader of the race? And in the light of this fact must we not say as the final assertion that we make about the college students' religion—the religion of the college—that it must take Jesus as its inspiration and be permeated with his spirit? And must we not say this, not in the name of prejudice and pre-judgment, but in the name of historic fact and of sane and just value judgment, as we face the facts of human history?

Beautiful buildings, music, and oratory, competent instruction and freedom of thought, all have their value but more important and more effective than all of these are the lives of faculty and students in whom the spirit of Jesus Christ is reincarnated.

The spirit of Jesus! May I remind you what the characteristics of that spirit were? In this year that we call nineteen hundred twenty-four we turn back nineteen centuries to Jesus, who is still the leader and exemplar of all the centuries, as the best source to which we can go for inspiration and guidance. How did he look at life? What were his principles of thinking and acting? How did he look at religion?

The Religion of Jesus

He was born in an age and into a world that was largely dominated by tradition. To protect itself against the corrupting influence of the great outside world in the midst of which it was only, as it were, an island in an ocean, Palestine had ascribed sacredness and authority to the thinking and the literature of the past. Prophecy, which always means originality and courage to think things through afresh—prophecy in the thought of the men of that day was a thing of the past. To them belonged the humbler task of interpretation. Not their to look the facts in the face; theirs rather to cite authorities, the tradition of the elders, so-called. Into this world Jesus was born. In it he woke to consciousness and, when he found himself, repudiated its whole point of view and method of thought. Facing any question of morals or religion, he asked, not what do the scribes say, but what are the facts as these are seen in the experience of men, and what do these facts justify us in believing and doing? Finding men enslaved to a host of petty prescriptions which tended to lead them to neglect justice and mercy and the love of God, he pierced beneath the surface and the external to the great realities of life. Religion was for him not the observance of laws about food and fasting and forms of prayer; but an attitude of heart toward God and men, and conduct that was consonant with that attitude.

Let me illustrate his attitude by reference to two matters, one having direct relation to practical conduct, the other to fundamental convictions and attitude.

The sabbath was a very ancient institution. How old it was, no one, of course, knew. What they did know was that its observance was commanded in their law enjoined by the prophets, and strenuously insisted upon by the religious teachers of the day. Yet Jesus saw that as conceived and practiced it involved an utter reversion of values. Men were subordinated to an institution, not an institution administered to meet men's needs. And Jesus saw—what any man may see who stops to think but which strangely enough few have seen—that the real values of this world are in people, and that institutions of all kinds have value only as they serve people and promote their welfare. Therefore, instead of bowing his head to this ancient and sacred institution, he allowed his disciples, and encouraged others, to disregard the customs of the day based on the ancient commands. And when he was challenged, he replied in the far-reaching maxim: "The sabbath was made for man not man for the sabbath." Do you perceive how far-reaching and fundamental an utterance that is? It involves two principles that were revolutionary for that day, and have never yet been fully accepted. In the first place, Jesus in effect announced that the test of truth is not conformity to ancient tradition but human life and experience; and in the application of that principle he announced another, that the supreme values of the world are not in things, but in men. These two principles thoroughly applied to life would revolutionize it.

My second illustration is found in the great fundamental idea of God. The great service of the Hebrew people to the human race is in its idea of God. There is, to me at least, nothing more impressive in the whole history of human thinking than the process by which that people thought and fought their way up from the idea of a tribal deity who belonged to the tribes of Israel to other deities belonged to other petty nations, and who contended with them for supremacy in a territory no larger than one of the smaller states of this country—thought and fought their way till they reached that magnificent conception of a God who made the heavens and the earth, and who guided the affairs and was interested in the welfare not of Israel only but of all mankind. This great conception the Jews of Jesus' day held firmly and unwaveringly. Idolatry had once for all been left behind. Agnostics their race had never been. In the atmosphere of this idea Jesus grew up. He accepted it without abatement of any of its magnificence or its meaning, not, we must believe, because it was handed down to him, but because it commended itself to him as the best explanation of the facts. For we have seen already, and there is abundant evidence, that tradition was not for him sufficient authority for any belief or practice. But, accepting it, he also modified it. The Jewish conception of God as held in Jesus' day had in it indeed some elements based on the tender relation of a father to his children. But it was still largely dominated by the analogy of the oriental monarch. God was no more King than Father. This emphasis Jesus reversed. "Our Father who art in heaven," he taught his disciples to pray, not, "Our King who is on the throne." In other words, Jesus appropriated to the full the great inheritance of his race; that it came down from the past was to him no argument against its truth; but he also enriched it and empowered it out of his own experience and on the basis of his own faith. For I am sure you will agree with me that the deep conviction that God is Father to his children can arise only in the soul of one who has entered into an experience of his love, and that acceptance must always involve an act of faith that goes beyond any mere scientific demonstration.

Place of Religion in the College

But what, perhaps you will ask, has all this to do with my subject? Much, as I believe. It is indeed vitally and essentially related to the question, what place religion is to have in the college.

For as sheer historic fact, Jesus is the world's greatest thinker in the field of religion, and therefore the college which in every field seeks to get the best from the past and make the best use of it must take Jesus into account and cannot do better than to accept his spirit and follow his method. There have been great mathematicians in the world, and we have no evidence that Jesus was such. There have been great artists in the world, and Jesus painted no pictures, left behind no "Hermes" or "Victory." But in religion he was supreme.

Moreover, the method by which Jesus dealt with religion in his day is essentially one with that which the world has now in modern times discovered to be the best and only method of dealing with all problems that have relation to human life. In short, Jesus was the first great exemplar of the scientific spirit as the most enlightened men of science understand and practice it today. He faced facts squarely, made them, rather than opinions, however ancient and honorable, the guide of his thinking and the basis of his action, set facts in relation to one another, penetrated beneath their surface to find their meaning, brought imagination into service, and to all that mere induction or deduction could prove added an estimate of values and a strong element of faith. Slowly the world is learning that this is the best way to think, and all the progress of our modern times is due to this method of thought.

But it is not simply, I must remind you again, in his method of thinking that Jesus is an exemplar to us. The content of his thinking, the example of his character—these are invaluable inheritances. For all the centuries have gone on to prove not only that he had a right way of thinking, but that he reached right conclusions, and realized an ideal of character than which we can think of no better. His estimate of human values, his conception of God, his ideal of character as exemplified in himself have never been outlived or left behind.

Because of these things, Jesus, not only as the founder of our religion and the object of our reverence, but as the great exemplar of the best type of thinking that the world has yet discovered, the best expounder of the fundamentals of religion, the best ideal of character, is entitled to recognition and leadership in all our colleges.

Jesus an Ever-Present Force

But I must add also another reason in support of his place of leadership in education. If, as I believe, the prime business of the college is to develop personalities, then for this reason Jesus ought to be an ever-present force in the life of the college. It is only a few days ago that I heard the dean of the colleges in a large university say with emphasis and seriousness that the impact of Jesus of Nazareth is the greatest possible influence for the development of character among college students. He was speaking as a representative not of religion, but of education—but of education that recognized that the ultimate values to be achieved by education are not merely intellectual, but broadly and deeply personal; and so speaking, he counted Jesus as the most potent influence for good that we can employ.

I come back therefore to say what I implied at the beginning, that religion and education, and college education in particular, are natural allies. Only now I wish to say this in the more specific form that no college, whether founded in the name of religion or of democracy or of science, can afford not to give to Jesus and the religion of Jesus a central place in its life and its plans. We need never fear that in doing so we are introducing a conflicting or a repressive influence, one that will endanger our scientific attitude or our educational ideals. For Jesus is the great representative of the scientific spirit; he is the first great affirmer of the supremacy of human values and of the doctrine that man is of more significance than all the institutions that he has made or inherited or by which he is influenced. No college can achieve its highest possibilities which does not bring to its aid the great forces of enlightenment and inspiration that the history of the race has placed at its disposal, and of all these none so well deserves the place of preeminence as Jesus of Nazareth.

Guide Posts to the Higher Road

People will not be better than the books they read

BY STEPHEN J. HERBEN

FOR several years now those who have been planning a summer vacation have been exhorted to "take along a book." It is a worthy slogan, and he who gives heed to it and makes the reading of a number of good books a part of his vacation schedule, and holds to it religiously, is sure to reap a rich reward. But, of course, much depends upon the character of the book that you take along. In literature one may always mingle with folks of quality. There is an aristocracy of mind and culture, and there are no hindrances to your joining that noble body. It requires only that one will center his intellectual interests upon that which is pure and of good report, and associate mentally with the clean and wholesome and worthy. Books enter radically into the making of character. Therefore, as an aid in the fashioning of good character read good books.

We are rich in good books, although it is true of many of them that they are not always popular with literary critics and do not achieve the distinction of newspaper notoriety. It is the good book, however, that satisfies—because it is a book that helps, especially in relation to the abiding elements of character, culture and life.

To many readers and book lovers a publishers' catalog is a most interesting and stimulating document. To browse about in it is a delight to the cultured soul, it broadens horizons and quickens one's desire to know about books and to possess them. An excursion in the recent list of the Abingdon Press will disclose some things that will rejoice the heart of the book lover. Ministers, for instance, will be interested in the new Boreham book, "A Faggot of Torches," brief precepts on "texts that have made history." There is an irresistible charm about the books of F. W. Boreham, the noted Australian Baptist preacher, that has captivated hosts of readers throughout the whole world. Then there is a book by Arthur W. Hewitt, a Vermont country preacher, entitled "Steeple among the Hills" that makes one think of Ian Maclaren and his "Bonnie Briar Bush"; a volume that confines itself to the life and problems of the rural parish, and one that all ministers, whether of the city or country, should read. Another Vermonter, Dr. Timothy Prescott Frost, has made a new study of some of the parabolic sayings of Jesus, and these he has brought out under the title "Tragedy and Triumph." It will be very helpful to our clearer understanding of the mission and message of Jesus. Bishop Edwin H. Hughes has a new book this season. It is called "God's Family," and discusses the great matters of the divine Fatherhood and human brotherhood in a clear and convincing fashion. A contribution is made by Prof. William North Rice, Wesleyan University, to the current discussion in a small but cogent volume, "Science and Religion," in which he maintains that there is no more conflict between these two than there is between trains going along on parallel tracks.

For those whose eyes are lifted to regions beyond the seas there is that delightful combination of biography and travel description by Welthy Honsinger, "Beyond the Moon-Gate," the story of the experiences of a missionary during her twelve years of intensive service in China. And—another book on China—Harry R. Caldwell's "Blue Tiger," one of the most thrilling recitals of the exploits of missionary, scientist and hunter of big and ferocious game. It is an unusual book, and bears the hearty commendation, in its introduction, from Robert Chapman Andrews, leader to the American Expedition to the Gobi desert, the author having been an invaluable member of one of them. And, again, a book on China that country being much in the international eye these days—Harold Speakman's "Beyond Shanghai."

It may be that the reader's special interest veers toward nature stories. Here is a fascinating book by Albert Benjamin Cunningham, "Animal Tales of the Rockies," which will keep the wide-awake boys and girls interested from start to finish; while Cunningham's other book, "Old Black Bass," will quicken the pulse of many a fisherman and make him long for the time when he can cast his line again for the elusive and game bass. The late Bishop William A. Quayle was a natural lover of the first order. His "A Book of Clouds" is a thing of beauty, both in workmanship as a piece of bookmaking, and in literary craftsmanship, while as an interpretation of the handiwork of the Creator as revealed in the clouds it stands alone in literature.

On the Slopes of Parnassus

When I would know thee . . . my thought looks upon thy well-made choice of friends and books.—Ben Johnson

WHEN any one says, "I don't care for poetry," it generally means that he hasn't happened to find the kind of poetry he would enjoy, for there are certainly poets for all tastes, and it is a pity for any one who loves reading to miss the pleasure he would surely find in the music of verse. There are few of us who are not stirred by the feel of the salt air and the dash of the spray in John Masefield's "Salt Water Ballads." Do you know his "Sea-Fever," from this collection? Here is the opening stanza:

*Must go down to the seas again, to the lonely sea and the sky,
And all I ask is a tall ship and a star to steer her by,
And the wheel's kick and the wind's song and the white sail's shaking,
And a grey mist on the sea's face and a grey dawn breaking.*

Masefield excels, too, in telling a story in verse. Read "Dauber," a tale of the sea, and the lovely allegory "King Cole," a story of the traveling circus. Many people say that they find Edwin Arlington Robinson difficult to read, but there are scores of his better poems, especially the sonnets, that are most appealing, and it is a pity for any one who reads at all to be ignorant of the work of the man who is acclaimed both in England and America as our greatest living poet. "The Sheaves," a poem of the harvest, ends with these lines:

*So in a land where all days are not fair,
Fair days went on till on another day
A thousand golden sheaves were lying there,
Shining and still, but not for long to stay—
As if a thousand girls with golden hair
Might rise from where they slept and go away.*

One of the most sympathetic and musical of the younger poets is Margaret Tod Ritter, of Colorado, who has published recently a slim volume called "Mirrors." She writes:

To Any Tall Mountain

*To prop the skies up with your snows,
To wear the sunset's emerald-rose,
To fill the streams from your silver cask,
To sleep at night in a purple mask;
You do these things while I must sit
In a stuffy red-plush room and knit.*

"Resurgence" is one of her poems of deep feeling: *I have so loved you I can never find Rest from the thought of you in any place.
Far have I left your cypress-bed behind,
But not your hand's light touch; but not your face.*

*Only this moment did a voice contrive
To make hope start up, quivering. I drew
Close to the sound of it: you were live
A little space with laughter blowing through.
You were alive and then you were more dead
Than ever you had been through all the years.
I heard a voice and knew not what it said:
Some simple trifle meant for other ears.
To one to share this exile and this pain;
To one to know that you have died again.*

For summer reading nothing could be more companionable than Louise Driscoll's poems in "Garden of the West" and "The Garden of the West." She knows and writes of the flowers and the birds, and writes of them delightfully. "I hope there's Spring in Heaven," she writes, and another poem, "The Laughing Prayer," makes one ashamed to fret.

Fanny Stearns Davis, in her latest volume, "The Ancient Beautiful Things," writes to her little daughter:

*You shall not wear velvet,
Nor silken broidery.
But brown things, and straight things,
That leave your body free.*

*Your friends shall be the tall wind,
The river, and the tree;—
The sun that laughs and marches;
The swallows, and the sea.*

*And you shall envy no man,
Nor hurt your heart with sighs,
For I will keep you simple
That God may make you wise!*

Her poems are filled with the loveliness not only of wind and rain and nature's colors, but of home and affection.

Another young poet, Marie Emilie Gilchrist, brought out in April a collection of her verse, called "Wide Pastures." She writes charmingly of country scenes and uses symbols from country life. She tells of "Time's great barn, hay-strewn and still," of the "timbered ridges of Vermont" as "green staircases the silver moon treads lightly," of "stubborn orchards" as "gnarled outposts of a race of pioneers." "Wide Pastures" is emphatically a book to read and enjoy out-of-doors and in many of the poems there is a wisdom and true philosophy that is inspiring.

James Stephens, the Irish poet, whose double domain, as some one has said, is Ireland and Fairyland, expects to bring out his Collected Poems in the fall, but meanwhile he has put together in "A Poetry Recital" the poems he selected to read on his recent American tour, and several new ones, besides. Who could help liking "The Daisies"?

*In the scented bud of the morning-O,
When the windy grass went rippling far,
I saw my dear one walking slow,
In the field where the daisies are.*

*We did not laugh and we did not speak
As we wandered happily to and fro;
I kissed my dear on either cheek,
In the bud of the morning-O.*

*A lark sang up from the breezy land,
A lark sang down from a cloud afar,
And she and I went hand in hand
In the field where the daisies are.*

The recently-published "Golden Treasury of Irish Verse," put together by Lennox Robinson, is a collection of lyrics and stories in verse for all who cherish a fondness for the Irish character. There are poems by Irish writers from Goldsmith, Congreve, Thomas Moore and Emily Brontë to Moira O'Neill, James Stephens, Padraic Colum, Katherine Tynan, and other Irish poets of today.

That famous and indispensable collection of verse from the older English poets, Palgrave's "Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics," has lately been followed by Binyon's "Golden Treasury of Modern Lyrics," which includes the more recent British poets, and for those who wish to be introduced to the American poets of today nothing could be better than Marguerite Wilkinson's "New Voices." Mrs. Wilkinson not only gives selections from the new verse but includes some interesting criticism which helps one to understand and appreciate it. Most of us have probably modified our opinion of "free verse," since its rather crude beginnings, when G. K. Chesterton wittily said, "Free verse is no more a new form of poetry than sleeping in a ditch is a new form of architecture." Free verse is of many kinds, and all poetry-lovers have learned to appreciate the value of the escape from the old conventional forms, and the freedom the poets have won to express beauty either with or without rhyme and the regular metres.

"The New Poetry," a collection made by Harriet Monroe and A. C. Henderson, is another fine and very popular collection of the work of the younger American poets.

Two poets whose work is most distinctively American are Vachel Lindsay—famous for "Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight," "My Fathers Came From Kentucky," and "I Know All This When Gipsy Fiddle Cry"—and John G. Neihardt, whom Katharine Lee Bates, of Wellesley College, calls the Walter Scott of Nebraska. Mr. Neihardt's latest poem, the thrilling "Song of the Indian Wars," is the third he has written in his projected epic of the West.

"The World's Great Religious Poetry" is a splendid collection made by Caroline Miles Hill, which has been widely commended since it appeared a few years ago and has sold a great number of copies. The term religious poetry is used in its broadest sense, and the volume contains poems to fit almost every mood of aspiration and love of nature's God.

(Volumes of poetry mentioned are published by Macmillan.)

Along the Book-Lover's Trail

BY MARGARET HANSCOM

NOW that every one is talking about well-balanced meals, counting calories and estimating vitamins, why not put the same sort of test to work on your reading? There might be some severe cases of mental indigestion uncovered. And since vacations give the great opportunity for readjustment this well-balanced list of books is offered for inspection.

Such a biography as that of Dame Nellie Melba's—"Melodies and Memories" offers excellent entertainment. It is an inspiring account of how the little Australian tom-boy became a great prima-donna, the toast of four continents, and the intimate friend of kings, musicians, actors and great statesmen; it is written in a delightfully sparkling style.

Arnold Bennett's latest book of essays offers just the right sort of leisurely reading. He calls the new book, "Things Which Have Interested Me," and his alert and sympathetic mind finds meat for reflection in almost every phase of activity. He discusses with versatility and wit such things as Spain and bull-fights, reading, politics, friendship, insomnia, Marcel Proust, how to spend money, etc. His vivacious style makes this informing book singularly readable.

Among books of travel there are three of quite different types. In "Constantinople," the author, George Young, has filled the empty shells of old Byzantium, the ruined temples and palaces, with the vivid life of the past and linked the Old Turkey with the new. He gives an historical perspective and a political bird's-eye-view. The book is illustrated with old maps as well as with many photographs. "Beyond the Baltic," by A. MacCallum Scott, is a challenge to the belief that to Rome is due much of the credit for our advanced civilization. Mr. Scott claims that the adventurous, hardy people of the Scandinavian north, or of the northern Mediterranean, as he calls the Baltic, have contributed immeasurably to the world's advancement. There is much local color and diverting humor. The third book is by Henry Beston—"The Book of Gallant Vagabonds." There is Trelawney, faithful, level-headed friend of Shelley, and there is Morton, the trader who landed in 1625 in a meadow (now Boston) and was later arrested by that strict disciplinarian, Miles Standish, for raising and celebrating the first May Pole. And there are a host of others equally brave and true.

For mental stimulation there are several books on the present religious controversy—"The Unknown Bible," by Professor Conrad H. Moehlman, gives candid guidance to "the book nobody knows." It studies the difficulties, the Old and New Testament, the rabbinical attitude, the Protestant and Catholic angles, gives a method of approach that leads to a better understanding of the beauty and genuineness. Prof. J. Y. Simpson of Edinburgh in "Landmarks in the Struggle Between Science and Religion" paints a background picture of the great conflict between science and religion which he does not describe as a conflict, but as a parallel march of progress. This is a scholarly, authentic work by a great teacher. And in "Thinking Through" Alva Martin Kerr achieves a clear vision of where the controversy is carrying the religious world.

The lover of biographies will find much inspiration in these three: "Disraeli: Alien Patriot," by E. Raymond, the story of the great Jewish statesman who helped establish the English empire; "Disraeli and Gladstone," by D. C. Somervell, a dramatic comparison of two careers alike only in their great influence upon English statesmanship and in their devotion to the widely divergent views; "The Pilgrim of Eternity," by John Drinkwater, one of the best biographies of Byron ever penned, by a man who has established a reputation as a just and sympathetic interpreter of the lives of great men.

Among the more strictly religious books several may be mentioned as important. Dr. Henry Howard has become famous for his fine preaching at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York. His latest book is called "The Threshold." "Getting Out of the Rough," by J. W. Vander Meulen, is a delightful book by a confirmed golfer on the analogies of golf to life. "The Minister and His Own Soul," Lewis' short masterpiece should surely be part of the equipment of the vacation-bound minister. For a life of Christ there is "Our Lord's Earthly Life," by David Smith, the author of "In the Days of His Flesh," and for inspirational reading the set, "Little Books on the Christian Life," six small but noteworthy volumes gayly jacketed in blue.

After this fine repast of good books the reader may be allowed a bon-bon of Stoddard King's called "What the Queen Said," pert and nonsensical rhymes, sometimes discovered to be quite sensible after all, and irremediably gay.

(The books above mentioned are published by Doran.)

Relaxation in Romance

"Leisure without books is death."—Seneca

BOOKS that have remained in chaste tidiness all winter are taken from their shelves when vacations come along; sometimes they are carried on strange journeys, tell their story against the lovely background of the open, become grass stained and weather beaten. Or they may find a more tranquil retreat on some shaded veranda. Bookstores flaunt their gayly jacketed volumes for the benefit of the prospective vacationist. Fiction has a prominent place and several recent volumes have been of particular interest.

One of the most stirring adventure stories of the season is "Spanish Bayonet" (Doran); a story of colonial Florida in the days just preceding the revolution. It is an exciting romance with poignantly dramatic moments. A young Englishman, two young Minorcan slaves, and a tyrant master are involved in a crucial struggle. The book is warmed with the poetic genius of Stephen Vincent Binet, the author, as in the lines: "The moon was a sailor's lamp now, a lamp of silver salt, sea-crusted, at the masthead of heaven. The stars were lights in a rigging. As he lay back he felt not only the movement of the boat, but a larger, vaguer roll, the roll of earth itself, a dark, huge ark plunging forward slowly through a black and silver waste."

Adventures of another sort await you in P. G. Wodehouse's latest—"He Rather Enjoyed It" (Doran). The financial mishaps of that impudent creation, Stanley Featherstonehaugh Utridge, make a rollicking book.

A most delicately spun novel comes from an English author, "The Farthing Spinster" (Doran), by Catherine Dodd. It is founded upon an old curse called the "Curse on Jellis Fathynge," made during the reign of Henry the VII—"lett no femail chyld of a Farthyng take the accursed name of Jellis for if shee do, surlie will misfortune attende her. Never will shee gain a spouse, but end her days a lonelie spinster." This is the story of three lovely women of three generations who bore the name of Jellis. The characters seem as real in the Jane Austen period as when they shift to post-war days. It was the Jellis Farthing of 1800 who discovered the curse in an old escritoire. It was the Jellis Farthing of 1920 who burned it.

Percy MacKaye, author of "Tall Tales of the Kentucky Hills" (Doran), claims that the tales in his book are told just as he heard them from that veteran story teller, Sol, the "mountain Munchhausen." "The Cats That Clawed to Heaven," "The Hickory Pick Tooth," "The Meat of a Snow Ball," "Cain's Ducklings"—they are fantastic yarns told in mountain dialect, rich in humor and spiced with a remarkable imagination.

"Mr. Bottleby Sees It Through" (Doran), H. Temple Thurston's delightful love story of an erudite young Egyptologist tells how he suddenly discovered that he was in love and that here was a subject of which he knew nothing. His shy attempts to learn make a whimsical and diverting novel. "Treading the Winepress" (Doran), by Ralph Connor, is another fine romance. It tells of a young Canadian veteran's last stand. Written against the rugged background of Nova Scotia it has a significance for all who find divinity mirrored in human character.

"Toward the Flame" (Doran) is not really fiction but it has all the elements of a story. It's a tremendously tense yet contained narrative of one officer's experiences in the A. E. F. He sees in the war, not the superficial splendor seen by the soldier born, but with a swift intuition the tragic commonplace. He is a poet and writes with an artistry that will not be downed.

If you think of books as luxuries remember these few lines of Arnold Bennett's—"For the price of a first-rate nailbrush you can buy, fully illustrated and well bound, a history of the earth. As for the price of an elegant evening dress, it is more than the equivalent of the cost in encyclopaedic form of the whole recorded sum of human knowledge."

"TAKE ALONG A BOOK"

The Devotional Life

The Bible as a Book of Religion

Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me.—John 5: 39.

BY HARRY P. DEWEY

OFTEN as we roam through certain portions of the Bible searchingly and prayerfully, we are sensible of a peculiarly spiritual atmosphere and the pages seem inter-penetrated with a living spirit. The reading of certain passages slowly, quietly and thoughtfully reacts upon and exhilarates the soul.

Are you sagging in body or mind because of your toil? There is renewal of vigor for you as you repeat, "Come unto me, ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

You will escape from the hard matter-of-factness and monotony of the daily grind, breathe the air of the fields, hear the song of brooks, and the pulses of your faith will be quickened, as you yield yourself to the cadences of the Shepherd's psalm.

Are you perplexed concerning momentous decisions to be made or plans to be wrought out? Say to yourself that assurance of the prophet, "Thou shalt hear a voice behind thee saying, 'This is the way, walk ye in it, when thou turnest to the right hand, and when thou turnest to the left,'" and more than likely some clear guiding intimation will be given to you.

Comfort in the Bible

Are you wakeful because of many cares and anxieties, or for any cause, mental or physical? The drowsy sensations are more likely to steal upon you if you employ as a hypnotic the confident lines of the psalmist, "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety"; or repeat, with the dear familiar imagery in your fancy, the message to the prophet, "As a man whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

Are you sorely pressed in an emergency for which your strength is too weak, is there doubtful foreboding in your heart? Then, make abundant use of the promises whose very sound is vibrant with good cheer.

Mrs. Elbert F. Baldwin has given in a recent number of the Outlook a most vivid account of the experience on the Roosevelt, as in a terrible storm that gallant ship responded to a call of distress, and stood faithfully by in the heroic and successful effort to save the helpless crew of the foundering Antiope. The point in the description to which I particularly refer is when three days had passed, all efforts at rescue had proved futile, two seamen had been lost, and there was but an hour of daylight remaining. The wind had increased and the approaching night seemed ominous indeed. The situation appeared beyond human aid, and "a sort of calmness of despair or faith," fell upon the Roosevelt's passengers. They spoke to one another of prayer, and all prayed inwardly. "Then," continues the writer, "there was a hasty searching of Psalms," and such verses as these rewarded the quest: "The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea"; "he that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

The hopeful words were not recalled and uttered in vain, for this is our friend's testimony, as noted in her diary's record of the tremendous experience: "How dynamic the Psalms! Just to copy this helps."

Cherish, preserve and diligently read the Book of books.

Seek to understand it the better by availing yourself of the aid of that scholarship of our day which is sincere, wisely discriminative, constructive and reverent—some of the biblical criticism is not all that—yet know that your own prayerful common sense will enable you to see and to appropriate the most precious treasures. Remember that the Bible, taken all in all, is the biography of a people in process of being educated by God; that the focal point in that schooling is one supreme personage, and all in the book which comes before the portrayal of him anticipates him, and all which follows that portrayal reflects him.

Strive especially to know the four Gospels, and you may expect that as you form the habit of turning to them frequently, he of whom you read will seem to emerge from the pages and become a living presence, doing for you that which on the first Easter afternoon he did for two saddened and bewildered men, as he drew nigh to them and walked along with them and, while their hearts were burning within them, opened to them the Scriptures and showed them how it behooved the Christ to suffer and to enter into his glory.

The Inspired Book

Is the Bible inspired?

It is the most human book ever written, but as we bring our humanness to its humanness it finds us, as Coleridge said, as no other book does. We come to it in our weakness, and even as we read it imparts strength. We come to it in our doubts and uncertainties, and even as we read it dispels the mists. We come to it polluted by our selfishness and sin, and even as we read the cleansing begins. At times we are especially conscious that by its influence upon us we are given a mystical and quickening touch with the Divine Presence.

Its authority is the authority of its convincing truth; and we know that it is instinct with the Spirit, as is no other book, because it helps us to live the more abounding life.

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topic for June 13

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meeting Helps" will be to the following books; "Modern Discipleship and What It Means" by Woods; "Twelve Tests of Character" by Fosdick; "The Man Nobody Knows" by Barton; "Gates and Keys to Bible Books" by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible" by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church" by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers" by Miller; "God's Dynamite" by Lerrigo. The books may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society. A few others may be added later.

The Scripture passages will give you an idea about what the Bible—or parts of the Bible—have gone through, and how they were preserved.

After reading these passages, and any other materials which you know of about the things through which the Bible has gone, look up in an encyclopedia something about smelting.

Trace the iron ore from its clay beginning to its refined state—seeing what it is that causes the difference. If you can get from the public library a copy of Ralph Parlette's "University of Hard Knocks" be sure to read his comments on "The Sufferings of the Red Mud" on page 18. If you cannot get the book at the library and care to buy it, it may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society for $1.50. You will feel that it is money well spent.

Refining Fires

In meeting, have your group tell about the refining of iron ore, bringing in, if you care to, some of the thoughts of Ralph Parlette. Show that the fire merely refines and makes more valuable the iron. Or perhaps you would prefer to use the gold ore as an example—with the same inference.

Then, having traced the metal to its refined state, tell of the hardships and "fire" through which the Bible and its parts have gone. Show that the Bible, too, has become more valuable because of its "refining process."

If you want to show some of the recent sufferings through which copies of the Bible have gone, you may read a very fascinating story in Miss Applegarth's "China Shepherdess." On page 107 of this book you will find the story "The Best Seller in a Cellar." Perhaps one of the members of the Woman's Mission Society of your church has a copy of this book, or you may get it from the library. If you want to have this delightful book of stories in your own library, you may get it from the Publication Society for $1.75.

We are all agreed, aren't we, that the summer assemblies are worth while? And yet there are a great many young people on whom the words "summer assembly" make no impression. How can they be made to realize the significance and importance of these great gatherings of young people?

Northern California B. Y. P. U. has

Convention Hall of Fame

REV. LINCOLN McCONNELL

Pastor of the First Baptist church, Oklahoma City, Okla., whose early life, which sounds like fiction, and whose present-day life fit him for this task, will speak on "The Conquest of Prejudice" at the Friday evening session of the Los Angeles Convention of Baptist Young People to be held July 7-11.

"lighted" on a very good idea. They are having a "poster contest." Individual members of local societies are eligible. They are asked to prepare one or more posters advertising the Asilomar assembly. The poster idea may be as original as the individual cares to make it. Any wording may be on the poster, providing "Northern California B. Y. P. U. Summer Assembly, Asilomar, July 16-24" appears with it. Another requirement is that each poster submitted must be posted in the local church for four consecutive Sundays before June 27. Three cash prizes will be awarded to the makers of the three best posters.

Do you see what the results of such a contest might be? The individual who enters the contest will inform himself, first of all, about the details and purpose of the summer assembly. He will take an active interest in the assembly, or he will realize that his poster will not be genuinely helpful. By thus helping himself, the person making the poster will be aiding the society. His own knowledge of young people's work (gained through his informing himself of the assembly) will necessarily make him interested in the work of the local society. He will do his best to bring honor to the local through his poster. And, finally, the individual will be helping materially to increase attendance at the assembly. It all works out and back to the individual help which such a poster will give.

Have You Tried It?

Have you ever tried such an idea—not just for an assembly, but for any rally or party or special meeting? Why not try it, then? Your rules may not be as elaborate as this. You may decide to have the posters shown but one Sunday in advance of a certain date. It may not be necessary to give a cash prize; perhaps a book or pennant would serve the purpose.

And such a contest need not be for only a state or association or city. A local would profit by a similar contest, either among individuals or groups.

Incidentally, while such a contest is going on, individuals usually see the need for better and more constant advertising of not only the special affairs of a church or society, but of the regular meetings. Perhaps they may be inspired to have a year-round advertising campaign, the results of which would make the effort worth while.

But—one step at a time. Begin the year-round advertising by having a special poster contest first. Advertise—it pays.

The Chimney Corner

Michael's Bookshop

By JEANNE KIRKLAND

THE young man was fat and chubby. His eyes danced merrily over some idea brought to mind by the book held loosely in his hand, propped as he was on the window-sill, one fat leg beside him, taxing the capacity of his over-tight striped suit.

"Do you sell many books?" he asked suddenly, his voice striking sharply in the still room.

"Eh?" the dealer's keen brown eyes looked at him over the moth-eaten ledger. "No."

The book-dealer paid no further attention. The young man smiled. Old moth-ball! Old fossil! Probably born in a bookshop . . . Well, there was no time for playing. If he was to find the volume his aunt wanted, he must look for it.

"What do you want?" the book-dealer's wife asked eagerly.

He told them. The old man shook his head positively; but the young man knew better. They had told him books weren't there before. Old moth-balls! They didn't know their own stock. No wonder; the dust alone proclaimed the fact that it hadn't been turned over for years.

The young fellow hummed as he searched, the chimney-smoked lamp lighting his face, making him more incongruous with his surroundings. If his aunt had to have the book, he must find it; and if it was anywhere, it must be here.

At last he gave a triumphant whistle and, putting the lamp back on its shelf, came forward grinning, holding out the volume.

The woman left the stairs and came toward them curiously; the old man peered at the book incredulously.

"But I hadn't a copy," he complained. "I told them all it was out of print—that I hadn't one." He took the old Murray's Reader in his hand and fondled it lovingly.

The young man was surprised. "Do you mean to tell me," he asked, "that many people want that old book?"

The dealer looked up pityingly, his face struggling with emotions, his eyes filling. His cheek had a queer jerk, which now came in evidence.

"Yes." He was silent then, turning the book over in his hand.

"How much is it?" asked the chubby one.

"I don't know," the old man's eyes were dreamy with that far away look of his. It was as though some one had brought back to him a happy bit from his youth, something which had temporarily escaped him.

"I thought I had sold it," he said. "I hate to part with it, again."

"I'll pay you well."

"I know—but it's the old people, boy. They come in with shaking hands and ask for it. 'Have you Murray's Reader?' they ask. Their voices tremble. You should see their faces when I tell them, 'No, I haven't a copy.' They beg me—they go away all shaken up."

"What do they want it for?"

The old man shook his head again; the dreamy look came back into his eyes.

"Perhaps they studied out of it at school," prompted the wife.

"Yes, they used it then. It brings back memories," admitted the dealer, hugging the book to him.

"Do you mean, sir, that I oughtn't to buy it?—to ask you to sell?—that I ought to let you keep it for one of them?—even though I found it!" The young man watched curiously for an answer, but the dealer only wagged his head.

"I'll pay more than the book's commercial value—I'll give you whatever you ask. My aunt sent me for it—she's an English teacher in a college. She's getting along in years herself." He put his hand over his mouth quickly.

"Is it valuable?" he asked a moment later.

"No." Again the dealer was silent.

The Gift of Silence

THE forest has it. If a sermon lives
In trees, they do not shout it in your ear;

hear!

The calm stars have it. Silently they sweep

Their searchlights on the faulty hu-

The rare reward of their consummate art.

The mountains have it. Yet how stern they stand,

Dwarfing earth's meanness, and its

If only I might such a faith command,
Knowing the patient heaven was on

We fuss and fret, we criticize and scold—

Dear God, we do not do the good we

"I couldn't charge you more than two dollars for it," he admitted at last. "That isn't it. It really isn't worth even two dollars—except that there is the demand. I could get that." He took out his black handkerchief and mopped his brow. "You ought to see them—but perhaps you don't like old people?—their shaking hands—the eagerness in their voices—the hope. And then when I say, 'No, I haven't a copy'—but there, you wouldn't understand! It's their hands—" His own fingers trembled over the book. He looked up at the young man anxiously.

A puzzled frown spread over the other's face. Something he did not understand gripped him. The wife, who stood behind the old man, appeared to signal him. Her eyes clearly told him to buy; she seemed eager, gloating. But the dealer's eyes were narrowed now, the heavy eyebrows ominous.

"Take it, boy," he said. "Just two dollars. Money is a sordid thing. I hate to think of them coming again, of their voices when they ask me, 'Have you a copy of—'"

"What do you take me for?" demanded the young man, his blue eyes flashing, his chest out. "I've got some feeling. My aunt can—my aunt's not so old as all that. Here, I'll put it to you this way: Keep the book. See that the person who needs it most, gets it!"

"The one who needs it most," repeated the old man, but before his muttering voice ceased the chubby one had acted. In a mere twinkle he had slapped his hat on the back of his head, and vanished through the door.

The old man sighed. It was as though his faith in the world, had been reassured. His eyes were dreamy, his hands tender as they caressed the old book.

His wife turned on him angrily. "What do you mean? You'd better take a dollar and a half for it. You tell that story to get two dollars, and you overdo it every time and lose all!"

The man's eyes narrowed; his fingers tightened their hold on the book. "I misjudged human nature again," he admitted sadly. "I thought he was harder hearted than he was." He put his hand on the arm of the chair and got up; then craftily changing his mind, reseated himself. "Go," he said, "go hide the Murray again."—Brief Stories.

Questions

Do you pronounce suite "suit" or "sweet"? The latter is correct.

Are you guilty of spelling luscious without the "s"?

Do you say, "I will divide it among you two"? It's "between" when there are only two; "among" when there are several.

BOYS and Girls

When the Alphabet Runs Away

By PEGGY

WE HAVE just had the funniest experience in our family, a Visitor has come to stay in our house and she knows a little English that she has had to learn to talk and Bill, Timothy and I have been her teachers. You have no idea what a comical language we speak until you begin to try explaining this or that to some one, and find you can't explain! We had to call in our Uncletim, who is just adored being asked because our Visitor is an absolutely wonderful young lady, and she is so dreadfully upset over "American," as she calls our language.

"Don't be too upset," Uncletim begs. "You see we have drawn our words from thirty-five or more languages."

"Oh me!" sighs our Visitor, rolling her eyes. "Dirty-five? Oh me!" We adore her in silence, but Uncletim explains more:

"And another thing that makes American so hard to spell is because twenty-five of the twenty-six letters in our alphabet are silent in certain combinations, and then we overwork all these letters. Take A for instance; it trots around with ten different sounds—just try these after me and you'll see." (We had four said them—great fun to see the real difference in sound, try it yourself!)

All; artistic; art; fat; fare; ale; ask; any; cran; sofa. E has eight separate sounds: get; prey; sergeant; valley; fern; meet; far. I masquerades around with four sounds—hit; habit; isle; machine. U has six—full; rule; but; burn; feud; injure; and even Y has three sounds—by; yet; pretty. And 'ough' can make you a lot of trouble."

"Oh me!" sighs our Visitor. "Drouble, y?"

"Yes. Cough, dough, through and through, not coo and duff and throff and pol! Do you get that?"

"Oh Uncletim, you have mixed her all up!"

"Nonsense, my dears. Shall I mix you up? Tell me why the letter U should be in eau in beauty, ue in value, eu in pneumatic, ew in ewe, ui in nuisance, ew in ew, heu in rheumatism, hu in rhubarb, u in lieu, ough in through, u in unite, and ou in you. The truth of the matter is the alphabet runs away with us all. It chases us off the map! That's why we're such poor spellers, we Americans." Timothy is very solemn. "But I'm a good speller," he boasted. "I get an A spelling every time. I can spell almost anything."

"Oh me, how vonderful a poy!" beamed our Visitor. And our naughty Uncletim decided to take him down a peg or two,

The Explorers' Club

for Timothy was beaming from ear to ear with pride at her praise.

"Ahem!" he began, "I am, as my one dear niece knows, and my two precious nephews also know, interested in chemistry, and so I would ask you to spell for me—Trioxymethylantraquinonic?"

Timothy dropped his jaws! His eyes were like saucers! "I can't!" he cried. "What is it, a real word?"

"Of course it is. It's a chemical compound. Well, if you can't quite manage that little mouthful, just try this—Dichlorohydroquinonedisulphonic."

"Oh me!" giggled our Visitor. "Dis so bad tonk, it shall I never spik! Never!"

"But don't be discouraged, when three little Americans are so woefully tongue-tied. Angel lambs, have you read Charles Kingsley's 'Water Babies'?"

We all had.

So then our wicked Uncletim said he remembered a simple little word Charles Kingsley gave in that book. He would spell it for us himself, if we would please pronounce it. In fact he would give ten cents to the child who did this best. We pricked up our ears, for ten cents will do the nicest things! But this is what we heard—

"Necrobiosopaleonthydrockthoanthropopithekology."

Not one of us earned that dime! Our Visitor held her pretty hands over her pretty ears—"Dis American, awful!"

Uncletim smiled. And his smile reminded him of something. "But I know a longer word than that. The longest in the English language, and you're doing it this very minute, every one of you."

We looked at each other. Nobody knew. "What is the longest word, Uncletim?" Timothy begged.

"Smiles," smiled our uncle. "There's

TWO little misses I met one day—

Twins—and so alike were they
I could not tell one from the other
Until I called their mother.

"The one who is leading the way," she said, a mile between the first and last letter!"

"So there is," we agreed.

And then Bill decided it was his turn to make an impression. But first he had to keep looking at a note in his pocket. Then: "There's a boy in my class with a very ordinary name, Uncletim, but he spells it Phthirknurr. Can you pronounce it?"

It was grand to see Uncletim looking deeply puzzled: "An ordinary name, you say? Spell it again."

Bill spelled it again, and suddenly Uncletim laughed: "Turner!" he cried. "But mercy, what a way to spell it."

All this time mother was sitting by the window, mending. Finally she said: "Magnhild will know no more English at the end of this silly conversation than she knew before. And smiles isn't the longest word in the language, either. I know one that's three miles between the beginning and the end."

So then we all puzzled a lot, but none of us could guess, and we wonder, for the word was beleaguered! For a league is three miles in length; as you may know. But even if we taught Magnhild very little English we had noticed a lot of interesting things about our mother tongue; and Uncletim asked us some very jolly conundrums about the A B C's. Can you guess them? We'll save the answers until next week, Miss Applegarth says, so that you can guess them too.

Alphabet Conundrums

1. Why is U the jolliest letter in the alphabet?
2. Why is a farmer surprised at the letter G?
3. What is that which occurs twice in a moment and not once in a thousand years?
4. Why is A like 12 o'clock?
5. Why is O the noisiest of all vowels?
6. What word meaning witty contains the five vowels in their order?
7. Why is I the luckiest of all the vowels?
8. What word is there of five letters, that, by taking two away, leaves but one?
9. Why is an island like the letter T?
10. Why is the letter T like an amphibious animal?
11. Why is the letter F like a cow's tail?
12. Why is the letter K like a pig's tail?
13. Why are sidewalks in winter like music?

In the sixty-five mission primary schools in the Garo Hills last year there were 1105 Christians and 686 non-Christians. "It is a well known fact that out of the schools come a large percentage of our converts each year. Of the 739 baptisms reported last year, 370 were pupils in school."

Among Ourselves

A Forward Step in Pegu, Burma

By M. C. PARISH

ONE of the best evidences of how Christianity is being naturalized among the Burmans is the way in which the indigenous churches carry on the work of the kingdom. During the time that the missionary of the Pegu Burman field was at home on furlough a new church came into being in the most northern end of the district. Seed had been sown and some harvest had been gathered during the years that had preceded. A young Karen, Maung Albert, a graduate of our Burman theological seminary, was placed there to work among the Burmans and Chins during the missionary's absence.

Within a week after the missionary returned to Pegu, the young preacher came in to report what progress had been made. The church was being organized, but he wanted to know just what steps should be taken. He wanted the missionary to visit the place and see for himself. He did so and saw a very hopeful outlook. Members of the church asked him about the ordination of the young preacher as pastor, and he very gladly advised it. But also advised that first a council of recognition for the new church should be called. As it was not an easy matter to reach the church it was decided that the two should be held at the same time. The church, with the help and advice of the newly ordained pastor of the Pegu Burman church, made all its own arrangements, invited delegates from several churches and made plans for entertainment. The council was called for Mar. 17, 1926.

A Seventy-five Mile Trip

As the weather is very hot the missionary made the train trip of seventy-five miles by night, arriving at the nearest station at ten thirty and sleeping at a government bungalow. The next morning the last four miles was made in an ox cart. The delegates from the churches had arrived the day before, had held an early morning meeting at seven o'clock, organized for business and examined the church as to its evidence of being a Baptist church. The pastor of the Lammadaw church, Rangoon, was elected moderator, and a young evangelist of the Pegu district, clerk. The council had voted that it was satisfied with the church's organization and views of doctrine and had prepared a program to be carried out at ten o'clock a. m. At that service U Swe, of Rangoon preached the sermon and the moderator gave the charge to the church. Then as this was also part of the ordination council the candidate was examined. The regular order of such procedure in Baptist churches was taken up. Conversion, call to the ministry, views of Christian doctrine, God, the Scriptures, Christ, the church, etc., and the questions were to the point. As the young man was a Karen he had some difficulty with Burmese theological terms, so a Karen pastor was asked to question him in his own language, and several points were cleared up. When the examination was over the candidate retired and the council went into executive session, and discussed his fitness to be ordained to the gospel ministry. One of the best reasons for ordaining him was found in the fact that he had brought the fruits of his labors in the shape of the newly organized church, into which a goodly number had been baptized recently. The council expressed itself by a vote as satisfied and appointed a program committee. The third meeting of the day was at two thirty p. m. Scriptures were read by the moderator, prayer offered by Maung Thet Hnan of Pegu, sermon by moderator, charge to candidate by U Swe of Rangoon, charge to church U Thin, Toungoo, ordaining prayer by the recently ordained pastor of the Pegu church, Maung Tha Aung, seminary classmate of the candidate. There were seven ordained ministers in attendance. Four pastors of Burman or Karen churches, two evangelists and the missionary, besides three unordained evangelists and other delegates. The benediction was by the new pastor.

Then as the main work of the day was finished, and as the delegates could not return home till the next day it was suggested that an evangelistic service be held in the evening. Notice was sent to all the surrounding villages and a good number of non-Christians gathered in the evening. All the visiting brethren took part in that service. It is the custom out here that such a service shall not be in the hands of one man. So there were short sermons of fifteen or twenty minutes each by five or six of the visiting preachers. The whole service lasted two hours and was interspersed with singing, both by the congregation and also by a Karen choir that had helped during the day.

The evening service, as well as all the services of the day, had been arranged by the native brethren, and carried out without any reference to the missionary. But all had been done "decently and in order." The missionary had been only a spectator cheering on the sidelines. But he had also been greatly cheered.

Much has been said, and written, lately about the indigenous church and native leadership. And the ability of the indigenous churches to take responsibility questioned, and also the willingness of the missionary to give responsibility. On this occasion there was no question of the ability to do, nor the willingness to let it be done, the whole proceeding was the natural thing to do. Such occasions as this give the missionary confidence that the time is approaching when the burden of responsibility will naturally and easily shift to the proper place on the shoulders of the native churches.

Cross Country Cogitations

By LEONARD W. RILEY

THESE letters lately have been somewhat infrequent. This one is being written as I travel eastward to attend the annual meeting of the Baptist board of education in Chicago, May 5-6. The meeting is of more importance than usual because of the omission of the semi-annual meeting last fall, due to the presence in Europe of our chairman, President C. A. Barbour, and the death of our secretary, Dr. Frank W. Paderford, to reduce the expenses of the board for the year.

Busy Days in the Northwest

The past few weeks have certainly given our Baptist people in the Northwest enough to keep them busy. Above measure they have enjoyed the presence and messages of Hon. E. H. Rhoads, Jr., president of the Northern Baptist Convention and of Doctor J. Whitcomb Brounger. The messages of these two men were as unlike as the men themselves, yet they were equally effective in stimulating support of our world wide work. The rounding out of our fiscal war is sufficient in and of itself, but added thereto are the multitude of church building enterprises and the opening up of the $500,000 building campaign for the field college. Our people are facing these tasks full of faith, determined to do their best.

The college campaign preparations are under the direction of three discreet and energetic men; Mr. J. Henry Lang, a Presbyterian; Mr. Charles B. Hall, a Congregationalist and Mr. Roy H. Tolson, a Baptist.

Associational Gatherings

In Oregon the Baptist associations held their annual meetings in April. There is now on foot a movement to change these to fall. There are, how-days provided we carry over into the present the best of the past. It is not always easy to do that. However, my opinion is that the case of our churches, associations and conventions on the Pacific coast was better when we had our superintendent of home missions, our district secretaries and our coast paper constantly keeping us in fairly close touch with each other.

Our present day methods may be developing a strong state convention esprit de corps (which not always makes for the best interests of our great cause), but what about our coast esprit de corps and how fares our national esprit de corps? "States' rights" once nearly cost us our national existence. Strength for achieve-few of our people. I am raising the question as to whether the money spent on these large conferences might not produce larger returns if invested in men who made frequent and regular visits in a given section of our national convention field and whose only business was to "carry the message to Garcia."

Our Printing Bill

Again large sums are being spent in printing, much larger than ever. Church papers, convention bulletins and other publications of local color yet aspiring to be of wider influence, are quite the order of the day. I am raising the question as to whether the same amount of money and even a good deal more might not much more profitably be invested in THE BAPTIST and perhaps in the Watchman-Examiner and in the Pacific Baptist revived. Our work must inevitably suffer without such means of communication. We could most wisely economize at many other points in order to multiply many times our present investment in denominational journalism.

Denominational correlation has been our aim in recent years, but we need to be on our guard lest our efforts produce disintegration instead. Too often of late we have opened the way for others to fear that we have so far lost the spirit of our Master, which is the spirit of unity, that we are unwilling to trust and follow any leader, cooperate with our brethren in any plan or adhere to any form of organization long enough to prove it effective or otherwise. We need not only to get better acquainted with each other but we need to have as a people at least some slight knowledge of the "machinery" we are using. Indeed, we very much need more and better "connecting links."

Rhode Island News

REV. RALPH TAYLOR ANDEM, pastor of the Broadway church of Providence, conducted a victorious every-member canvass, Apr. 11. An increase of nearly 300 pledges towards missions was obtained, totaling $3500. For local expenses an increase of over $3000 was made, and the work of the year is practically underwritten. The total budget comes to about $20,000. On the following Monday the largest Roll Call Supper in years was held, when the church vestries were crowded, with tables, good cheer and happy people because of the success of the every-member canvass. The congregations are continuing to increase and in the evening services three choruses are now being used, the regular vested choir and two junior choirs of boys and girls.

The church is now planning for the largest daily vacation Bible school in its history, which will start June 28.

Gifts have been received recently by the Apponaug, Warwick Central church and the Calvary church, Providence. To the Apponaug church was presented an illuminated bulletin board by Mrs. Alice A. Huntoon, of Greenwood, R. I., in memory of her husband, Mr. Christopher C. Huntoon; to the Calvary church a revolving illuminated cross which has been er, those who say the fall months are as busy as the spring months. It is strange how many regard the work of the kingdom as worthy only of their leisure hours and days. Strange, too, when the election of delegates to these gatherings is about to occur, how many churches will seek first for those who can do nothing else to do! Shorter sessions and snappier services would help a whole heap! Genuine piety pervading the atmosphere is always pleasant and profitable, but what Dr. T. Harwood Patton once called "magpiety" is monotonous, meaningless and often merciless. We have done with it and get on with the Lord's work in that buoyant spirit of joyfulness which always characterizes those who have been gloriously renewed.

Connecting Links

I am not among those who everlastingly howl for "the good old days." The present are just as good as we make them and may be better than any former ment still resides in union and cooperation.

We may be giving and spending more but to produce the best results in the long run we must invest more in the "links" that bring our various organized bodies into frequent and regular touch with each other and less in sporadic and "hoop'er up" teams and methods.

Group Conferences

Large sums are spent today on group conferences. The men called together have their own specific tasks. Work accumulates in their absence which demands their whole attention upon their return. They have little time to circulate in the district each is supposed to represent and even otherwise the "prophet" might be without honor in his own country and among his own people. The benefit of the conference is therefore quite largely limited to the general announcement through our denominational papers of the agreements reached and these papers today reach comparatively placed on the tower of the church, given by Deacon and Mrs. T. W. Waterman, on the first Sunday in May, in recognition of the thirty-ninth anniversary of Doctor Holyoke's pastorate.

One of our rural churches, the Summit, was presented with a gift from the ladies' aid society, organized in January, 1926, of $50, towards the painting fund for the interior of the church and also $10 toward the local church expenses. Mrs. Kennedy, the president, in behalf of the society, publicly stated that they were standing behind the project of a new parish house for the church and would aid financially.

On May 18-19 the 101st annual meeting of the Rhode Island State Convention was held at the Cranston Street-Roger Williams church with James P. Berkeley, W. H. Bowler, Frank B. Fagerburg, George A. Huntley, Carl E. Herrick, William Travers Jerome, Jr., Mrs. Orrin R. Judd, Kenneth C. MacArthur, Wm. H. Main, E. E. Gates, Chas. L. Seasholes, W. H. Witty, and P. C. Wright as speakers.

Rev. Lewis E. Smith of the Evangelistic association is filling a series of evangelistic engagements in the Baptist churches of Rhode Island. Our pastors uniformly endorse his work and speak in highest praise of his Christian courtesy and character.

The pastorate of Rev. C. P. Christopher at Eden Park is opening with promise. A splendid group of members and parishioners was present at the reception given to Mr. Christopher recently. The church has also conducted a fellowship visitation which was carefully planned and efficiently carried out by an earnest and devoted group of workers. Eden Park is one of the promising fields in our convention territory.

The Lakewood church has held an intensive religious campaign of five days, closing Sunday evening, Apr. 18. Rev. Charles H. Rickman of Los Angeles, Calif., was the preacher and rendered a helpful service. His messages were all expository sermons and proved a spiritual uplift to all in attendance.

Wisconsin News Notes

By R. C. SPEER

AFTER a deliberate and careful search covering some months for the right man to fill the position of director of evangelism for Wisconsin, the convention has called Rev. G. C. Mitchell of the Southeast district of Indiana. He is already on the job and getting into the hearts of the people. Brother and Sister Mitchell are greatly needed in Wisconsin and we bid them welcome. They were given appropriate farewells by hosts of friends in Indianapolis, en route northward. A goodly fellowship of former Hoosiers will be glad to greet them.

The Beloit Church, Rev. R. N. MacDonald, pastor, celebrated recently its eighty-fifth birthday. It has a growing Sunday school, a new men's club and many evidences of quickened life and activity. They serve in a very important college community.

At Stoughton the veteran and venerable pastor, Rev. Anthony Jacobs, recently celebrated his seventy-fourth birthday and the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination. The church had a party of course. Brother Jacobs is said to be one of the "youngest" pastors in the community. He held his first church in a mission church in Chicago when it was a country town of 125,000 souls. He has served in Iowa, has done general work in the western states and in Wisconsin. In an interview he says he has no patience with the idea that young people are worse than they used to be. He says they have a finer type of Christian life than he has ever known. He says the churches are more tolerant and the gospel has a sweeter accent than ever before.

At Oconomowoc

This church had every needed convenience to beguile the hearts of vacationists at this lovely lake resort, except an organ. Rev. W. L. Harms, pastor, could offer visitors plenty of chicken dinners, fishing parties and whole-souled hospitality but he needed an organ. Now they have it. They have remodeled the rooms of the church building to accommodate it and expended $4200 on the organ itself. Now there is an added attraction to spend a vacation at this enchanting spot.

Annual Meetings

Wisconsin churches are holding their annual meetings May 1, conforming with the Northern Baptist Convention year. Among the many interesting affairs of this kind the following have been heard from:

The First Baptist Temple, Oshkosh, recently closed a most successful year. The various reports showed uniformly increased and sustained activity. They reached their missionary budget, paying it in twelve equal installments; over-subscribed their Jubilee fund; wiped out an old debt of $1000; reported all bills paid; raised over $10,000 and came to the end of the year with enthusiasm. Pastor W. S. Ryder says three things have contributed to the success—school of missions, missionary reading contest and monthly plan of missionary fund remittance. During the year thirty-five have been added to the membership. They have done some pruning on their church roll. At present there are 419 members, 357 resident.

Pastor Edwin Simpson, Green Bay, reports the annual canvass complete and victory along the line. Four thousand six hundred and seventy-seven dollars pledged for current expenses and $1777 for missions. Pastor Simpson is active in the community outside his church. He believes in and practices a broad application of Christian principles in civic life.

Rev. W. S. Stewart is the virile leader of a loyal church in LaCrosse First. At their annual meeting in the midst of reported victory all around they reported a gain of 56 in membership during the year. They raised $7165 for current expenses and $1313 for missions.

Delavan begins the new fiscal year and the second year of the pastorate of Rev. John Estes with encouragement. They had a good Easter service and $104 for self-denial fund.

Rev. J. W. Taylor is bringing new life into this church with his energetic church program. Nine were baptized at Easter time. They closed their year out of debt and enlarged their budget and program for the new year.

State Convention Board Meeting

At this annual meeting of the board an interesting comparison of convention aid granted to mission churches during the past ten years was made. Many of our churches have graduated from the "mission" class. Others are being helped as much as they were ten years ago and no relief in sight. In some cases unusual conditions demand continued aid. Only rarely is aid discontinued and never where the cause seems to demand it. Several churches are on a program of gradual reduction of the amount of aid received.

What would be of spectacular interest would be for all Protestant denominations to put their figures frankly on the interdenominational table and determine in which communities all are pouring their missionary money. There are plenty of cases where competing churches are being maintained in overlapping parishes in small communities. When will we be generous enough to be Christian?

Up from Texas

By R. R. COON

A QUICK ride of three days and two nights took us to Southern Texas, then return occupied ten days, chargeable chiefly to southern hospitality.

Though an empire, the state has no one city towering above all others in size and importance, but many points of decided influence.

At Houston a day's stop gave a fine view of what may prove to be a real metropolis. A deep water channel to the gulf brings up the largest ocean steamers, four or five of which we saw loading American merchandise for the markets of the world. We looked into the new meeting house of the First church, wisely holding its down-town location and the spacious auditorium where the Southern Baptist Convention is now meeting.

A few hours' visit at Dallas allowed the privilege of calling at "Texas headquarters"—such really if not in name—receive greetings from the state secretary, Dr. F. S. Groner and other workers. The Baptist Standard is published here and for the first time we met its editor Dr. E. C. Routh. In the south each state has one or more—three in Texas—Baptist papers; maybe one reason their circulation far exceeds denominational paper in the north. Visiting the First church Dr. Geo. W. Truett's, we were directed very fully through the new six-story "Sunday-school house," whose spacious and elegant floors care for over 3000 pupils. Four paid assistants are employed here.

Fort Worth detained us four days, but it was a case of voluntary imprisonment. Here is a great school of the sons and the daughters of the prophets; about 1500 of them. One of the rare visits we have made was this at the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary with departments theological, missionary, evangelistic and musical. President L. R. Scarborough and a score of associate instructors are doing a great work. "You are our guests," was his kind word of introduction; made welcome, in part at least, for the sake of our daughter and her husband, Rev. J. R. Hickerson, pastor at Mercedes, Tex., students there in recent years. Such music that we heard there—religious music from groups of trained singers! Even the Hebrew class opened that day with two verses of "Amazing Grace." Think of such an opening for such service as studying Hebrew! A building of rare beauty and costly make is about finished on the seminary grounds, said to be the only one in the world dedicated to the culture of sacred music. Prof. L. R. Elliott, for an hour, showed us through the remarkable building; its cost $250,000. Set in stone high on the four walls are the names of forty sacred musicians from David to Bliss and Sankey, art and history writing. A century in the future and from that noble architecture, "frozen music," should go forth trained men and women to sing the everlasting gospel to the world.

Kansas City and Liberty

Strange how we meet "folks" we have known in Nebraska—both professors and students in Baptist schools in these cities. Friend John Daly, by auto, drove us through the bluff, winding Kansas cities to the hill, beautiful for situation, the finest we have seen, the new location of Kansas City Baptist seminary, Dr. P. W. Crannell, president. Here a former Nebraska friend, Prof. L. M. Denton, long pastor of the East Lincoln church, gave cordial greeting. Professor Sharp of the seminary will give a commencement address in June at Grand Is-here—was classic professor at Liberty fourteen years, now in that department in Indiana state university. It was a pleasure to bring greetings at the church prayer meeting and in the college chapel. The Liberty church has just called Professor Feezer of the college to its pastorate.

A Unique Missionary Offer

Notice has just been received of an interesting offer made by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Coon of St. Petersburg, Fla., of $1000 or more to any Baptist theological for years a Sunday-school writer for the Standard; also as one of the founders and editors of the Loyalist, the first national young people's paper of the denomination. That offer should be accepted by a dozen or more seminaries.

The New Edifice at Geneva, Ohio

ONE of the finest and best equipped educational plants in northeastern Ohio was dedicated at Geneva, Apr. 7. Dr. C. W. Kemper of Charleston, W. Va., Dr. O. C. Horsman of Erie, Pa., Dr. Geo. A. Lawson of Cleveland and Secretary T. F. Chambers and others with the pastor, Rev. F. G. Erler, took part in the dedication exercises.

The older part of the structure was thoroughly redecorated, a new baptistry put in and the organ renovated and improved. The educational unit is 40 x 107 feet, two full stories and basement. Each floor has its own assembly room with space to seat 500 in both. The building has all the usual modern rooms and equipment including a ladies' parlor completely furnished by Mr. C. I. Chamberlin and his two daughters in memory of Mrs. Chamberlin who passed away last October.

The cost of the new parts was about $50,000 of which $45,000 has already been secured in cash and pledges. The church now faces the challenge of the community's need in a most hopeful spirit.

Since "Washington, 1907"

BY CHARLES L. WHITE

THE annual meeting of the American Baptist Home Mission society held in Washington in 1907 was an event of the first missionary magnitude. At that time the society celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary with an informing address by Dr. Henry L. Morehouse, corresponding secretary. Steps leading to the formation of the Northern Baptist Convention were also inaugurated at that time, and the constructive discussions which led to the establishment of the convention a year later in Oklahoma City.

Since that time the society has ceased its cooperative relations with the Oklahoma Convention and the New Mexico Convention on the initiative and at the desire of the Baptists in those states. In Oklahoma its Indian work, both missionary and educational, has been continued. The area of the society has been increased by its cooperative work with the Woman's Home Mission society in Alaska; work in Haiti which was assigned to the society by the committee on cooperation in Latin America; in Jamaica in cooperation for a limited period with the British Baptists; in El Salvador and Nicaragua after an investigation and favorable report by Dr. Lemuel C. Barnes.

Since the last meeting of the society in Washington, numerous Christian centers have been established; the International Baptist Seminary in East Orange and its Spanish-American Seminary in Los Angeles have been organized.

THE NEW BUILDING AT GENEVA, OHIO

and college. At William Jewell college, Liberty, Mo., Prof. C. J. Elmore, for ten years professor at Grand Island, welcomed us to his home and Professor Weyand, successor of Prof. Edwin Sutherland, was another evidence of the contributions Grand Island college has made to William Jewell. Still another from Grand Island—modesty makes him nameless seminary that will set apart in its buildings a room to be known as "foreign mission room"; and so furnished and used as to stimulate interest in such missionary endeavor. "Such institutions must be strictly orthodox, fundamental and missionary in belief and practice, as these terms are usually understood." Mr. Coon will be remembered as "J. M. C.,"

Certain fiduciary relationships have been entered into with the General Conference of Free Baptists, with the acceptance of responsibility for Storer college at Harper's Ferry, W. Va. Leland college, with its new buildings and extensive campus and funds, has been added to our missionary educational system.

Since 1907 also, the society has encouraged the independent organization, initiative, and self-reliance of certain western state conventions, cooperating with them in the prosecution of certain types of missionary work which the conventions themselves were not able independently to perform. This led to eventful changes in the life of these conventions, for which the society had from their earliest life received all missionary funds raised for convention purposes. The society up to that time had acted as the banker of western conventions, and in the year in which the change was made approximately $80,000 was given by the churches themselves for their own state mission work. There were generally no treasurers of the western conventions. The entire salaries of all missionaries, including general missionaries, were paid from New York. The society up to that time had also acted as the banker of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the West and the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Michigan, for the salaries of teachers in their Southern schools, with money collected by these organizations and forwarded to New York for this purpose.

When these receipts were not sufficient to meet the quarterly payment of salaries of the missionaries of state conventions and of the woman's societies, the Home Mission society advanced funds to meet the need, thus serving as banker for certain societies and for certain western conventions. Since that time the western conventions with treasurers of their own have appointed missionaries jointly with the Home Mission society and have received into their own treasuries the gifts for state missions, appointing their missionaries in cooperation with the Home Mission society and receiving from the latter its share of each salary, based on earlier appointments and on reports of service. The plan has worked well.

The Women's Work

The women's societies, uniting in the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, have greatly enlarged their sphere of operations. The state conventions have taken on new life and have felt more keenly their responsibility and the possibilities for growth, all of which has been encouraged and stimulated by this society. The year in which these changes were made, the society ceased to act as a banking agent for these organizations with which it was thus cooperating, and the next annual report showed that its nominal income had decreased approximately $110,000.

In 1921, on the initiative of the society, there was deducted from its budget and added to the budgets of state conventions approximately $65,000, with the understanding that English-speaking work and certain foreign-speaking work among Scandinavian peoples should thereafter be carried forward by conventions rather than by the society itself. The society's appropriations for German-speaking work ended on March 31, 1920, after more than sixty years of happy and fruitful cooperation.

The period since the last meeting in Washington has witnessed also a complete and fruitful accord between this society and the American Baptist Publication Society after long and difficult discussions concerning a proper coordination of the tasks of these two organizations. Special committees appointed by the convention to bring about harmony and fruitful cooperation, studied the matter with great care for several years until at last on the foundations of goodwill laid by the earlier committees, a committee composed of secretaries and members of the board of managers of both societies built thereon a permanent superstructure. During the subsequent years adjustments have been easily and quickly made by a committee on conference composed of the members of both societies.

A Great Contribution

One of the great contributions which Doctor Morehouse made to the work of our society was in the latter part of his life in advocating a nation-wide department of evangelism which through various phases of organization has accomplished a vast amount of good in bringing thousands into the fold of Christ who have become splendid and devoted members of our Baptist brotherhood.

Since the society last met in Washington it delegated much of its work for promotion for two years to a committee of laymen led by Mr. F. Wayland Ayer, and later delegated all of its promotional work to the Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention and to its successor, the Board of Missionary Cooperation.

These years have recorded great gifts to the society by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, by certain North American Indians, and by other friends. The gifts from churches and individuals for its current and increasing missionary work are greatly in excess of those of nineteen years ago.

With so many changes in our relationships and the growth in our work and the alterations in our forms of promoting interest in home missions, it would be expected naturally that the society would have standardized its methods of cooperation and appeal; but the most revolutionary report ever presented to this society or to the denomination, looking to the radical reorganization of the society's work and relationships is in the hands of our constituency and must receive careful and exhaustive study. This report, submitted to the denomination by its finance committee at Seattle, contains recommendations which will vitally affect not only the future life of the Northern Baptist Convention itself, but all of its cooperating and affiliating organizations.

As this society through its board of managers approached with care and caution its new relationship with the Northern Baptist Convention in the days when it was organized, the same attitudes will be maintained in any modification of its organic life and relationships contemplated in this far-reaching report.

Very few missionaries who were in the employ of the society nineteen years ago with the exception of certain of those still laboring among the Indians, in Latin America, and in our missionary institutions, remain with us today. Many of them have ended their earthly service, which was so filled with self-sacrifice and spiritual fruitage. A complete change in the secretarial force of the society and those who served in the rooms has been witnessed also, and only three of those who have rendered service in types of field work still remain—Dr. Bruce Kinney, Dr. John S. Stump, and Dr. Alonzo M. Petty. The only member of the board of managers in 1926 who was in the board of 1907, is the present chairman of the board, Dr. Frank M. Goodchild.

At the invitation of the Board of Managers of this society, representatives of the American Baptist Publication Society, the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, the State Conventions, and City Mission Societies, met with our representatives in conference in Chicago, December 14, 1925, to make an exhaustive study of the work that is now being done by all these associated home mission agencies which in various ways and degrees for many years have been cooperatively engaged in missionary labors.

This conference, strange to say, was the first of its kind ever held, and the addresses and discussions were comprehensive and prophetic. It was the feeling of all who were present that the home mission agencies should find a form of practical affiliation and it was voted to meet again in Washington about the time of the annual meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention. A Continuation Committee, composed of Dr. Frank A. Smith, Chairman, Dr. William H. Main, Mrs. Katherine S. Westfall, Dr. Charles H. Sears, and Dr. Hugh A. Heath, was appointed to bring recommendations to the meeting in Washington.

The following statements quoted from the report of the Findings Committee, composed of Dr. John E. Smith, chairman, Mrs. Katharine S. Westfall, Dr. H. C. Gleiss, Dr. Frank A. Smith, and Dr. William H. Main, serve to give us glimpses of the many and taxing problems now confronting home mission agencies, national, state and city.

Colorado News Notes

By FRED B. PALMER

COLORADO went over the top with a rush in meeting the state quota 100 per cent. The last $350 was given by a group of women attending the annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain district in the First church, Colorado Springs, May 6. Nearly $19,000 was received the last two days of the fiscal year.

The meeting of the women of the Rocky Mountain district at Colorado Springs was largely attended, with delegates from Utah, Wyoming and Colorado.

President S. J. Vaughn of Hardin College, Mexico, Missouri, has accepted the presidency of Colorado Woman's college, Denver. His reception has been cordial and enthusiastic. All indications now point to a rapid development of the institution.

Arizona's New Secretary

Rev. Francis W. Starring, pastor of Beth Eden church, Denver, closes his work Sunday, May 9, to accept the secretaryship of the Arizona State Convention, and is well qualified for his new work. He has held successful pastorates at Canon City, Judson and Beth Eden, Denver. Of late he has been recording secretary of the convention, and was for a year or more state evangelist of Colorado. He is highly respected, loved and trusted by the entire brotherhood.

Pastoral Changes

Rev. G. W. South has accepted a permanent call to Longmont. Dr. B. F. Caudill of Huntington, W. Va., found it impossible to accept the call of First church, Fort Collins.

Rev. Robert H. Lynn has closed his work as acting president of Colorado Woman's college and is desirous of returning to the pastorate. Doctor Lynn is one of the most promising young men in the state.

Rev. H. G. Gwinn is temporarily located at Steamboat Springs. Chapel Car Evangelist Blanchard is now located at Bear River with a view to organizing a new church.

Rev. R. S. Wallace is to close his work at Bethune the last of May. Rev. M. F. Metzler of Kansas recently located at Fountain.

Here and There

Dr. James H. Franklin of New York, is to give the dedicatory sermon for the fine new church at Boulder, Sunday, June 6. A week of varied services will be devoted to this important occasion. Former pastors E. R. Curry and F. B. Palmer will assist in the celebration.

The 1926-1927 state quota of $94,000 has already been distributed to the churches in suggested quotas with the hope of an early adoption. The new year's quota is $14,000 larger than the one we have had previous to this year.

Colorado's delegation for the Washington Convention, so far as reported to headquarters, will consist of Judge F. W. Freeman, Dr. A. H. C. Morse, Dr. Frank E. Eden, Rev. Joshua Gravett, Dr. H. W. Cole, Rev. F. W. Starring, Rev. R. L. Decker, Dr. C. B. Miller, Dr. Bruce Kinney, Dr. T. S. Young, F. B. Palmer, Mrs. A. J. Gates, Mrs. S. E. Enos, Mrs. N. W. Follansbee, Mrs. A. H. C. Morse, Mrs. Joshua Gravett, Mrs. H. W. Cole, Mrs. R. L. Decker, Denver; Dr. C. A. Fulton, Colorado Springs; Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Haydon, First church Pueblo; Rev. and Mrs. Franklin Fenner and a delegation of four from Grand Junction. Rev. W. I. Fowle Greeley, Mrs. Velma Beebe, Ft. Collins.

What Has the International Baptist Seminary Done for Me?

By D. IOVAN

IT IS quite impossible for me to tell you all that I would like to, about what the seminary has done for me. The whole heavens may be reflected in a drop of dew, so I hope what little I shall say will at least suggest how I feel.

I was in my fourth year in the ministry when I came to the seminary and I thought I knew a great deal before I got here. After one year of experiences and studies, however, a new light came into my soul. During the first year, the seminary helped me to see how little I really knew concerning my life and the great truths and realities of life and of the Christian ministry. I saw how much there is to know and to learn.

The seminary helped me to explore a new and a vast field in my own personality, spiritually and intellectually. The study of general and church history helped me to see the past with its struggling generations of mankind and God working throughout the ages bringing about events fulfilling his plans and purpose. It helped me to see more clearly his mighty hand and his presence in the world today, carrying out his plans and works of salvation throughout the world.

The seminary helped me especially in the study of the great Book, the Bible, and the great Christian doctrines, to know God more personally, more intimately, as my Father and as the Father of all mankind through Jesus Christ, his beloved Son. It builded my faith on a foundation immovable; it enlarged my knowledge about things spiritual and eternal; it gave me a world-wide vision for a world-wide service helping his kingdom to come.

The seminary helped me to get acquainted with the greatest men of the Christian church and with their works and writings, and especially with the leading men of our own denomination. Their lives, their works and writings enlarged and enriched my personality, builded up my character and kindled my soul. In the study of American history and literature I was greatly helped to know the beginning and the struggles of this nation with all the sacrifices for its freedom and liberty, which are so precious to us today. I have learned to love this great land of liberty and to be proud of it as one of its citizens. I have a tender affection for it and a deeper desire to be and to render the best service for its uplifting.

The seminary also helped me to know and to love my own people more sympathetically. Through the study of the Roumanian history and literature I became more familiar with their struggles and sufferings for their existence and development. It helped me to know some of the great writers and their literature which expresses the thoughts and life of my people among whom I work.

Then the many blessed experiences of the four years of the seminary life makes me to believe and to say that this institution, with its wonderful Spirit of Christ and with its fine Christian professors and teachers, and above all, with such a man of God who has a great and sympathetic heart, Doctor Anderson, as its president, this seminary is rendering one of the greatest services for a world-wide Christian brotherhood and God's kingdom.

Under the influence and power of such a Spirit and belief, and with great convictions and strong determination, I will go out from this seminary trusting in your prayers and in the grace of God, hoping to be for all the days of my life a faithful servant of his.

An Ill-Wind Blowing Good in South China

By E. S. BURKET

WE came down from the hills, fifteen miles away, a week ago. En route we stopped over at an outstation, Kit Than, for our annual association meetings. It is of these meetings that I want to tell you.

They were the best attended and the keenest in interest of any that we have ever had on our field. If one can judge at such close range, and from meetings so far in the interior, remote from the stormy political strife in the larger centers outside, there is a new spirit abroad in the land. Certainly our brethren have never exhibited such wide-awake interest and enthusiasm for the work of the kingdom as during these two full days of discussion, prayer and addresses. In view of the fact that the meetings were planned so as to link them up with present conditions in the land, the explanation of the new interest must be that an apparent ill-wind of anti-foreign and anti-Christian agitation is, after all, under God, a refreshing wind of awakening and revival of the Christian forces of China. May it be so!

Many are intimidated, of course, and forsake their Lord. Others continue on in indifference. Some, chiefly the illiterate members in the country stretches, do not even seem to know what is happening. But thank God for many who are searching their hearts and seeking to give a reason for the faith that is in them. They get stronger every day under trial and persecution. Is it too much to say that despite all that the political agitators say and do, the future of the church in China is assured, by reason of a growing nucleus of stalwart believers who are getting under the burden?

It should be remembered that ours is a pioneer field. Workers of larger caliber are therefore few. We have yet to have our first ordained preacher. The recent association declared unmistakably for the ordination of a native pastor and designated the man it wanted. Need it be said that this has been the prayer and hope of the missionaries of the field for these many years. The ordination is to occur in a couple of weeks and they are preparing to make a great event of it, as indeed it is.

Another action taken, in line with the above, was the election of a committee of the more responsible leaders to take over the work of designating funds received from the mission. This step is, of course, nothing new; in fact it is quite conservative, compared with what has been done in many places not so newly opened as ours. But it is a long step ahead for us.

Special recommendations were also made to the churches urging a definite policy of preparation for self-support. The consensus of opinion seems to be that it will involve a long wait, if they must depend upon regular church offerings and subscriptions. They therefore declared for acquiring, by purchase or gifts, rice-fields, which will later yield an income sufficient to enable the churches, to some extent, to pay salaries and other expenses. They already have some money out at interest, and also stores of grain at several points, in preparation for the day of full self-support.

This all may seem quite insignificant to those beyond the mountain confines of our isolated country field. But it is a distinct forward movement for us, and many of us are full of rejoicing and thanksgiving. More than for this, we rejoice because there is an unmistakable burden upon the hearts of many of the preachers and others for the salvation of the multitudes all about. After all, self-support must come as a free expression of real, spiritual experience, if it is to have meaning for the coming kingdom of God in China. The constant danger is that in view of the limited support we get from America, we may do harm to spiritual work by an over-emphasis upon the need of immediate response on the field to make up the deficiency. Let the Spirit of God prevail and education upon the duties of the child of God be given its rightful place, and needed funds will come.

A number asked for baptism at the meetings at Kit Than. Every night for three nights, we had packed evangelistic services. It has been decided that the quarterly preachers' meetings will be held at different points each time and revival services held in connection with them. Despite the political unrest, we still get a good hearing for the gospel message.

Again, the Amendment

By D. C. TOWNSEND

THE editorial in THE BAPTIST of Apr. 10 on "The Basis of Faith" was right to the point and very much needed.

In view of the proposed amendment it seems not out of the way to ask what constitutes a Baptist church and what is the basis of a denomination? It is not fair to exclude one prominent church because it receives members from other churches on their letters without inquiring into the mode of their baptism, while many other Baptist churches, in the West at least, have been doing the same thing for these twenty years or more.

Does not a great denomination rest on a larger basis than the form of an ordinance? No per cent of the Baptist denomination is made up of those of us who believed in certain definite principles we did not find in the denomination we were in. There was the democratic form of government, the Scriptures as the infallible and supreme guide in religious life, faith in the Holy Spirit and the conscience as a complete and safe guide in the interpretation of the Scriptures and the great principle of religious liberty—the right of every man, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to read and interpret the Bible for himself to follow those teachings by the light of his own conscience independent of the dictates of any priest, prophet or bishop.

If we have come into the denomination because of the great fundamental principle of religious liberty—the right of every man to read and interpret the Bible according to his own conscience, have we the right to deny another the same right although it may lead to different conclusions from ours? If a man comes to us from another denomination perfectly willing to subscribe to all our principles, work in harmony, help in all our denominational enterprises, and yet after a careful and prayerful study he does not see any reason to be dissatisfied with his own baptism, though he was sprinkled, shall we deny to him the same liberty of conscience for which we came into the Baptist church? Shall we compel him to follow our conscience if he shows the spirit of candor and willing obedience?

A Question

Or perhaps here comes to us one who was brought up in the Quaker belief. He has been brought up to regard rites and ceremonies of any kind entirely unnecessary to Christian life or church activity. He wishes to unite with the church that he may have a personal part in its work and support all the various activities of the church and denomination. As long as he is perfectly sincere, as far as we can see, to follow the teaching of the Scripture as he sees it, is it right for us to deny him the same liberty that we ask for ourselves?

While we would not baptize by any other form but by immersion because that would violate the conscience of the administrator, shall we not give to others who come to us the same liberty that we ask for ourselves? And should not our conventions and associations be gatherings to plan for the mutual cooperation in the different lines of work of the churches and the denomination, but all questions of creed and personal belief shall be left to the churches themselves where they belong.

We cannot see just what is going to be the result when we apply this same principle to other questions of faith and practice, but we are sure it need not be more disturbing to us than the principle of religious liberty was to the people of Roger William's day. And if we find it true and right ours is to follow leaving the results with God.

A Message from the Heart

Franconia, N. H., April 11, 1926.

To the Editor of THE BAPTIST:

As a Free Baptist who has given forty years to the ministry among the Free Baptists of New England, I have been much interested and often pained, as I have read of this controversy of the Northern Baptist Convention. I have asked again and again with an aching heart, what is to be the outcome?

A few of us in New Hampshire held out against the union of the Free Baptists and the Baptists especially in New Hampshire until, I believe in answer to honest fervent prayer, God by his spirit and through the influence which he brought to bear, showed us that the time was ripe for the union. Then, I believe, we followed with a whole heart.

In these coming days before the gathering in Washington would that those who will have the deciding of so much might have the spirit of Benjamin Randall, the founder of our Free Baptist denomination, of whom the record says, when so sorely perplexed and burdened by the opposition from his Baptist brethren, because he believed and preached a free and full atonement for all believers which was not in harmony with their belief, he went out one July day to a cornfield away from all sound but the rustle of the wind over the corn leaves and sat down on a rock to meditate on these things which were so perplexing him.

The record is that while he prayed earnestly for light and wisdom the Divine presence so overshadowed him and he had such a vision of duty that he carried the memory of that experience to his death. He was shown that he must give up all for the Christ. He must yield completely the doctrines of men and be taught of God. As he yielded at once he felt the flaming power of God in his soul and the Scriptures were wonderfully opened to his understanding. He saw that all was harmony in the universal love of God to man and general atonement. In the strength of this vision he went forth as a tireless flame planting churches which stand to this day and preaching a message which has touched and moulded the religious teaching of other denominations.

If the leaders of our Baptist convention would have the spirit of Benjamin Randall would not the future of our united denominations be more harmonious?

This is my message sent from a prayerful heart that the Jehovah God would direct for the honor of Christ and best welfare of our Northern Baptist Convention.

—REV. EDWARD W. CUMMINGS.

Investors are invited to contemplate the possibilities of profits in the raising of the California condor. The birds are almost extinct. But one of them in the zoological park at Washington has laid an egg, and the price of the egg is quoted at $750.

Here, There and Everywhere

ANNUAL MAY BREAKFAST, First church, Waterloo, Iowa, Saturday, May 1, from 5:00 to 8:30 a. m. "Great eats" advertised. What is a "May breakfast," anyhow?

TUNE IN. The Ottawa Male quartet will broadcast over WDAF (Kansas City Star station), Saturday night, May 22, at 11:45 p. m. This will be the regular "Night-jawk" program.

THE ANNUAL DINNER of the First church, Chicago, Dr. P. J. Stackhouse, minister, was held on May 12. Plates were laid for 200. There was a reception for more than 100 new members who have united since January, 1925.

REV. W. S. JACOBS of the First church, Portland, Me., began his second year with his church on May 1. The church puts on a daily radio service except Saturdays. For months both morning and evening services were sent out. Now the morning service is sent by radio from the Central Square church, Rev. F. F. Peterson, minister. So far as we know this is the only church in America with full daily radio service.

SUPPLY PREACHERS for the First church, Cleveland, Ohio, for May include Dr. W. C. Bitting of St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Orlo J. Price of Rochester, N. Y. and Dr. W. G. Spencer of Hillsdale, Mich.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Hutchinson, Kan., Rev. Guy H. Wimmer, pastor, recently held "college night" service on Sunday evening. It was in charge of former students from Stephens, Baylor, William Jewell, University of Chicago and Ottawa. It was planned to create a desire in the minds of the young people to go to college. Why should not every Baptist church plan such service annually?

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the Hebrew Christian Alliance of America was held in the Prospect Avenue church, Buffalo, during the week beginning Apr. 25. Hebrew Christians from the United States, Canada, England, Scotland and Palestine were present.

A SPECIAL FAREWELL vesper musical service in honor of Prof. George E. Fisher, organist and director of music for thirty-four years in the Lake Avenue church of Rochester, N. Y., was held on April 25. Fifty-six soloists from the churches of the city supported by the combined choirs of the Temple and Lake Avenue churches to tell over 200 voices took part in this rare service.

THE CHURCH at Marengo, Ill., plans a "homecoming week," Aug. 29-Sept. 5 to celebrate the beginning of their seventy-first anniversary. Former pastors, members and friends will be invited.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Albion, N. Y., Rev. T. C. Taylor, minister, reports nearly $23,000 raised for all purposes last year exclusive of its gifts for missions.

REV. FRITZ C. HAMLIN who as a victim of amnesia disappeared on June 25, 1925, while pastor of the First Swedish church, St. Paul, Minn., has not yet been located. His family and the church are in deep distress over this sad event.

REV. WAYNE L. ROBISON of the First church, Bangor, Me., is delivering a series of sermons on "Religion and Life." Some subjects for May are, "Playing with Fire," "The Esau of Today," "The Wiles of the Devil," "The Wise Use of Liberty," and "Common Sense and Religion."

SHURTLEFF COLLEGE is nearing the end of its campaign for $400,000. They are now within $35,000 of their goal. This amount must be subscribed or the college will lose $140,000 which is conditioned on raising the entire amount. Illinois pastors and laymen are requested to help complete the campaign with victory by July 1 the final date.

MRS. LAURA WARNER, seventy-four years of age and one of eight persons who formed the first organization of the City Park church of Denver, Colo., sixteen years ago, died in April.

DR. CORTLAND MYERS has just completed four months with the Presbyterian church of Glendale, Calif. During this time a current expense debt was raised, the church strengthened and nearly 200 candidates were received for the pastor to take into membership on his return from the Holy Land.

THE WHITE TEMPLE, Portland, Ore., Rev. T. J. Villers, pastor, has received 266 new members during the past year. Fifty-two received the hand of fellowship on May 2. The evening congregations overflow the main auditorium into the Sunday-school chapel regularly.

DR. A. W. CLEAVES, formerly an editor on THE BAPTIST, was recently tendered a reception by his church, the First Baptist church in America, at Providence, R. I., in honor of his completion of four years as pastor.

IN ADDITION to special gifts and missionary packages, the church at Newburyport, Mass., Rev. E. H. Prescott, minister, contributed $2286 for missions last year.

MR. C. A. NISSEN, pastor of the church at Barrington, Ill., was approved as a proper candidate and his ordination recommended to the church, in a session of the permanent council on ordination of the Chicago association.

THE THIRTY-NINTH annual commencement of the Buies Creek Junior college, Buies Creek, N. C., was held May 8-13. Doctor Archibald of the University of North Carolina delivered the commencement address. The sermon was by Rev. J. W. Kincheloe of Rocky Mount, N. C.

THE DEBATING DEPARTMENT of Bucknell university gave a banquet recently to the debating team of the Mifflinburg high school debating team and to the women's and men's forensics squads of the university. Guests of honor were President E. W. Hunt, R. H. Rivenburg, dean of the university, Federal Judge A. W. Johnson, Dr.

*God be merciful unto us and bless us,
And cause his face to shine upon us
That thy way may be known upon earth,
Thy saving health among all nations.*

Raymond West and F. T. Boyer, principal of the Mifflinburg school and others. The silver cup was presented to the high school debating team.

REV. A. C. ARCHIBALD of the First church, Youngstown, Ohio, gave the hand of fellowship to sixty new members on May 2 making 250 received in the past five months. The church raised its full apportionment for missions.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Wichita, Kan., Rev. W. H. Rogers, minister, has voted to proceed with the erection of a new building to cost one quarter of a million dollars. The present building will not be torn down as there is room on the property for the new structure which will be a modern educational plant with an auditorium to seat about 2000. The church has about 2000 members. The Easter offering was $13,000.

REV. J. H. LLOYD of Youngstown, Ohio, is concluding seven years with his church. On a recent Sunday thirty-seven new members were received of which thirty-five were through baptism.

REV. KIRBY CHAPMAN has closed his work with the church at Marinette, Wis.

PASTOR GEO. B. DAVIS of the South church, Milwaukee, Wis., has received forty-six new members during the past year, twenty-eight by baptism. Eight of those received were heads of families.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Girard, Ohio, Rev. W. I. Barnholth, minister, has had a revival meeting led by Director C. H. Stull, resulting in thirty-one baptisms. There were eighty-five new members received the past year. The missionary quota was more than raised.

"YOUNG MARRIED PEOPLE'S BANQUET" was a happy occasion at the First church, Springfield, Mass., on May 21.

REV. F. PAUL LANGHORNE, pastor at Berwyn, Ill., has been laid aside by illness for several weeks.

ITEM IN CHURCH BULLETIN: "Next Sunday will be Boys' Sunday in our church. We want every boy to attend the morning service and bring his dad." Why not every Sunday?

SEVENTY-FOUR MEN attended the King class in the First church of Austin, Ill., Apr. 18; 175 is the goal set for June 1.

"BAPTIST CHURCH BURNS CANDLES" is the announcement of a unique series of illustrated sermons in the church at Riverton, Wyo., Rev. C. A. Hodgson, minister. About 100 candles of many sizes, shapes and colors were used to illustrate sermons on "The Light of the World", "Let Your Light Shine", "Ye Shine As Lights", and "Receiving and Refusing the Light."

PASTOR J. O. STAPLES of Hamburg, Iowa, preached to the united Odd Fellows' organizations in his church on Apr. 25.

ANNIVERSARY DAY IN THE Immanuel church, Washington, D. C., the National Memorial to Religious Liberty, was observed, Apr. 25. Rev. G. G. Johnson is the minister.

REV. I. B. HARDY closed a ten years' pastorate at the First church of Sanford, Me., and accepted the call of the First church of Waltham, Mass.

OVER 1000 PERSONS attended service in the North church, Camden, N. J., on a recent Sunday. Baptismal services were held Apr. 4, 25, and May 9. In one baptismal service twenty-two were immersed, mostly young men, three of them being members of a championship basketball team.

"SHOULD A PASTOR BE TIMID, soft and afraid to speak the truth?" asks Pastor J. A. V. Pieters of the Hoover Street church of Los Angeles, Calif., as the promoters of commercialized recreation were trying to legalize Sunday and all-night dancing in a suburb. Evidently this pastor thinks not.

THE FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL commencement of Crozer seminary will be held May 23-25. Sermon by Rev. Sparks W. Melton of Norfolk, Va., and addresses by Dr. Avery A. Shaw of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Dr. C. W. Gilkey of Chicago. The exercises will close in time for afternoon trains for Washington, D. C., for those who wish to attend the Northern Baptist Convention.

REV. T. L. HUXLEY of Livingston, Mont., has baptized a large number of men and boys during the four years of his pastorate. His church last year gave over $28 per member for current expenses and missions.

THE FATHER OF Rev. David E. Haglund of Corning, N. Y., passed away recently.

"1000 BOYS IN OUR CHURCH" was the slogan at the First church of Syracuse, N. Y., Dr. B. C. Clausen, minister, ushering in boys' week. Boys did everything from ushering to delivering the sermon, for the pastor was one of them that day.

FIFTY-TWO PERSONS were baptized in the First church of Watertown, N. Y., by Pastor Guy L. Brown, as the result of the work of twenty-five units of the personal workers' league. Each unit has five members. This represents the fruitage of four months.

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Chicago.

"Tonight we have a little program based on 'Excuses.' Those geezers in our Lord's parable who were bidden to the supper and who 'with one accord began to make excuses,' had nothing on our modern side-steppers. 'Therefore have me excused,' is a fine art in many of our churches. But listen to the facts in the case. Be your own judge.

"One person wrote that his church had had twenty pastors in thirty-two years and that no one stayed long enough to get up any steam. Another wrote that their pastor had been with them twenty-seven years and that pastor and people were all asleep in peace together. Can you beat it?

"One person wrote that the people had no money for a high-priced paper. But after an electrical storm an agent sold the people of his church $4000 worth of lightning-rods. It was THE BAPTIST or lightning-rods. And they took the lightning-rods. Oh, my!

"One brother wrote that after he had read his worldly magazines he had no time left to read THE BAPTIST. So it seems that after all it is a matter of taste. Some people like garlic and some do not.

"One pastor wrote that most of his people left the community during the summer and the church was closed during July and August. This long outing got the people weaned away from substantial reading. Another pastor said nearly all his leading families spent their winters either in Florida or in California and that these long absences away from home and Godly influences, amid charming resorts, ruined their taste for quiet reading. Maybe a paper with only equinoctial editions would solve this distressing situation. Or are these excuses the bunk?

"One agent wrote that there were forty-six families in their church and that these owned thirty-nine pleasure cars running from second-hand flivvers to Fierce-Marrows and that they were not reading much now as they were so busy studying the wonders of God in nature. Is this a gas-wagon excuse or is it simply gas?

"One pastor wrote that his people were all highly educated and just couldn't be interested in the tameness of a religious paper; while another wrote that his members were all working people with little education and that we would have to cut out the 'highbrow stuff' if we were to interest them in THE BAPTIST. What do college kids mean by 'blah stuff'?

"One pastor wrote that he had 300 members in his church and that if we would give them a half column a month for telling the world what they were doing, he could get us eighteen or twenty subscribers; while another wrote in that he and his people were 'bored stiff' with all this golden gossip in the paper. He said 'it was mostly lies anyway sent in by people who had an itch to see their names in print.' All of which is Sanskrit for 'I pray thee, have me excused, etc.'

"One poor woman wrote in in great distress and said she spent a hard-earned dollar last year for a trial subscription and had had nothing but bad luck ever since. Never again for this sister. While another wrote saying she and her husband had taken the paper over fifty years and that God had blessed them above their deserts. The former made us gloomy and the latter made us glad.

"In spite of the excuses in the Bible story, the supper was held and the house was filled with guests. In spite of the lame excuses that many people make, THE BAPTIST is going right on. Annual subscription rate is $2.50, with Missions $3. In clubs, $2 per year. Trial subscriptions, SIX MONTHS FOR ONE DOLLAR.

"The office boy says that everybody can do something to help the good cause along. He says a baseball enthusiast took his wife to see a game the other day. That night he was awakened by his better half shouting in her dreams, 'Kill the umpire! Kill the umpire!' Half awake he sprang out of bed and in doing so knocked over the washstand. The crash awakened Mrs. 'Fan.' 'John,' she said, 'did you kill the umpire?' 'No,' replied John angrily, 'but I smashed the pitcher.'

"The program will close with a suitable slogan for all our agents and friends who are aiding in circulating the paper:

"Bite off more than you can chew—

And then chew it.

Plan for more than you can do—

And then do it.

Hitch your wagon to a star,

Keep your seat,—AND THERE YOU ARE."

"WCOY now signs off. Meet excuses with valid reasons. Goodnight."

Congressman Victor L. Berger has introduced a universal old-age pension bill. His general argument is that any person who has faithfully performed the duties of citizenship during his period of effective life has earned the same right to protection against want in his old age as that of the soldier who performed his duty in war. He further says that even in the matter of casualties industry is almost as deadly as war.

The Other Side of the Medal, by Edward Thompson. New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co.

Here is the other side of the history of the Indian mutiny! It is written not as anti-British propaganda but as a means of bringing about an understanding between the citizens of England and those of the Indian Empire. It contains a great lesson and challenge to our own missionary enterprises.

—JOHN SHADE FRANKLIN.

John Davis: or The Captive of the Smugglers, by John Masefield. Boston: Page Co. $1.

An eight-year-old story now reprinted in a new canvas-back for a place in the American boy's library, this tale of a century ago partakes somewhat of the melodrama of Jeffery Farnol and the romantic thrills of John Buchan. The author's name is a guarantee of choice English, and in its new dress the book will be welcome in any boy's shelf of favorites.

—GEO. E. BURLINGAME.

Baptist Beliefs, by E. Y. Mullins. Philadelphia: Judson Press. 96 pages. 75 cents.

A most convenient denominational brochure which should be on the desk of every Baptist especially those who as pastors and teachers lead in teaching and instructing. The author discriminates wisely in the mission of a formulated creed in a Baptist church; it is not binding on any member; it is merely for instruction. The Bible alone remains as giving the only Baptist creed. The author's commentary on different subjects pertinent to church organization and doctrines are sane and practical. The discussion and explanations of Christian doctrines as prevailing in the Baptist denomination will be found illuminating and instructive.

—H. O. ROWLANDS.

The Christian Conviction, by Cleland Boyd McAfee. New York: Macmillan. $2.

Who has not wished that he might see the Christian faith presented as if it were entirely new? Here is the opportunity. Doctor McAfee begins at the beginning and takes nothing for granted. Every step of the way his exposition is self-explanatory. The book is the first series of lectures on the Joseph Cook foundation, which provides for "the statement and defense of the Christian faith in the principal cities of India, China and Japan." The Christian religion is traced to its origin in both history and personal experience. The personality of God is guaranteed by the personality of men. Sin is seen as "self-assertion in disregard of God." Salvation is declared to be threefold, personal, social and world wide. It brings purity, works for righteousness and will establish peace. The faults of Christians are fully admitted, but the universality of Christianity is maintained. Surely Doctor McAfee has distilled the essence of Christian Faith.

—ELMER KIRKPATRICK.

Sarangie, A Child of the Chosen, by Lois Hawks Swinehart. New York: Revell. $1.25.

"Sarangie", the story of a little Korean girl whom the missionary risks her life to save from a life of shame, is thrillingly written. The reader is soon lost in the adventure and is breathing the mysterious atmosphere of the craggy, tiger-caved Korean mountains where the missionary lady takes refuge with Sarangie, after rescuing her from the Temple of Priests with the assistance of a faithful coolie and loyal beggar boy. This story fascinatingly portrays a cross section of sinful, superstitious Korean life, while at the same time it reveals the transforming, reconstructing power of the Christian missionary and the mission school. Who, whether young or old, can help believing in missions after reading such a story?

—F. H. FAHRINGER.

Personality and Reality: A Proof of the Real Existence of a Supreme Self, by J. E. Turner. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

The author, who is a reader in philosophy at the University of Liverpool, has sought to give "an analysis, first, of the nature of mind, and secondly of matter, solely in light of modern psychology and physics. The facts of materialism therefore on the one hand, and the principle of evolution on the other, are unreservedly accepted." The book is really an attempt to show that logically one is led by the use of the actual science of the present hour and a superior apparatus of philosophy to believe in the existence of a Person behind all mechanism. There is no mechanism without design, and design means intelligent direction by a Self infinitely greater than the mechanism. It is a strong argument, well wrought out, for natural theism and will richly repay the careful study necessary to its full understanding. The whole discussion is a fine antidote for the excessive prevalence of physical science in recent years.

—H. L. STETSON.

The Chip and the Block, by E. M. Delafield. New York: Harpers. $2.

"The Block" is a temperamental egotist; "the Chip" is also a temperamental egotist—with the difference that while his father is mediocre, Victor, "the Chip," is brilliantly gifted, especially so as a writer and a musician. The binding thread of the story is the contest between the wills of these two. Among other characters are Jeanne, Paul, their mother and—later—their stepmother, the aunts, grandma, stepgrandmother, the nurse. Each is an individual, not a type. Mrs. Delafield does not deal in types. Conscientiously, consistently she portrays her people and their motivations. The result in "The Chip and the Block" is as fine a piece of character analysis as has ever been published—and it is exactly as interesting as is complex and fascinating human nature.

If you take off another, it is not totally used up, all of which goes to show you must throw it off altogether."

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for May 30

JACOB AT BETHEL

Lesson Text: Gen. 28:10-22. Golden Text: Gen. 28:15

This series of lessons is simply touching the high places of the Old Testament. We pass rapidly from Isaac to Jacob. So in order to keep the sequence unbroken one must read the chapters between our last lesson and this one. The cause of Jacob's exile was the wrath of Esau against him for taking advantage in a moment of weakness and buying the birthright for a bowl of soup.

Vision.

Jacob was a man of vision. He had foresight and, in a measure, insight. There were spiritual possibilities in Jacob which Esau did not possess. The dream at Bethel was the beginning of the development of these possibilities. The thoughts of Jacob while he was awake are revealed in the dream. A dream that had transpired at home in recent weeks eventually driving him forth on a long journey of nearly 500 miles had a sobering effect upon the man who had outwitted his brother and lied to his age-father. He probably arrived at the conclusion that trickery and falsehood did not pay, and it is not unlikely that he longed for deliverance from his tendency to drive a sharp bargain. As he fell asleep these thoughts were in his mind and his surroundings and the topography of the place may have had something to do with the particular form his dream took on. At any rate his subconscious mind was active while he slept, and through the subconscious mind God was able to do more for Jacob than could have been done had Jacob been awake. Through the dream Jacob heard the word of God spoken personally to him. He took it seriously as a spiritual vision and it marks the genesis of the spiritual transformation of Jacob.

Victory.

Visions unless acted upon are worthless. Jacob not only interpreted his dream with consummate wisdom but also acted upon his dream and entered into a covenant with God. It is true, his covenant had a bit of the trade in it. Jacob was willing to give God ten per cent on the principal. A pretty good rate of interest and much more than most Christians are willing to pay. We must remember that Jacob was running true to form when he made his proposition to Jehovah, and we must also consider the fact that prior to his vision Jacob had seen the spiritual significance of his dream and had given it all the sanctity of a holy sacrament. In the light of the dream his sordid soul awoke to higher things, and the reality of the spiritual world shut out for the time the insistent claims of material prosperity.

A SELF-SUPPORTING CHURCH PAPER

An attractive little church newspaper published every Thursday by the Baptist church of Greece, N. Y. It is called the Greece Community Builder, and has a subscription price of 25 cents a year. It gives the members all the important news about their church, a program of events for the week, write-ups of trustees' meetings, future plans, etc., as well as several columns of news items about the religious members. The paper has such a wide circulation that it has been quite successful in securing advertisements from local merchants, so much so that the income from this source, plus the money from subscriptions, practically equals the cost of issuing the paper.

MINNESOTA CHURCH TESTIFIES FOR EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

The Woodland Park church, St. Paul, Minn., recently put on an every-member canvass, after consultation with one of the field workers. They carried out the suggestions of the field man as to using captains and teams, and held a very successful meeting of these teams on the Friday evening preceding the drive. Again on Sunday the workers had lunch at the church and a season of prayer, at which the canvass was made.

The chairman of the committee writes that many of the teams reported 100 per cent, and doubts that there were any that fell below 80 per cent. These teams worked up until the next Wednesday morning for residents, and got into correspondence with out-of-town members. The system produced an over subscription of the church's operating budget, and a very large increase for benevolences.

HOW MUCH SHALL I GIVE THIS YEAR TO MISSIONS?

A Little Argument With Myself

If I refuse to give anything to missions this year, I practically cast a ballot in favor of the recall of every missionary, both in the home and foreign fields.

If I give less than heretofore, I favor reduction of the missionary forces proportionate to my reduced contribution.

If I give the same as formerly, I am holding the ground already won. I disregard any forward movement. My song is, "Hold the Fort!" forgetting that the Lord never intended that his people should take refuge in a fort. All his soldiers are under marching orders. They are commanded to "Go!"

If I advance my offering beyond my former years, then I favor an advance movement in the conquest of new territory for Christ. Shall I not join this army?—(Reprinted from New York Baptist Bulletin.)

This page is conducted by the Board of Missionary Cooperation, New York City, as a medium for circulating items about local churches which are carrying on their own and denominational projects in an effective way. If your church has developed any interesting ideas or methods we shall be glad to have you write about them to the board, at 276 Fifth avenue. Brief outlines of denominational plans, important news, etc., will also appear here from time to time.

MODEL INDIAN VILLAGE FOR CONVENTION

JOHN LODGE POLE—A RECENT CROW CONVERT TO CHRISTIANITY

One of the interesting features of the mission exhibit at the Northern Baptist Convention this year will be a four-by-six-foot model of a real Crow Indian village, with miniature tepees, etc., all made to scale. The exhibit is being arranged by W. A. Petzoldt, superintendent of the Crow Indian Baptist mission, maintained by the American Baptist Home Mission Society in Montana. Mr. Petzoldt has made some remarkably fine camera studies of the Indian people among whom he works, as witness the interesting picture of John Lodge Pole, which is shown above.

YOUNG PEOPLE TO CLIMB "THE WHITE STAIRWAY"

"The white stairway" has become synonymous in the minds of Baptists with the one-twelfth monthly system of paying on budget quotas. A movement is now on foot among their leaders to enlist the young people to keep up their monthly payments for benevolences, and also to get them to do whatever they can to interest their own churches in accepting their denominational benevolence quotas.

"As the twig is bent, so groweth the tree," and if these ideas take firm hold among the young people we can expect a rising generation of church members with a clear conception of their responsibility toward the denomination's missionary program.

$2400 IN NEW MONEY FOR THIS CHURCH

The Tabernacle church of Utica, N. Y., under the leadership of Pastor Bleakney, recently put on a most successful Every Member plan. Five weeks were spent in thorough preparation, intercession, visitation and education. All who were responsible for carrying it out agreed that it was hard work, but the results achieved fully justified the effort expended. On the very first approach on the financing question on Sunday morning, the congregation produced 200 new or increased pledges that added $2400 or more to the church budgets for current expenses and missions. As with everything else, the more work that is put into the preparation of an Every Member plan, the more successful it is.

NEW CHURCHES ARE RIGHT WITH US

It is often the case that small new churches display a surprising amount of vigor when it comes to carrying through denominational projects of any kind. With all the problems of organization with which they must grapple, the construction or purchase of church buildings, equipment, etc., it might seem that they would not have as much energy in reserve for raising missionary money as some of the older and well established churches. But the contrary is often the case.

Secretary Palmer writes us from Colorado on Apr. 10, about a little church in Crowley in that state. This church, he says, was organized less than two years ago, it is building a meeting house, and yet they have paid their quota in full with enough over and above to pay interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. The Mexican church, Denver, he adds, has already paid 200 per cent of its quota.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

The administrative committee of the Board of Missionary Cooperation in executive session May 13, 1926, passed a resolution expressing to Dr. W. H. Bowler, executive secretary, its sincere appreciation for his services during the past year and confidence in his ability to carry on the work, and promising him its heartiest and most loyal support and cooperation in the future work.

The executive committee of the Minneapolis Council of Churches has its attention directed to the fact that in Minneapolis and in various other parts of the nation, there is growing up a custom of promoting a public marriage ceremony in connection with festivals, carnivals, and different kinds of shows. It enters a strong and vigorous protest against this custom and urges ministers to refuse to lend themselves to this scheme, and to do everything possible to prevent the holding of such public ceremonies, or the use of any other sacred and religious observances as a publicity stunt.

The International Association of Agricultural Missions held an important conference at the agricultural school of the Ohio state university at Columbus, Ohio. Representatives of boards and rural welfare work were present as well as students and faculty members. The conference was called at the Ohio state university in order that those interested in the progress of world rural work should have the privilege of counsel of Dr. Sam Higginbottom of Allahabad agricultural institute, India, a foremost authority on the gospel of the soil, and an alumnus of that institution. Dr. Warren H. Wilson presided. Prof. T. G. Watson gave greeting from the university and Profs. C. E. Lively and F. L. Allen spoke on the development of the farm home and on community life respectively.

The evangelistic activities of home mission workers and visiting pastors and missionaries at the schools of the Home Mission societies during the academic year have resulted in an encouraging number of conversions and baptisms. At El Cristo, Cuba, Professor Montel, who is doing effective work as a pastor as well as teacher conducted revival services which led to a profession of faith by eighty in his congregation, a large part of them being students. Successful meetings were held in nearly all negro schools where ninety-five per cent or more are professing Christians. Reports have been published of the revival services conducted at Bacone college by Rev. Claude B. Miller, pastor of City Park church, Denver, which were followed by forty-six baptisms. At two government schools Baptists home missionaries held evangelistic meetings.

The campus of Olivet college, Michigan, is to witness the second annual summer conference on economic, international, racial and family relations, Aug. 1-28. The conference will be held under the auspices of the Fellowship for a Christian Social Order. The program will follow largely the discussion method, and it provides for addresses from more than two dozen of the foremost specialists in various phases of social study and experiment. Inquiries should be addressed to Amy Blanche Green, Room 505, 347 Madison Avenue, New York.

"So long as the bee is outside the petals of the lotus, and has not tasted its honey, it hovers round the flower emitting its buzzing sound; but when it is inside of the flower, it drinks its nectar noiselessly. So long as a man quarrels and disputes about doctrines and dogmas, he has not tasted the nectar of true faith; when he has tasted it, he becomes still." "He who has faith has all, and he who wants faith wants all." "Be not like the frog in the well. The frog in the well knows nothing bigger and grander than its well. So are all bigots: they do not see anything better than their own creeds." "The vanities of all others may gradually die out, but the vanity of a saint as regards his sainthood is hard indeed to wear away."—Sayings of Ramakrishna.

Rural Sunday-school pioneering is a specialty of the American Sunday-School Union. It has continued to organize on an average three new Sunday schools and to reopen two others for every day of the year, weekday and Sunday. The schools are held in day school buildings, in abandoned churches, in grange halls and farm homes, under brush arbors. They are in communities unable to support a church. In hundreds of them churches have been started and given up. In such communities the union Sunday school, with local leadership developed and encouraged by the supervision of the missionary, is the one practical method of promoting religion in the community and giving boys and girls an opportunity for Christian education. In forty-one of these communities during the past year there has been such religious development that churches of various denominations—the local people always decide what—have grown out of union Sunday schools; 185 young people's societies were organized, 317 prayer meetings established, and 214 regular preaching stations opened.

If any readers of THE BAPTIST hold diplomas from "Oskaloosa College," they will find a painful interest in a current report in the Associated Press that its "president," James W. McLennan, and his wife, in order to escape prosecution for fraudulent use of the mails, killed their child and themselves. At least that is the interpretation in the newspapers of the fact that after his arrest they were found dead in a gas-filled room.

Obedience or revolution is the alternative involved in the current problem of lawlessness as it appears to Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery of Massachusetts. His argument is based on a moral principle. The obligation to obey the law is identical, he believes, to that of loyalty to the government, and a citizen is morally justified on violating the law by any moral consideration that would warrant him in attempting to overthrow the government. There seems to be no flaw in the reasoning, but if it be true then the wanton and defiant violation of law is of the same moral quality as treason.

Two convictions concerning present religious conditions expressed in a letter from Pastor A. K. Fuller of Syracuse N. Y., are worthy of attention. The first is that "modernism, disguised or course in a Christian garb, is only another name for what the Bible calls worldliness—conforming to the things of this world. Surely, the more such teaching prevails in our churches the less we will have of what Paul calls 'the power of God unto salvation.'" The other is that of a need of "preachers and teachers, who, letting the Bible mean precisely what it wants to mean, will kindly but boldly defend such meaning."

A "pan-denominational conference" of selected personnel met at Washington May 4-6, at the invitation of the war department and passed resolutions on "national defense" of the kind expected. They favor peace. They hate war. They are against militarism. But they stand for American institutions and the safety of the country. They believe in the necessity of adequate preparedness, the training of a sufficient force of officers and the selective draft of soldiers. They hold religiously that "war is caused by the failure of men to obey the law of God," and they recognize their own high calling to lead men "to obey the law of God." It was happy advice. The plans of the war department have their benediction—by inference. They are safely religious. They avoid all embarrassing distinctions. And they commit themselves to nothing of practical consequence.

Colporters of the American Bible Society in Japan visited last year 1177 institutions, reached 189,594 persons and old 267,518 copies of the Scriptures.

Yeshiva college, which is to be the first Jewish college in the United States, is now in process of construction. It is located in New York City. The institution is to be housed in an elaborate and striking group of buildings in the best classical Jewish architecture.

The Evangelistic Committee of New York City, Inc., reports the employment of 100 staff and volunteer workers and thirty-seven open air evangelists for the first year. Work is done among both native-born and foreign groups, white and black. Altogether 2959 meetings were held, having an attendance of 463,500, in 233 centers and distributed through the boroughs of Manhattan, Brooklyn, Bronx, Queens and Richmond. Disbursements amounted to $38,639.41.

It is reported that there are now five times as many adults pursuing some kind of supervised study as are registered in all the colleges and universities of the country. The students in commercial correspondence courses are the largest group. A million and a half new students register in these schools each year. The typical student is a young man twenty-six years of age who has been in high school two years and who lives in a medium-sized city. More than a million persons attend public evening schools, part-time and continuation schools. These are young people of both sexes, with an average age of nineteen or twenty years. Ninety-two per cent of these students are under twenty-four years of age. There are now 150,000 in university extension classes. These are mainly women averaging thirty years of age. The Y. M. C. A. courses enroll 10,000 students. There are probably 10,000 under other organizations. Workers' education classes have an enrollment of 30,000.

She prayed for her boy every day. He was an Indian mother. Her boy was with the British army in France. He was shot. She lost faith in God. It is Mr. Shoran Singha who tells the story. "My sympathy," he says, "was with the poor mother, but I asked her what right she had to expect her boy to come back. She knew the purpose he went out for. No God on earth or in heaven could stop a man pulling the trigger of his rifle and getting in the first shot. It is because the church dugged God into the war, where he had no business to be at all, that the man in the street says he has no use for the church. Bringing God in, to help recruiting, raised all sorts of difficulties. You light a fire and pile on all sort of things to make it blaze, can you expect God to blow it out? It is not God who is now sacrificing animals in experiments with poison gas, though probably if the time comes for the slaughter of men, women, and children with it we shall have a consecration service to ask God's blessing on our efforts."

"Those who proceed as if Christianity were a competitive religion always do so to the damage of Christianity; they misrepresent its spirit and distort its method," writes Dr. Henry C. Mabie. "Christianity is not in the field to gain a partisan mental victory. Such victories as Christianity wins it wins from intrinsic, unselfish desert, because it complements the limited or vitalizes the expiring hope in other systems."

The slave trade still continues. Lybia, Morocco and Portuguese Angola are its chief centers, according to the Christian Statesman. The trade moves chiefly through southern Abyssinia into Arabia, through the port of Tajura. More than a million Africans are still held as chattels to be bought and sold in the open markets. It is about half a century since this traffic was outlawed by Christian nations. The time seems overdue to bring such pressure to bear on the backward Mohammedan nations, that will compel them to abandon both the institution and the traffic.

And yet the Baptists are supposed to exaggerate baptism. The Presbyterian of the South explains the need for missionaries in Japan thus: "Outside of a few churches in the large cities, the missionary is the only one to baptize. It would be far better for the Japanese preachers to do this. But the Japanese pastors who control the church at the present time are very reluctant about ordaining Japanese men to baptize, and they may be wise. The result is that there are very few Japanese who can baptize, and this leaves a large place for the missionary. In the Island of Shikoku, by the coast road, it is 136 miles from Tokushima to Kochi, and in all that distance there is not a Japanese preacher who can baptize a convert."

Chaplains in the United States army request that they be accorded the standing merely of chaplains as a special group, and not assigned to the rank of military officers. This request will be widely approved.

They would not permit immersion at all. In the issue of May 8, page 418 is a statement, taken from source not now remembered, that in the formation of the Westminster Confession, immersion came within one vote of adoption as the scriptural baptism. Dr. O. P. Eaches, always alert and well-informed, writes a correction. He says that all favored sprinkling but the motion was to favor the practice of immersion also. It failed and thus committed the assembly to sprinkling only.

The Most Rev. Alexander, Russo-American Archbishop, pleads for the unity of Christendom and complains thus: "It has been most difficult for the Russian church to pray 'for the union of all' when even at the moment of prayer there were hordes of Protestant and Latin missionaries wishing to find opportunity to take the poor suffering body of the Russian church and tear it to pieces. Despite all these terrible things, the Russian church has kept her faith, she loves those who despitely use her, and she still prays for that glorious day when the Christian household will stop fighting with each other, and put into action the faith of their Master, and unite to fight for the kingdom of Christ." The complaint implies that since his type of religion is satisfactory to him it ought to be satisfactory to every one else.

Note is taken of a report of a recent meeting at which Dr. Parkes Cadman was the speaker, in which officers of the R. O. T. C. present interrupted the meetings and attempted to take control of it. What was the provocation? It was, as reported, the following utterance of Dr. Cadman concerning military training in the schools: "Those who oppose military training as I do, contend that it ingrains in the mental and moral structure of our students the conviction that preparedness for war and war itself are normal relations of nations; encourages belief in violence as the final resort in international differences and discourages the efforts now in progress to settle such differences by arbitration. It also unconsciously produces in schools and colleges a mental attitude inimical to the ideals of world justice and world peace for which we went into the World War. Nor does our country need such an extraordinary measure. It enjoys enormous advantage of man power and economic power beyond calculation. If nevertheless, it needs an expansion of its military forces, let this be gained by other means than this act prescribes. In brief, take the war department out of the public schools of the United States and keep it out." Is it not possible for a churchman in America in a time of peace to express such sentiments without having his meeting broken up by army rowdies?

A Bach artist tying up sore legs among the savages of the Congo is another episode in the effort of humanity to stand on its head. He is Dr. Albert Schweitzer, musician, theologian, philosopher, trained physician and all-around genius, who has given several of his best years to medical missionary work in Africa. He supports his work by giving lectures and Bach recitals in Europe.

A commentary on the present struggle in Great Britain to adjust society to new economic conditions is the proposal of Mr. Winston Churchill to raise a part of the necessary public revenue by imposing a tax on betting. The proposal is taken seriously. If Great Britain wished to make a proclamation to the world that she is socially, economically and morally bankrupt, how could she do so in terms more loud and clear? Opposition in religious quarters to the proposal is one encouraging note.

Dr. F. W. Norwood, at a great meeting in Westminster, London, spoke on "The World's Great Need for the Help of the Church in Industrial and International Problems." In the course of his address he gave utterance to this hopeful forecast: "The church of tomorrow will not be less concerned with God nor with the world beyond the veil, but will be intensely concerned with the conditions under which men live. She will speak with so certain a conviction upon the age-long exploitation of man by his brother-man in the realm of industry and the brutal, blatant, futile slaying of man by his brother man in the name of patriotism; that those two evils—not all at once perhaps, but with more speed than we dare to dream today—will pass up an ascending highway to their settlement."

For the benefit of the many friends who are inquiring about the health of the editor we are happy to state that the editor is back at work on the paper after a speedy and normal recovery from his hospital experience in St. Paul, Minn. Modern surgery at the hands of skilled surgeons who operate in standardized hospitals is one of the great and valuable contributions of modern science to a suffering human race. Divine healing is broad enough to take in modern surgery. The editor speaks from experience, whereas before March 20, 1926, he spoke only from observation. Baptists of the North are far behind their Southern brethren in providing hospital service for Baptists and all others who need this type of Christian ministry. But the Baptists of the Northwest are awake to this need and in Mounds Park Sanitarium and the Midway Hospital in St. Paul, Minn., both of which represent property values of nearly $1,500,000 we have met the need and utilized the opportunity. The Northwest Baptist Hospital Association is setting the pace for all the Baptists of the world. Much credit is due the doctors, Robert and George Earl (no relation to the editor) for the success the Baptists of the Northwest have won in building and maintaining Baptist hospitals and training schools for nurses.

"Ours is a religion of authority—not human but divine," the Biblical Recorder declares. "Our orders are given to us by Christ our Lord, who has revealed His will to us in his inspired Word. This Word the individual is to interpret for himself by the aid of the Holy Spirit. And yet, strange as it may seem, we have come upon a day when some Baptists have swung so far toward Rome that they recognize human authority, and would force upon others their interpretations of the Scriptures."

The announcement of prizes for the best sermons on eugenics preached before July 1, has awakened general interest, it is said, among the ministers of the country. The American Eugenics Society has received requests for information and material from men in all the states of the Union, with the exception of Utah, as well as from Canada and Germany. Twenty denominations are represented. So far as is indicated by the letters, the Methodists are most interested in the subject and Pennsylvania is the most interested state. Several rabbis are planning to preach on the subjects.

A lover of fun is L. L. Gwaltney, editor of the Alabama Baptist. Seeing that Virginia Baptists oppose a law for the compulsory reading of the Bible in the schools while some Alabama Baptists favor such a law, he twinkles humorously as follows: "Since there is some difference of opinion among Baptists on this matter of some importance, wonder if it isn't a good time for some group of men, either in Virginia or Alabama, to start up a heresy hunt? Shall the Virginians invade Alabama, or the Alabamians go North and capture the General Association of Virginia? And in either case what is this writer to do, who is a Virginian by birth and an Alabamian by choice and adoption? Meantime, one way out is to refer this business also to the Southern Baptist Convention and let the convention settle the difference between Alabama and Virginia. Why not? The Southern Convention has such a nice way of settling things by 'voting' it certainly ought not to have any trouble with this matter."

A Prayer

AS we approach another Memorial day we hold in loving memory the lives of loved ones who have gone before us. We thank thee for their gracious influence, for our assurance of their immortality, and for the glorious hope that we shall again see them face to face. We thank thee for the heroism and self-sacrifice of those who have defended our flag and country. We are inspired by their courage and stimulated unto nobler living by the presence of many of them. Grant to each veteran of our country's wars a portion of thy grace. May we soon learn a better way of living than by war. Help us all to make peace.

Bless America. Make her among the nations as the dawn ushering in a day of righteousness and as a torch passing on the salvation of our God. We ask all in the name of Christ our Lord. Amen.
—Merlo K. W. Heicher.

A cablegram in the latter part of April announced that a Chinese mob had seized the Baptist missionary property at Kaying, but that the missionaries, including Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Griffin, Miss Anna Foster and Miss Edda Masor, though subjected to considerable embarrassment, are safe. Property seized included two large academy buildings; three residences, a girls' school building and the church building. In the Swatow region in general there is no interference with missionary work.

Rev. Charles R. Hudson, in whose boyhood one of the editors of THE BAPTIST had the honor of teaching him in a little country schoolhouse in southern Indiana, and who is now pastor of the First Christian church, St. Louis, has a device worth passing on. On the last Wednesday evening of each month he invites all whose birthdays fall in that month to occupy a center table at their church dinner in connection with their prayer meeting and to express thoughts they may have concerning this anniversary.

Mr. Singha, writing in East and West, a magazine published in India, expresses the following somewhat representative Indian opinion about Christian missions: "From the point of view of the production of Christ-like characters, missionary and educational work has been more helpful than mass conversion. There are few men who leave missionary schools and colleges without a change of heart and life. An educated Indian would like to be, and attempts to be, something like Christ, but he has no desire to be called a 'Christian.' Instead of throwing Christianity overboard, India's educated men have begun to make a distinction between the Christ of Christendom and the Jesus of the gospel. The former they will not touch, but the latter is drawing them more and more."

The present serious basal financial problem of religious newspapers, says the Congregationalist, lies ultimately in the fact that while costs of production have enormously increased, and higher standards are demanded, the subscription price has remained substantially the same. For three generations the subscription price of the Congregationalist has been $3 a year, yet three generations ago that represented, in rural communities, probably at least four times the purchasing power that it represents today. A natural suggestion is that the subscription price should be increased to correspond to present-day costs, but there is no religious paper that could make such an increase successfully. Nor could it be made with due consideration for the loyal readers whose support reaches far back into the years, many of whom are as poor in this world's goods as they are rich in faith. The whole problem needs to be faced with intelligent and fundamental recognition of the fact that a religious newspaper is primarily a religious and educational enterprise. It ought to have sound business management as much as a church or a college, but no more than a church or a college can it be expected to be a profit-making or even self-supporting agency.

In Memory of the American Soldier

ON fame's eternal camping ground their silent tents are spread." As long as the people of the United States continue worthy to be nobly served they will cherish the memory of their young men who went to war and gave their lives in the cause of freedom and humanity. To this cause were dedicated the American armies in the three great wars within the memory of living Americans. It was so in the Civil war. The South called its sons to battle for the freedom of the states and the defense of their homes; the North, for the freedom of human beings and the defense of the nation. It was so in the Spanish war, a disinterested war of liberation. It was so in the World war, the most majestic crusade for human rights, for world welfare, for free government and for a nobler civilization in the annals of mankind.

That in all of these conflicts there were sinister forces operating in concealment for selfish ends, that in the ensuing peace the nation in its civilian program has not actually carried into full effect the slogans of idealism with which it called its sons to war, that the war itself in every way grew out of long antecedent errors which statesmen of sufficient acumen and unselfishness might have corrected without war, were discoveries to be made slowly by the nation as a whole afterwards. But in the half lights of confused voices of the crisis, the clearest thing in sight was a vision of imperiled liberty, and the clearest voice a call to strike for its defense, and our soldiers rose to that call and answered that call. That honor is theirs forever.

And they did not die in vain. After all critical disappointments are allowed for promises unfulfilled, it is clear that out of the murk of war in which they fought have emerged gains in the progress of human rights and human welfare. In 1865, the experiment of government by a generation of free states under a constitution guaranteeing equal rights and liberties to all was vindicated and its future made secure. It stands today the supreme example of successful government by the people in the world. And twelve millions of black men and women celebrate annually their emancipation from slavery by that war and bring increasingly a large contribution to the nation's true greatness. The war of 1898 closed the long black record of Spanish imperial oppression and set free the last suffering remnants of the Spanish empire. The peace of 1918 made the consent of the people the ultimate test of legitimacy for civil government in international relations hereafter and set all nations upon the final quest for a program of peace with ordered justice in a warless world. That the fruits of these struggles thus indicated have not yet fully matured, and that the meaning of those eventful years is not yet generally and fully comprehended by the peoples concerned, are facts that in no wise invalidate the certainty and value of the results towards the achievement of which the soldiers and seamen of this nation contributed such a large measure of heroic and effective valor.

Relative values in the field which we are now considering are perhaps incommensurable. But not the least, and possibly the greatest, contribution made to human betterment by the nation's soldiers and sailors is a moral one. They have demonstrated the practicability of a supreme social virtue towards which scepticism is a habit and which the worlds of business and politics have hitherto refused to accept as valid for cooperative social organization. That virtue is not willingness to fight, for in this characteristic men are simply animals. It is not in the impulse of patriotism, for this impulse is born in all normal persons, requires no exercise of the will and is therefore no more a moral trait than any of the other natural loves that require moral guidance. It is not in the resolute endurance of hardship and even death, for men have often so endured in courses or causes that could find no moral justification. Hardihood is a manly virtue, but not necessarily a moral one. No, our boys in blue or gray or khaki were brave, they were patriotic, they endured, they suffered, they died, they advanced the cause of freedom, justice, peace and good government, but perhaps not for these things chiefly is the world their moral debtor.

Christianity has insisted that the true structural principle of human society is cooperation in unselfish service for the promotion of human well-being. It has applied this principle in the criticism of the existing order of society in its two main phases, namely, politics and business, and has demanded that the whole political and economic life be brought under the sway of the moral demand for unselfish service. The ideal thus set forth has been accepted tolerantly, indulgently, patronizingly, in the realm of affairs that men call practical, as a pleasing utopian dream, but as utterly unworkable in practical life. It is held to be contrary to human nature. Without the selfish motive of either avarice or ambition or both, we are told there is no adequate incentive to lead men to serve society constructively and to the best of their ability.

Now Memorial day stamps with everlasting falsity the maxim that men will give their best and do their best only under the stimulus of avarice, ambition or other form of self-interest. For what took millions of the finest and most high-spirited young men in America through hardship, danger and death in these three great wars? In every one of these instances it was a great cause of human service which called for all and offered no selfish reward. For this more than for any concrete benefit will the world of the future be debtor to the men in whose memory the day is celebrated. For in the light of their example, thrice repeated and on a scale so tremendous, all pleading of mean and selfish incentives for the maintenance of morally indefensible methods, becomes morally contemptible and seems incredible. Stand by the graves of these heroes and say if you dare that there are not in men socially available motives more highly commanding than economic or political self-interest. Stand by their graves if you dare and say that you are one who will not give your best to human welfare unless you find it to your personal advantage to do so. If you will not accept for yourself their faithfulness and their cause, slink away to find for yourself a despicable sepulchre far from theirs and unobserved of men. Their memory calls every self-server to repentance or to judgment.

They claim no monopoly in this virtue. Their devotion in war is merely the pattern of what every man worthy of their memory can be trusted to do in peace. The virtue of the warrior and the virtue of the civilian are one and the same manifesting itself in different ways as conditions differ. And their memory calls day after day for the heroes of peace who in like spirit and in turn will carry on to fulfillment the work for which these laid down their lives. They won wars to clear the way for peace. The peace for which they died is yet to be won. It can be won only by a still larger host who will dare as they dared and give as they gave. The world is waiting for the tramp of that host.

The Universal, Eternal, Present Christ

THE Person whom we know as Jesus of Nazareth, had of course a definite setting in time and place. But there is in him something more than can ever be limited to time and place. He lived and still lives in the presence of the universe and of eternity. Wherever human beings are, there also is he. Wherever hearts hunger for what he only can supply there is he supplying it. Wherever a sinner lifts an appeal to the void for mercy, lo! within the void is the Saviour listening and granting mercy—if only men everywhere knew that he is there. His being there does not depend upon us nor wait for us. He is there before we arrive and before we even think of going. We go to the ends of the earth not to bring him to but to let the people know about his being there. And his saving presence among them does not depend upon their knowing that he is there, but their knowing that he is there opens the door to a wondrous release of light and blessing from him into their lives.

Great and understanding words are these of the great teacher, Augustus H. Strong, written ten years ago. ". . . . Now and then our missionaries find heathen whose strivings after God have been prompted by a sense of sin, and whose worship must have been accepted by the God of love. Though there is 'none other name given among men whereby we may be saved,' we cannot doubt that every man who feels himself to be a sinner, and casts himself upon God's mercy for salvation does really though unconsciously cast himself upon Christ the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world and so joins himself to Christ by the teaching and power of Christ's Spirit, as to be saved in some measure from the dominion of sin here and from the penalty of sin hereafter. . . . 'The Rock that followed' the chose people through the wilderness and gave them drink 'was Christ'. Every reform within the bounds of heathenism has been due to him. Confucius and Buddha, so far as they uttered truth, were his messengers. . . . Let us recognize candidly the grains of truth which they contain, for these are witnesses to the indwelling Christ who has not left humanity wholly to itself. And let us make these grains of truth our gateways of access to the heathen heart, while we show the heathen the larger and fuller truth as it is in Jesus."

Prepare to March

WHEN this paper reaches the reader the sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington will be far advanced. Tired men and women, earnest and anxious, will be taking counsel together for the solution of grave problems affecting the future work of the denomination. Debate and factional controversy there may or may not be. But greater than the questions about which we shall be debating or the problems of administration which we shall be trying to solve is our vast common enterprise of giving the gospel to the world. When the convention shall adjourn the task will still be ours undiminished, perhaps looming before us in even more majestic proportions. If the convention shall fulfil the hope of those who long for an inclusive mobilization of all the Baptist forces for a great united advance, the common unfinished task will invite their united forces. If it shall issue in a widening in the threatened cleavage between the groups that have found themselves for years separated by dissimilar convictions, there will be their task just as great and insistent as ever, perhaps even greater and more insistent. It is not at all improbable that out of the confusion of these days will come a discipline that will fit us in all of our various groups and manifold purposes to win to still greater victories for our Lord than those of the recent and glorious past. Throughout the whole field of the convention let our people look to the Lord for leadership and prepare to advance. There is room on the firing line for modernist, fundamentalist, middle-of-the-roader, Bible Unionist, strict churches, open membership churches and all of the rest. God bless them!

Wets May Well Consent Wets Will Do the Same

Not facts but booze will ever be sufficient to satisfy the clamor of the wets against prohibition. They keep calling for an investigation of the sources and uses of the funds of the Anti-Saloon League. The maxim of common law that he who seeks justice must do justice applies at this point. Whenever the liquor advocates will consent, as they never have done and never will do, to tell where they get their funds and what they do with them, they may with fairness ask temperance men to do the same—not until then. Dare them to an open showdown. The proximity of the state and federal prisons will prevent their acceptance.

Porto Ricans Plead for the Rights of American Citizens

Porto Rico is petitioning the congress of the United States for a larger measure of self-government. Its petition recites some interesting items. It recalls that when twenty-five years ago at the time the United States took over the island, the American negotiators declared that "the future of our people could be trusted to the hands of a nation whose congress never enacted a single law that was detrimental to human liberty or to human dignity." Instead of exploding with boisterous sarcasm at such a statement, the Porto Rican representatives, with perfect courtesy point out that they are loyal, peaceful and competent, that the island is their country, that "we have been waiting patiently twenty-eight years for the fulfillment of our faith in the United States," and that "American citizens that we are, we are merely asking for equality with you in rights." Does the skin of the American behemoth wince under such a reminder? Wait and see.

Laymen Are Finding Themselves For a Great Christian Advance.

It has been more than a year since this page raised a question of the adequacy of Christian vision in the laymen's movement at the stage then attained. Since that time there has been a distinct and cheering advance. An interdenominational laymen's league is in process of formation. It has gone so far as to create seven research committees to study respectively secrets of victory and fruitfulness, the application of Christ's teaching to business and professional life, the main business of the church, religious education, an adequate missionary policy, the enlistment of financial and other resources for Christ and his cause, and methods for men's organizations. M. L. Swinehart, Presbyterian lay missionary in Korea, has become general secretary for the organization. Ten years of that program faithfully pursued will lay the foundations for a happy, wholesome, peaceful, spiritual, educational, political and industrial revolution. The process of research will inevitably reveal the nature and dimensions of an adequate Christian program for the religious awakening and the social ordering of human life all over the world. No more heartening news has been given to the public in many a day.

Crusaders Would Go Back to Something

Bible Crusaders of America, a new organization, takes for its mission "to combat modernism, evolution, agnosticism and atheism at every point." Its "special objective is to eliminate all teaching of evolution and agnosticism from the tax-supported public schools and colleges of America." Its creed is the familiar five points: An infallible Bible, the deity of Christ, his virgin birth, his vicarious atonement and his bodily resurrection. "Its slogan is, 'back to the Bible, Christ and the constitution'." For the purpose of popular appeal the phrasing is admirable. Its attack covers a far narrower front than that of the Ku Klux Klan and can therefore be made more intense. It eliminates the race issue by admitting members "regardless of race, sex or creed." Such a movement ought to create a fine fighting machine. Weaknesses will be obvious. First, the blanket phrases it wears will be subjected to the test of critical exposition, wherein such ready-made phrases always reveal gaps to the discomfiture of the wearer. Secondly, it sets up Christ, the Bible and the constitution as mere monuments of the past to call us back, whereas they beckon us forward, not backward. Thirdly, the movement reveals itself utterly without prophetic insight, religious and social vision, constructive program or evangelistic spirit. Winning the world for Christ is not in its vocabulary. Sincerely, conscientiously, intensely, it is against something and wants to go back. It chooses to function merely as an obstacle.

Mexicans Would Like to Know Where Mexico Comes In

Professor Ozuna, a prominent Mexican educator touring the United States, presents a view of the oil question in Mexico which is at least interesting. He says that capitalists of the United States have invested nearly $500,000,000 in the oil business in Mexico, that they have received in net profits from that business in Mexico more than $500,000,000, and that they estimate the value of their holdings in Mexico at the present time at $1,500,000,000. Both profits and valuation are still climbing. In the light of these figures, it is perfectly natural that south of the Rio Grande this question should arise: What are the Mexican people getting out of the business? In those quarters where accounts are kept only in dollars such a question may be disregarded, but where fundamental equities and human values count, it may be well to listen, for the world has not heard the last of that question.

A Man May Have Race if He Has not Too Much of It

Complaint has arisen that Harvard university discriminates against Jews in the admission of students. The fact is officially denied. What actually takes place is this: "Those racial characteristics which make for race isolation will, if they are borne by the individual, be taken into consideration as a part of that individual's characteristics under the test of character, personality, and promise. If there should result, in fact, any substantial change in the proportion of groups in the college following the application of the test, this will be due not to race discrimination or any quota system, but to the failure of particular individuals to possess, as individuals, those evidences of character, personality, and promise which, weighed with other evidences, render them more fit than other individuals to receive all that Harvard has to offer." The considerate young Jew who wishes Harvard culture will therefore take notice and discreetly conceal his racial characteristics. Only those Jews will be barred who are known to be Jews.

"Christ, the Common Denominator"

The keynote address delivered before the annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington, D. C., May 25, 1926

By J. WHITCOMB BROUGHER

DURING the last six months I have had the unusual privilege of visiting the Baptists in all the states of the Northern Baptist Convention. I have had the opportunity of meeting and speaking to a majority of the Baptist preachers and representative leaders of our churches from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Ore. I am prepared to say that the overwhelming majority is praying and working for a basis of cooperation that will maintain the unity of the spirit, the harmony of our forces, and the united and enthusiastic action of our people in the accomplishment of the great evangelistic, missionary, and educational program of our denomination.

In a general way, we have four distinct groups in our denominational life:

1. A very small group of extreme "modernists" who seem stubbornly determined to carry out their own ideas even if they have to disrupt the Northern Baptist Convention to do so.

2. There are some extreme "fundamentalists" who are determined to carry out their convictions even if they have to destroy the harmony and interrupt the work of the convention. These two groups represent about fifteen percent of our denomination.

3. Another company of cooperating fundamentalists are determined to contend earnestly for the faith and to put up a vigorous fight in order to hold the denomination true to the fundamental teachings of Christ but also to cooperate heartily in the program of the Northern Baptist Convention. This group represents about one-third, or say thirty-five per cent, of our denomination.

The fourth group is made up of fifty per cent of our people who are thoroughly fundamental in their belief; they hold to the historic faith and practices of regular Baptists, but are not organized and aligned as a separate group. They are irritated by the continual discussions in our convention. They are disgusted with the fighting attitude of both the extreme modernists and extreme fundamentalists. They are weary of fractious folks and fractional dissensions. Their sympathies and activities are wholly given to putting over the program of our denomination; and if they had their way, they would put the extreme modernists and the extreme fundamentalists into a room together and let them argue and fight to their heart's content, while the rest of us went on with the main work of the kingdom.

It has been my privilege to confer with representatives of all these four groups, and I am sure that I do not exaggerate the situation when I say that ninety per cent of the Baptists in this country are true to the fundamental principles of Jesus Christ, believe in the integrity of the Scriptures, and long and pray for a chance to carry on the great work of God's kingdom on earth in a harmonious and enthusiastic spirit.

Is a Common Denominator Possible?

Now, is it possible to find a "common denominator" that will unite all of these fractions in our denominational life?

In mathematics, the denominator declares "the number of parts into which the unit is divided." A "common denominator" is then used to unite indicated divisions or fractions. Before we can add two fractions, we must write them over a common denominator.

When we apply this term to individuals, we seek to find a common, or a common principle, or a common person in whom all fractions and all divisions may be united. It may not be possible to find a term that will include all diversities of opinion. There are about as many varieties of Baptists as there are of pickles. The widely advertised "Fifty-seven varieties" has nothing on the Baptists.

For all true Baptists, the common denominator is Jesus Christ. In him we shall realize our individual, church, and denominational ideals and purposes. Outside of Christ, there is no hope of a united and harmonious body. For, it must be remembered, there is an exclusive process as well as an inclusive one in dealing with fractions. A common denominator cannot include more than the total sum of the fractions which are to be added. Consequently, if there is a fraction or division outside the circumference of the common denominator, it must of necessity be excluded when the final addition takes place. For the "common denominator" of several fractions must always be the "least common multiple" of all the denominators. A very simple matter which I am sure you all understand! However, I am not dealing with mathematics. I am dealing with men and women. I shall, therefore, confine my thought from this time on to a "common denominator" which I believe is able to unite the great majority of the Baptists of the Northern Baptist Convention.

We Must Have a Common Christ as Lord

There must be an absolute and unequivocal recognition of the deity of Jesus Christ. There is no room for difference of opinion on this supreme fact. Jesus, looking into the eyes of his disciples as he stood with them at Caesarea Philippi, asked the pointed question, "Whom do men say that I am?" That question calls for a definite answer from his disciples today. Professor Bacon, in an address at Yale Divinity school, said: "Christianity did not arise out of the admiration felt by Paul or by the Galilean disciples for Jesus as a teacher. They scarcely mentioned the fact that he was a teacher, still less considered that he presented a new system of ethics. Christianity arose out of what men believed to be the act of God. God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself."

The apostles and disciples went everywhere preaching about something that they believed God had done for them. They believed in Jesus as "God of Very God". Jesus himself said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father", "I and the Father are one", "If ye had known me, ye would have known my Father also", "I am in the Father and the Father in me".

The recognition and acknowledgment of the absolute deity of Jesus Christ without any evasion or mental reservation whatsoever, is absolutely essential to the harmony and cooperation of Northern Baptists. When any Baptist preacher or teacher or missionary or layman minimizes or denies the deity of Jesus Christ, he is entirely outside the circumference of the circle that can possibly include him as a Baptist. There is no possible chance for a real Baptist to pussyfoot, or make a detour around the deity of Jesus Christ. Let all Baptists, therefore, "know assuredly that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus" who was crucified. He is God by appointment of the Father. He is God by his own divine nature. Every Baptist must join with Thomas in saying to Jesus, "My Lord and my God".

The Baptists of the North would do well to give tremendous emphasis for one year to this great fact. Let preachers preach the deity of Jesus Christ. Let teachers teach the deity of Jesus Christ. Let missionaries, both at home and abroad, proclaim and exalt the deity of Jesus Christ. Let laymen talk and affirm the deity of Jesus Christ. Let us hold Him up as the "Only begotten Son of God", in whom "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" and in whom we may see the Father. The acknowledgment of Christ's absolute deity is essential to our unity, cooperation and success. Dr. Charles Reynolds Brown, in his book, "Why I Believe in Religion," says, "The development of the necessary spiritual vigor for world-wide missionary effort has been practically the monopoly of those branches of the Christian church which hold to the deity of Christ." He further says: "The church to which I belong (Congregational) suffered, a hundred years ago or more, a serious division. There were those who held to the lower view of Christ's person, and to our sorrow, they went out from us. The leaders in this unhappy separation were men of such ability and character that it was openly predicted by some of them that in twenty-five years all the Christians in this country would become Unitarians."

More than a century of honest effort has been put forth by these two branches of the Congregational church. Under similar conditions and circumstances they have worked side by side in the same country. What has been the result? The Congregationalists who have continued to believe in the deity of Jesus Christ now outnumber the Unitarians ten to one. And when we consider the other denominations who have stood for this, they outnumber the Unitarians one hundred to one. The spiritual dynamic for the most heroic self-sacrificing service comes only from Him who could say: "I and the Father are one." The future unity and success of our great denomination rests first upon the absolute and unconditional acceptance of the deity of Jesus Christ.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown him Lord of all."

We Must Have a Common Christ As an Authoritative Teacher in Morals and Religion

Victorious cooperation can be ultimately attained only by recognizing Jesus Christ as our supreme and final authority in religion. Baptists will bow to no other authority. Christ as revealed to us in the Bible is the head over all. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, every Baptist is to read the Bible for himself and seek to live what he believes it teaches. As Baptists, we should go direct to Jesus Christ and to the New Testament for our instruction in truth and righteousness. It has been the age-long boast of Baptists that we have no creed. We have gone directly to the Scriptures and asked only, "What do the Scriptures teach?" We have never been concerned as to what the "Fathers" taught. We have never been especially interested in what the grandfathers taught. We have not been greatly concerned to follow the decisions of church councils. We have gone back beyond fathers and grandfathers to Jesus Christ and the apostles. The plain simple teaching of the New Testament has been our guide, and it is our guide today. Here as a denomination of Christians we stand.

When a Baptist preacher or teacher or missionary accepts Jesus Christ as his supreme authority, no matter by what route he arrives at that decision, and acknowledges the New Testament as binding upon his conscience and life, he then becomes within the circle of the common denominator and places himself in line for cooperation in one great denominational program.

On the other hand, when a Baptist asserts that reason alone is his only authority in religion, he immediately begins to create fractions and divisions in our denominational life. No two people think exactly alike, and if a thinker becomes a leader among his fellows than a division is formed. If that group moves outside of the recognition of the deity of Jesus Christ and the authority of the New Testament, then it is outside of Jesus Christ as the "common denominator," and there is little chance to unite it harmoniously with the great body of Baptists in carrying out the program of Christ for a lost world.

We Must Have a Common Christ As the World's Only Saviour

"There is no other name under Heaven given among men whereby man can be saved."

Henry Watterson, the great editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, said during the war: "Surely the future looks black enough, yet it holds a hope, a single hope. One, and one power only, can arrest the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion. The paramount issue underlying the issue of democracy is the religion of Christ and him crucified—the bed-rock of civilization. If the world is to be saved from destruction—physical no less than spiritual destruction—it will be saved alone by the Christian religion. Eliminate that and you leave the earth to eternal war."

The world has not outgrown the need of a Saviour. Sin is sin today as it has been in all ages. Man is a sinner as he has always been. Society is not to be redeemed as a mass, but as individuals. Man as an individual is a sinner. Sin is hereditary. Neither evolution, nor any other principle of development has abolished the necessity for man to be born again. The awful power of sin is still in human nature. There is no hope, outside of Christ, for the forgiveness of sin nor for the regeneration of the human heart. All the ills of life grow out of this inborn tendency to evil. Sin, sickness, death, sorrow and temptation are only the expressions of the mighty volcanic force known as "sin".

When I worked for a noted oil company thirty years ago, I measured out kerosene in 5-gallon cans. It was the best kerosene on the market, but the grocers of that city wanted to have their individual names for their kerosene; so we made a label for "Jones" and let him sell "Sunlight oil"; we made another label for Brown, and let him sell "Moonlight oil"; we made another label for Smith and let him sell "Electric-light oil." Each oil was the best on the market; but the interesting thing about them was the fact that they all came out of the same tank. It makes no difference today what the evil or vice or trouble or temptation may be called, they all come out of the same selfish human heart that needs regeneration and forgiveness.

Man has not outgrown his need for a Saviour. Among all the nations of the earth, men and women, boys and girls, are crying out for a Christ who can save them from their sins. Christ is a perfect answer to that cry, because God, who made man and understands man's need, came in Christ to reconcile man unto himself, and by his death upon the cross made possible the forgiveness of sin and the regeneration of the human heart. Sinful man to be saved must be born of the Spirit. He must become a new creation in Christ Jesus. Environment and education cannot save him. Socialism is no substitute for Christianity. To save society, the "Adams" (atoms) of society must be regenerated. There will be a new world, and the brotherhood of man will be realized, only when humanity has been regenerated and the spirit of Christ has taken the place of the spirit of selfishness and sin.

We Must Have a Common Christ As Our Common Life

Christianity is a life. It is a life to be lived every day. It is a life to be carried out in all our relationships with our fellowmen. Paul could say: "I have been crucified with Christ; and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself up for me." (Gal. 2:20.)

Jesus prayed for his disciples that they might all be one; "Even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me. And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given unto them; that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfected into one; that the world may know that thou didst send me, and lovedst them, even as thou lovedst me." (John 17: 21-23.)

1. The Christ life should be the individual Christian's life. The power to live a cheerful, self-denying, self-sacrificing, helpful life is the supreme need of every Christian. Christ said unto his disciples: "I have given you an example that ye also should do as I have done." A Christian's conversation and his conduct at all times should be a revelation of the presence and power of Christ within his own life.

A Christian Chinese young man came to this country and was living in a so-called Christian home. One day he said to the woman of the house: "Can you get me a history of Christians?" The lady said that she could get him a history of Christianity, but that she did not know where to find a history of Christians. "Well," he said, "I want to find out when Christians first stopped following Christ and yet continued to call themselves 'Christians'."

A well-to-do man who stuttered went to Europe on a trip. When he finished his tour and returned to New York City, he found himself short of funds. He wired his banker at Wichita, Kansas, and asked him to send him $1000. The banker in Wichita wired the First National bank in New York City the money, authorizing them to draw on the Wichita bank for $1000, and give the money to Ed Brown when he applied for it, saying "You will know him by the fact that he stutters." They also wired Ed Brown at his hotel telling him to go and get the money. Mr. Brown got his money and finally returned to Wichita. He went to his banker and said: "I w-w-w-want to th-th-thank you for s-s-sending m-m-me my money so promptly. The b-b-b-bankers in New York are fine chaps, but they are n-n-not very careful. I w-w-went in and asked them if they had s-s-s-some money for Ed Brown, and they said 'Betcha life, come and get it!' They ga-ga-gave me a check for $1000 and didn't ask for any p-p-p-papers of identification. They were very c-c-c-courteous but not very c-c-careful."

One of the most important qualifications for cooperation in the work of Christ is that in our discussion of the great problems before us, we shall be so courteous and so considerate of the other man, that every time we open our mouths we will identify ourselves as Christians. More bitter feelings have been aroused, more dissension has been created and more discord has been caused by bad temper, ill-advised remarks and unkind judgments, than in any other way. We ought always to be courteous to the other fellow and considerate even of our enemies, not because they are Christians but because we are. In the discussions of all our differences of opinion, in the presentation of our opinions and convictions, let us pray earnestly that we may always keep our tempers, control our tongues and manifest the spirit of Jesus Christ.

2. The Christ life should regulate all of our relations with our fellow men.

Christ and his teachings can solve every problem known to human experience.

There is not a labor dispute, nor a contention of any kind between employer and employee, nor a misunderstanding between nations, that could not be solved by the Golden Rule and other principles of Christ, if these were strictly and carefully and unselfishly applied to the questions in dispute.

Two neighbors got into an argument over a boundary line between their houses. One of the men objected strenuously to a fence being placed six inches on his land. They went into a lawsuit over the difference, and spent hundreds of dollars, lost each other's friendship, grew to hate each other and finally had a personal combat in which one was nearly killed. Soon after this, the man who was so seriously injured sold his place at a reduced price to his lawyer in order to pay his fees and get out of trouble. The other man prepared to fight to the bitter end the lawyer to whom the property had been sold. But this man was a wiser man than his client. He went to his neighbor and said to him: "If you will have our two lots carefully measured so that you may know exactly what is right, I will pay the bill and then you may go ahead and put your fence exactly where the engineer decides it ought to be placed. If it is six inches or a foot on what is supposed to be my land I shall enter no objection. It is a great deal better to make some sacrifice and live in peace than to fight for our individual rights and live in enmity and discord." The man who had been thus approached turned and said to the lawyer: "You may have the land measured and tell me where the fence properly belongs and I will put it there." The years of quarreling and enmity were ended within ten minutes, when one man manifested the Christ spirit of self-denial and self-sacrifice and sought to live at peace with his brethren.

We Must Have a Common Christ As Our Common King

As King of Kings and Lord of Lords, Jesus Christ has a right to expect our absolute loyalty and obedience.

John McNeil has well said: "There is not, and never has been and never shall be, any single individual except One, who has the right or the qualification to aspire to world power; and there is not, and never has been and never shall be any nation or society or people in the world except One, who has the right or the resources to carry such claims to a glorious and successful issue."

Do you ask me who that One is who has the right to reign? It is Jesus Christ the Lord of Glory. Do you ask me what organization shall make effective that claim? It is the church of Christ. In order to carry out Christ's will and hasten the establishment of his kingdom on earth, there must be the absolute and unequivocal dedication of all our powers and resources to carry out the commission of Jesus Christ.

1. The world-crisis of this hour calls for the rededication and reconsecration of ourselves to this great task. When the Baptists of the North seriously and sincerely give themselves and all that they are to the service of Christ, there will be sufficient funds and sufficient missionaries with which to accomplish the evangelization of the world. William Booth once said, "Jesus Christ is my King, and He has all there is of William Booth." A little dog followed the hearse in which lay the body of King Edward of Great Britain. On the collar around the neck of this dog was to be read the simple legend, "I belong to the King." Do the Baptists of the North fully belong to Jesus Christ? Have we given ourselves completely to the service of Christ? Do our talents and our money and our time really belong to him?

Standing on the wharf in San Francisco was a millionaire who had put $100,000 into a great ship. By his side stood a little old man bent over with the toil of years. He, too, was watching the ship start on its journey to China. The millionaire said, "I certainly hope she has a safe voyage. I have $100,000 in her, and I'd hate to see her go down." The little man looked up and said, "I'd hate to see her go down, for I've more than that in her." The millionaire said, "What have you got in that ship?" The old man, with tears in his eyes, said: "Years ago there was born in my home a little girl. When she became old enough I decided she made up her mind to go as a missionary to China. She went away to school to prepare for her life work. Just as she graduated her mother died. She came home to me and gave up her heart's desire to take care of her old father, but I would not let her remain at home. I told her I'd get along some way—she must go. And, my friend, she's on that ship. She is all that I have and I don't expect to see her again on earth, but she's giving herself to the cause of humanity. I hope the ship doesn't go down." The millionaire turned to the old man, took him by the hand and said, "I have nothing in that ship compared to you. God bless you for your gift to the cause of humanity."

Life is the greatest gift that we can bestow upon the cause of Christ.

No one will dispute the fact that the Baptists have sufficient money in their possession to meet fully our financial share of the missionary program of the world; but we lack that spirit of self-sacrifice and loyal devotion that will yield all to Christ. If we ever establish our work and go forward to greater achievements it will be necessary for every church in our denomination to accept a missionary budget that calls for the greatest possible self-denial and sacrifice in order to reach it. Many churches reach their budget because the apportionment they have accepted is too small. There must be a willingness to accept the largest possible budget commensurate with the need of the hour, if we are to do our part to evangelize the world.

2. There must be a determined policy on the part of our churches to promptly meet that budget in monthly installments and to save the denominational waste of $100,000 per year in interest. Our denomination must quickly find a basis of cooperation that will lead our people to meet the financial program cheerfully and enthusiastically and make possible the doing of the great task more expeditiously and successfully than we have ever done it before in our history.

3. Finally, the recognition of Christ as our common King calls for the spirit of absolute obedience. When Admiral Dewey received the message from President McKinley: "Capture or destroy the Spanish fleet," he sailed without a moment's hesitation for Manila bay. He met the Spanish fleet before breakfast on that May morning and accomplished his task. Then he promptly wired back: "I have destroyed the Spanish fleet." When the Baptists of the North are ready to respond in that spirit, it will not be long before the world will be evangelized.

Women, and men, of the Northern Baptist Convention, let us during this year exalt Jesus Christ as God. Let us recognize him as our final and absolute authority in morals and religion; proclaim him as the only Saviour of the world; yield to his Spirit the control both of our individual and church life; dedicate ourselves fully and unreservedly to do his will. Let us obey implicitly his commands as recorded in the New Testament. Then we shall find a Common Denominator that will make possible a united denomination and an enthusiastic people, ready to do their full share in hastening the day when Christ shall come again and be crowned King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Onward, to the Peace for Which They Died

By ROBERT GORDON

THIS memorial season brings vividly to mind fields of graves and tender thoughts of men who marched no more. At Lambazellac alone, 2500 white crosses mark the resting-place of American men "who died in the full splendor of heroic pride, that we might live." On the first Memorial day after the armistice, I shared with others the sacred privilege of placing flowers upon those new-made graves. French peasants watched for awhile and then asked if they too might participate. So they came, men, women and little children, their arms full of blossoms, and with us reverently "crowned in their hearts those dead heroes of ours, and covered them over with beautiful flowers." Our band rendered Roosevelt's favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation." Flowers were offered and sympathies spanned the seas. An address was delivered, "Lest We Forget." And then in solemn, silvery tones, two buglers sounded "Taps."

While memory lives, all that will be stern, significant reality to those who were there. All such say perforce,

"In lonely watches night by night, great visions burst upon my sight.

Look down the stretches of the sky, the hosts of dead go marching by."

We owe it to the future to keep those visions before the minds of men. Descriptions of devastated towns, pictures of desecrated cathedrals, statistics of armies slain cannot tell that story. Somehow we must individualize those men, recall who and what they were and for what they died. Doctor Hallock has spoken of the deep impression made at the Student Volunteer convention, at the close of the war, by reading the list of those volunteers who had died since the last assembly. The great audience rose to its feet and as in response to name after name came the woeful words, "Killed in action," or "Killed in Europe," or "Died of wounds in France," the hearts of all were overwhelmed by the colossal sacrifice.

Let us call the roll. From the long list, we have space today for only three or four. But every school boy should be familiar with these names. "Joyce Kilmer." Does any one ask, "Who was he?" The official records say, "A private of the 165th, U. S. A. Infantry. Killed in action near Ourcq on the 30th July, 1918." No note is made of that last irresistible charge across the river and up the hill and the mastery of those blazing heights. Nothing appears to suggest even dimly what America lost when Joyce Kilmer fell. Although only a young man, he was university graduate, journalist, lecturer, poet, and had written lines that shall continue to inspire the hearts of men long after most of war's monuments have fallen into dust. Teach your boys what he said about the poetry of the trees and nature henceforth will be lovelier far to them. On every devout heart should be written his pathetic and profound "Prayer of a Soldier in France" beginning,

"My shoulders ache beneath my pack (Lie easier, cross, upon his back.)"

And ending,

*"Lord, thou didst suffer more for me
Than all the hosts of land and sea.*

*So let me render back again
This millionth of thy gift. Amen."*

Of another who marched away to death, singing deathless songs, the official record runs, "Allan Seeger, New York; killed in action on June 29th, 1916." There is no list of military honors or any other distinctive thing. But that is as he would have wished for he had written, "They sought neither recompense nor praise," those other Americans, his mates who by his side had died in love of liberty. It was not for glory he enlisted but as he so finely said,

*"That other generations might possess—
From shame and menace free in years to come—
A richer heritage of happiness."*

On the eve of his last day, he wrote to a friend rejoicing, "We go up to the attack tomorrow. I am glad to be going in the first wave." Thus utterly he gave himself at duty's call. Read his limpid, lovely lines and you will loathe accursed war that cut off so many such as he in the very morning of their glorious powers.

John McCrea—medical man, soldier, poet, an "imperishable name in Canada's military and literary annals." Probably no poem born of the fire and blood of the great war made a more powerful appeal to Anglo-Saxon peoples everywhere than did his verses, "In Flanders Fields." During the fiercest fighting of the second battle of Ypres, his dressing station was in a dugout and there, between the arrival of batches of wounded, he wrote those soul-stirring words,

*"Take up our quarrel with the foe;
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to lift it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields."*

To feel anew the hellish waste of war, read the battle-field letters of Alfred Eugene Casalis who died "for France and the Faith" at nineteen years of age, having already made for himself a shining name as student, soldier and saint. Only a sentence here and there can be quoted to indicate the spirit of this splendid lad. "Watch. It is necessary to be on the watch for the least suffering in order to relieve it; on the watch for the least injustice in order to crush it; on the watch for all that points upward in order to go to its aid and make it triumph." "Since in the barracks one is rubbing shoulders with the least agreeable things of life, one must immediately take a positive attitude to show what he is: a Christian. Then, hold on." "You know how contrary war is to all my ideals. It has been my desire to live to serve; to take a message of sympathy and hope to those who suffer, as did the Master whom I love." And here are the last sentences of his last message home, "The attack cannot fail to succeed. There will be many wounded, some killed, but we shall go forward and far—." The burial squad found that unfinished letter in his pocket. But no cartridge ever fired could stop a life like that.

All these and thousands more went forth "doing the thing they loathed for the thing they loved," hating bloodshed, yet eager to fight and, if need be, die to put an end to war. They went singing as did Rupert Brooke, "Now, God be thanked who has matched us with his hour"; and Harold Parry, just twenty, when killed by a bursting shell in Flanders and who had written his exquisite "Ode to Dusk,"

"Listen. I hear the trumpets of the angels wind Their call across the bordered infinite";

Or that brave British boy from Leeds, Clifford Flower, who was cut down in his twenty-third year. Repeatedly rejected at recruiting depots because slightly below the military standard in height, he wrote directly to Kitchener, concluding, "My Lord, I have answered your appeal, will you answer mine?" His return mail an order came, "Enlist the bearer, Clifford Flower, at once." From the trenches he wrote another appeal, though not with regret, of his enlistment:

*"O women folk of British lands,
Who toil and sweat in holiest cause,
Oh raise in prayer your clasped hands
That men may see the curse of wars."*

These names are not recalled to waken grief for those who died so young. That they would resent. What little thing they made of all that is seen in many a son of theirs. Charles Hamilton Sorley, killed at Hullack, expressed the amazing mystical joy with which the lads marched forward into danger and to death.

*"From the hills and valleys earth
Shouts back the sound of mirth,
Tramp of feet and lilt of song
Ringing all the road along.
All the music of their going,
Ringing, swinging, glad song-throwing
Earth will echo still, when foot
Lies numb and voices mute.
On marching men, on
To the gates of death with song."*

They were confident we could neither forget nor think of aught else until the bereaving sword had been beaten into the plowshare and the parliament of man made something more than a poet's dream. But what are the facts? Prof. Edward A. Ross writes, "The prospect the blackest that humanity has ever faced. There is only one way of escape. It is high time we were thinking in terms of some inter-nation, league of peace, world-federation." Yet we silence the seer and call for recruits. Have we forgotten Gettysburg and Lincoln's plea? Have we forgotten those four thousand coffins at New York Harbor and Harding's cry, "This must never be again"? Certainly America needs to be aroused to the appallingly wicked waste and folly of war and the urgent need of prayers for peace. Read Adcock's, "For Remembrance." It would almost wake the dead.

Henry Lionel Field, the Oxford youth who wrote "Ploughman Dig the Coulter Deep" and many another virile verse, had just lead his men over the first and second German trenches and had raised his hand as the signal for a further advance when a bullet struck him down. In answer to that signal the line moved on at the objective was secured. The hands of our dead are beckoning an advance today.

IN the triumph of Christ, the whole secret of a cloudy universe is seen. "Whenever," said God to Noah, "I shall bring a cloud over the earth, the bow shall be upon the cloud." Now Christ—incarnate goodness—gives the hidden meaning of the world, as the sun translates the cloud into a beautiful bow. Any cloud of time, or of man's life, is not to be taken and studied alone. We can never understand a sorrow until the infinite purpose of God, expressed in Christ Jesus, shines upon it.—FRANK V. GUNSAULUS.

Let the Immigrant Speak

BY FRANK L. ANDERSON

WE NATIVES talk too much to the immigrants. We are always giving advice. We are too much given to teaching. We act as if we had the idea that the immigrant never had a chance to learn before he came to America. We just take it for granted that he is ignorant of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. He is a child that calls for a guide that he may walk in the right path—the American way. In the days of the old kingdom in Egypt—nearly five thousand years ago—a sensible old king said that the wisest man is he who keeps his mouth shut. He isn't always talking. What tiresome folk advisers are! If people in the pew had a chance to answer back, more pews would be filled. Many people like to ask questions as well as to listen. The immigrant is exhausted with the burden of advice and instruction given him while he has sat in the attitude of passivity. What if he were given a chance to give a little advice or ask a few simple questions? There would be progress in Americanizing both the native and the stranger of another tongue.

But it is easier to talk than to understand. That may account for so much debate on evolution, on theology, on politics, or on internationalism. If the immigrant isn't worth understanding, why is he worth teaching? Man taught long, long before he understood the pupil whom he was instructing. He thought that all that was demanded of him as teacher was a knowledge of the subject whether the three R's or the three dimensions. How the student learns, or the student's viewpoint—these were not topics that called for serious concern on the part of the teacher. Why should he bother with that? He knows his subjects.

But the teaching world had a revolution—a revolution more meaningful and more far-reaching than either the American or the French revolutions of the eighteenth century. The teaching world was driven out of that teachers' garden of Eden never again to enter that blissful paradise. Some troublesome heretic raised the question whether or no the learner should be understood as well as the algebra, the history, or the physics. It was just the wisdom of the farmer who studies soils as well as seeds. That question was like Pandora's box that poured forth such an abominable brood of trouble-makers. Now the teacher must know what to teach—just as in the past. He, or she, must also know whom to teach—a much more difficult problem.

We are old fogies in our relation to the immigrant. We use the old methods of education still when we deal with him. (Of course, I am not talking about school-room education.) Some modernists in their contacts with him have left the old landmarks far behind, risking reputation in their courageous rebellion against the prevalent methods. These heretics are actually trying to understand the immigrant himself. These innovators are not indifferent to the Declaration, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, the Gettysburg address, and "making the world safe for democracy." They know and love America and the English language; they are loyal to the stars and stripes. But they do not stop there. They go on to a deep study of the forces that made the immigrant what he is, to an understanding of that newcomer's social, religious, political, cultural background. They would know what hopes and fears, what ecstasies and despairs, the struggles in the inner as well as of the outer life of that Pole, that Russian, that Magyar. They would know where he is weak and where he is strong; where he is a fool and where he is a wise man. These men and women want first of all to understand this man from the old world. They do not want to know him just as a matter of curiosity. They want to know him as a man whose experiences have been different from theirs and still, perhaps, as meaningful as their own. They do not even want to understand in order that they may help. Service may come. It may not be needed, however. The native may find enlargement of soul. He may even find himself in the place of the learner and no longer a teacher. Such unexpected things do happen in life. They happen when the native wants to know the man from across the waters. To understand is to help. What the immigrant wants more than anything else is to be understood. He wants to be understood by our politicians, by our industrial foremen, by our churches, by our newspapers, by our public speakers who discuss him as a menace, and he wants our Americanization workers to know him.

This calls for patience and tact. The deeper life of the immigrant does not spread itself out as a salesman displays his goods in a sample room for the inspection of prospective buyers. The door into the immigrant's life does not open by appointment, nor even by interviews. Shallow minds who think they can see Chinatown for a dollar are as blind as bats to the real Chinaman who lives there. What costs little isn't worth getting. The immigrant respects himself and no one can walk into his inner life roughshod. Nor can he enter in that spirit of patronage and cheap compliments adopted by some who would "win the foreigner." The immigrant was a man before he became a foreigner. He who appreciates that fact and "inwardly digests" it will find that the depths of his own life answer to the depths of him who is no longer a stranger. They have begun to share life.

The price of understanding is high—always was high—and many there be that miss it. Our sense of superiority makes understanding impossible. We must sacrifice that. How can the immigrant reveal his inner soul to one whose attitude is that of evident superiority? A great teacher in Judea said that he was meek and lowly of heart. He came not as a king, but as a friend. Men revealed their hearts to him. Roses do not bloom in January and birds cannot sing to an audience of owls and eagles, and children cannot play before strangers. It takes imagination to understand other people; and imagination is scarcer than gold and more precious than rubies and diamonds.

We natives catch the small still voice of the immigrant when we are ready to hear, and to share his life. Differences of language are no longer barriers—if they ever were. There is a language that is more readily understood than the language of the voice or of the written page. It is the language understood by all men and women everywhere. No dictionary is called for, and no grammar is necessary. It is the language of human sympathy, of understanding, of essential oneness of life that flows silently underneath all the externals that tempt us to judge the man by what is outward and passing. When the native finds that deeper life, words are mockeries, for he understands the man from Europe, and the man from Europe understands the American. They are now neither native nor foreigner. They are just brothers.

The Devotional Life

The Awakening of the Soul

By J. M. WELLS

JESUS teaches that religion is the true life of the soul and that one needs only to be awakened to a sense of this fact to realize its truth. If a person once comprehends his relation to God he will never be satisfied without realizing this relation in his every day life. If he compels himself to live a lesser life, he does it under many limitations and with a never-ceasing hunger and restlessness.

A son whose heart is ruled by selfishness and lust leaves his father's house, and among strangers gives himself up to immorality and drunkenness. When at last he becomes friendless, penniless, ragged and hungry he comes to himself. He becomes conscious of a self, and of a relation which makes his present life and condition intolerable. He arises and goes to his father and he soon finds that his soul has not been false to him but that his relation to his father is better than he himself had imagined.

The Birth of a Soul

A tax collector who has enriched himself by impoverishing others, whose heart is hardened to the sufferings of the poor, and who has accustomed himself to the envy and hatred of his fellow citizens, is given a kindly recognition by Jesus. At once his soul is awakened to a sense of its worth. Sympathy, kindness, justice and love are suddenly born out of the depth of his life.

There is a beauty in every soul which needs only to be uncovered for its glory to become manifest; there are great forces for good dammed up in every character which need only to be released; there is in every life a self with unlimited possibilities which need only to be developed.

Those who are in a rut from which the beauty of life and the glory of God are excluded, need to be aroused to a sense of untrodden paths and a larger life. Those who are so ruled by the spirit of materialism that the whole aim and ambition of their lives is to accumulate things and still to accumulate things, need awakening to a larger sense of worth. People whose finer instincts are so benumbed and whose hearts are so corrupt that they can ridicule purity, truth and honor, and delight in that which degrades and defiles, need to be awakened to righteousness and to God. Those hedged in by sinful desires and habits must come to realize that "there is a power not ourselves that makes for righteousness," before they will trust in God.

By what means a soul can be awakened it is impossible to say. Rules are out of place in the spiritual realm. Only in its degenerate stage is religion reduced to rules and forms. In the Hibbert Journal for October, 1912, there is a spiritual biography of great suggestiveness. George Marsh has his manuscript on "The Phenomena of Conversion" ready for publication; and with despair he says to himself, "I never can be converted, I know too much about it." All his life he has honestly sought for this religious experience, but it has been in vain. In his youthful years he followed the directions given by his pastor, but he failed to gain the expected experience. Later he read "Pilgrim's Progress" and other books of the same character, and then imitated with great care the early steps of these saints, and again he was disappointed in the results.

After a period of doubt and agnosticism he sought for the mystical experience described by Wordsworth as a vision. He prepared himself in every way for it and again was disappointed. He has now made a thorough study of the laws of conversion and has come to the conclusion that he can never know the experience in his own life. After this he becomes acquainted with a farmer who never tries to explain religion to him but whose life, in all its details, expresses a spiritual fellowship with God. George Marsh is fascinated with this man; he is the first whose character has spoken to him of God. They frequently meet and talk on many subjects. They walk together through God's beautiful fields, and finally without knowing how it has come about, George Marsh realizes that he is a Christian.

The Life of the Spirit

With humility and simplicity he lives the beautiful life of the spirit. For him the essence of Christianity is found in what he terms, "The Parable of the Great Surprise." When asked to explain what he meant by this parable he quoted the words of Jesus, "I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me to drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me. . . . Then shall the righteous answer him saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? And when saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee?" His conception of Jesus was: "He was man in so far as he did what was expected, and God in so far as he took the world by surprise." This scholar's relation to God finds expression in the words inscribed on his tablet: "Marvelous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well."

The soul does not come to its own by following the path of another; it does not find its God by conforming to ecclesiastical rules; it must walk in the path dictated by the still small voice, and it must find God in its own way.

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topic for June 20

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meeting Helps" will be to the following books: "Modern Discipleship and What It Means" by Woods; "The Man Nobody Knows" by Barton; "Twelve Tests of Character" by Fosdick; "Gates and Keys to Bible Books" by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible" by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church" by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers" by Miller; "God's Dynamite" by Lerrigo. The books may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society. A few others may be added later.

From pages 220 to 240 of Moncrief's "Short History of the Christian Church" you will learn how the church helped with education in the "dark days" of the world. In order to learn something of what our denomination is doing along that line today, turn to page twenty-seven and read through page thirty-two of "The Book of a Thousand Facts." Your pastor probably has this. If he does not, you may get a free copy from the Literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation (New York City, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles).

Have your meeting room arranged like a school room, with maps, a globe, books, perhaps a few drawings, etc., in conspicuous places. You might even arrange the chairs in rows as desks.

Your meeting may be conducted similar to a school. For example, instead of announcing hymns, the leader may announce, "We'll have our singing lesson first." The Scripture might be the reading lesson; the topic presentation be the "history lesson"; an open discussion could be the "English lesson."

If you do not want to use grammar school phraseology and take your members back to childhood days, perhaps you could use high school or college terms. As for example, one "course" could be "Education in the Christian Era," this being the lesson presentation. The open discussion could be the "Oratorical Contest." Of course, these need not be "dry" commentaries or discussions on the subject, but could be made lively and interesting.

The conclusion could be that the church seeks to spread light, both mentally and spiritually.

It Is Required!

Sororities and fraternities, clubs and societies, groups and classes, all have their requirements for admission. A test of worthiness is made of each person desiring to join, and unless the test is passed, the individual will not be admitted into membership. In this way only those who are really interested to a point of labor and sacrifice become members. The value of this test period can be imagined, but its significance is only now being realized by church groups.

The "Go-getters," the intermediate society of the Fourth church of Providence, Rhode Island, have introduced such a test period in their society. The first test stipulates that a person must be at least twelve years old, but not over fifteen, or must be in a certain grade in school or Sunday school; must be a regular member of the church school for three months or more; must be able to locate ten Bible references in ten minutes; must write five original rules for keeping in good physical condition, five for developing and using the mind, five ways of pleasing God and five of serving others, giving evidence of having kept one of each for one week; and must know the names of the church officers.

When the first step has been completed (a month is allowed for this), the second is taken. This step consists of memory work, notebook work, church attendance, securing a new member, serving weekly for one month in some approved way, and securing subscriptions for the Rhode Island Baptist.

This intermediate society will mean much to the church in a few years. The young people will be familiar with the work of the church; they will know their Bibles and their hymns; they will know about Christian living; they will know about the larger kingdom interests of the denomination. Because of this foundation of knowledge they will be eager to serve in whatever way they can.

This society means a great deal to the church now. When it is required that these young people show a real interest in the society, church, and neighborhood, it shows that the leaders realize the importance of training young people for the greater tasks of the future. It means that these young people are receiving the training so necessary to those who are to serve.

The Fourth church is to be commended. Its leaders are elaborating on Paul's injunction to the Corinthians: "Moreover it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." These young people, because they are faithful to the few tasks required of them, are being allowed the great privilege of doing work for Christ's kingdom.

Autographs

Autograph albums and sections of school annuals for signatures, are always popular. In after years the sight of these autographs brings to mind the social times and pleasant associations of delightful days.

The St. Louis B. Y. P. U. is cognizant of the fact that people like to secure autographs and so has "hit" on a good idea. At a recent banquet of the city union, the programs bore lines for signatures of the national president (who was a guest and speaker that evening), the state president, and the city president. Before the banquet, the presidents signed the entire lot of programs. All those who attended carried away these autographs as a memoir of a happy evening.

Perhaps your young people would like to have signatures of speakers or guests at your banquets or social times. The best way to fulfill their wishes is to have these speakers and guests autograph the program. Perhaps in a few years, the young people in looking over their "treasures" will pick up the program, look at the autographs, wipe their eyes, and say, "Didn't we have a great time that night?" Help to keep their memories verdant!

The reservation contains more than 9000 acres.

The Chimney Corner

The Wise Woman

A LONG time ago, a man of wealth and piety, named Ahmed, resolved to make a pilgrimage to Mecca. As a part of his preparation he sold his property and packed the greater part of the money proceeds in an iron pail. With whom should he leave his treasure? He thought of the kadi, or judge, the greatest man in the town. Surely his wealth and rank were great enough so that he would be above sordid temptations. He would be a safe custodian of his wealth. So he committed his treasure to the kadi and started on his pilgrimage.

In the course of time he returned and went to the residence of the kadi. He told proudly of the completion of the sacred pilgrimage and then asked for his pail of treasure.

"Your pail," cried the kadi. "I know nothing of your pail. Guards, why have you brought a madman into my presence? Put him out!" And the pious Ahmed was summarily pushed out of the house.

In despair he went to the house of Hajjeh Fatmeh, a woman famed for her knowledge and wisdom. She heard his story. After thinking a few minutes, she said, "Never fear. Meet me at the kadi's tomorrow after the noon hour of prayer. I will be there before you. Come in boldly and ask for your pail, and I promise you it will be returned to you." She would say no more and Ahmed went away much perplexed.

The next morning Hajjeh Fatmeh dressed herself in rich black robes, and while the muezzin in the minaret of the mosque was sending forth his long-drawn-out call to the faithful to observe the noon-hour of prayer, she went to the kadi's house.

"His excellency has gone to the mosque to pray," said the guard.

But Hajjeh Fatmeh bowed her head and drew her black veil more closely, saying, "I will await his return."

Others gathered to make requests of the great man, but when he appeared, smiling in sanctimonious complacency, Hajjeh Fatmeh was the first to throw herself at his feet. With many extravagant oriental complimentary phrases, she told him that her husband, a rich merchant, had gone to Bagdad and she had received word that he was sick and wished her to come to him at once. Then she added, "But I am distressed concerning my husband's money which he committed to my care before he left, and which I dare not carry with me on the brigand-infested roads to Bagdad."

"Now I seek a man of undoubted honesty with whom to leave this treasure. But honest men are rare, as you well know, O august kadi. Therefore, I have come to you for wise advice as to where to find a man of perfect honesty."

The kadi looked pleased, but asked, "What is the sum you wish to leave?"

"Twenty thousand liras (nearly 90,000 dollars)," answered Hajjeh Fatmeh, "and few men can be trusted with such a sum."

"I think we shall have no trouble to find such a man," said the kadi, stroking his beard to hide his eagerness.

"But I should need to have proof of his honesty," said Hajjeh Fatmeh.

Just then the pilgrim Ahmed entered and bowing low before the kadi said; "I came to ask your Excellency for a pail of treasure which I entrusted to your care seven months ago."

"Certainly, certainly," said the kadi. "Guards, bring the pail at once from my treasure-house." Immediately the pail was brought and given to Ahmed, and the kadi turned eagerly to Hajjeh Fatmeh.

Just then a shrill joyous song was heard and Hajjeh Fatmeh's maid ran in crying, "The Afendeh, Hajjeh Fatmeh's husband, has returned, cured of his sickness."

Hajjeh Fatmeh once more bowed low to the kadi and said, "Since Providence has thus ordained, I need not journey to Bagdad and hence will not require further to trouble your excellency."

She left the court followed by her maid and the happy pilgrim Ahmed with his pail of treasure.

—Retold in The Expositor from a story by Alfreda Post Carhart, in "Masoud the the Bedouin," published by the Missionary Education Movement.

Secret Mainsprings of Joy

SAID a mother to her children: "I only earn money enough to give you a home, plain clothes, plain food, shelter and peace under the lamplight at evening. I have not one penny left to buy pleasures."

Service

HE serves his country best
Who lives pure life, and doeth righteous deed,
And walks straight paths, however others
stray;
And leaves his sons an uttermost bequest—
A stainless record which all men may read;
This is the better way.

No drop but serves the slowly lifting tide,
No dew but has an errand to some flower,
No smallest star but sheds some helpful
ray;
And man by man, each giving to all the rest,
Makes the firm bulwark of the country's power;
There is no better way.

"But I can give you the secret mainsprings of joy which all the gold in the banks cannot buy. I can give you books and the arts, the keys to the nobility of mankind whose souls are above the tumult of the market place of money-changers. Let us seek the simple happiness of every day. Let us make an unending quest for beauty in the forest and the fields beyond the city. Let us look at the sunrise and the infinite fields of the heavens by day and after sunset the planets, the galaxy of stars, the mysteries of the zodiac which proclaim the glory of God. Nor must we forget what man has done. It costs nothing to walk the streets and, forgetful of the crowd, to let our eyes follow the towers and monuments of architecture. It costs nothing to enter the Art institute, the Field museum, the Academy of Sciences, the Historical society and aquariums to wonder at the marvels of the arts of man, though we have gazed with reverence on the marvelous works of nature conceived in infinite wisdom."

And in that home for their ears was much music, the children's concerts of the symphony orchestra, the civic music class and choral societies in the schools, the sacred music in the church and old songs of long ago after the books of poems, legends and fables were told at the evening meals. Good books from the library made the hours short.

This rich bequest and its mainsprings for joy, no money can buy, that mother left to her children.—Chicago Post.

This question comes to us: "Would you say, 'There is a plan to get electric power cheaply,' or 'There is a plan to get electric power cheap?'"

It depends on what the sentence implies. If the getting is the cheap process, the first form is correct. If the power is to be cheap, the latter.

BOYS and Girls

For Want of a Nail

By MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH

ONCE upon a time on the same street lived two ladies, whom we might as well name Mother Goose and Mother Hubbard. Now there is this to be said of Mother Goose: she was very rich, all on account of the Goose That Lay the Golden Egg. But she had not always been rich. Time was when she was quite as poor as Mother Hubbard, and she had simply hated it. Many an evening she would rock the cradle and say sternly to Papa Goose: "Gander, unless you change your business you'll never earn money enough to bring up this family, for I certainly don't want my children to toil and moil as I did, living from hand to mouth. I want them to enjoy the privileges I never had, nor you, either. All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, and we do want our boys to shine in society."

"Yes, we do," groaned Papa Goose, and that was when the stoop got into his shoulders and the sigh into his voice—sighing to get enough to give the younglings privileges, music lessons, dancing lessons, privileges. I have even heard at the new babies were bathed in skimmed milk and curled their hair on a dollar bill and all such nonsense which may or may not come with being born with a silver spoon in your mouth. In any case they were so dreadfully indulged and sheltered and pampered, always riding to school in their own automobiles and never mixing with anyone who was not rich that they became rather odd children. One boy was called Molly Toddler, another, Sister Sue, and the girls were nicknamed too: Mademoiselle Nose-The-Air and Miss Vanity Fair. Not such nice names. But they did have their privileges.

But all this time there was Mother Hubbard with her bare cupboard. And not worrying too much over it. "My dear," said she to Papa Hubbard, "I have noticed that children who have to carve their own destinies are the shining lights of the world; so since you're not likely to stuff the cupboard full of anything else let's be guided by Benjamin Franklin's precept and fill it with nails. You know what he said: 'For want of a nail the shoe was lost.'"

Papa Hubbard looked lost too. "A nail? A shoe?" he repeated, much puzzled.

"Exactly. It was this way, darling: the rider was lost for want of a horse, the horse was lost for want of a shoe, the shoe was lost for want of a nail. So let's hammer nails into our children for their life, then they won't lose anything."

"I'm agreeable," quoth their father.

And Mother Hubbard started in on the nails at once, all sorts, big, little and in-between. There was, for instance, Promptness.

The Explorers' Club

Looking a little dawdling Hubbard in the eye she would say something comical, like: "Of late you have been early, you used to be behind before, I'm glad to see you first at last."

It was really lots of fun, this getting nails put into oneself—Truthfulness, now.

"But a lie is such a rather nice little thing," objected a small daughter. "It won't go any further than Mary, she promised not to tell."

"Exactly," agreed Mother Hubbard. "Little! like that pretty fluffy dandelion gone to seed. For punishment, I want you to pick it, dear, and run to the end of the street."

A merry job, this! She went prancing and dancing down the sidewalk, her curls waving every which way and the dandelion fluff waving every which way too. With pink cheeks and laughing eyes she came prancing dancing back. "Here I am!"

"Exactly" said her mother. "So now run all the way back and gather up the fluffs, every single one."

"O-o-oh!" breathed a solemn little Miss Hubbard, doubtfully. And this trip she neither danced nor pranced. She zigzagged slowly, like an old, old lady stooped way over, hunting in every possible nook and cranny for stray bits of fluff. But although she looked and looked and looked, she could find only two. She came home on sad slow feet, she and her two fluffs. "I can't find the others. They've gone too far."

"Exactly! Too far. Just like lies, you can never get them back. Do you see?"

"Yes!"

Honor was another nail.

"What's honor anyhow?"

Some little Hubbard fished a splendid definition out of his bright little head, "It's doing the straight, fine thing, no matter what the temptation not to do it."

"Exactly," said their mother. "Long years ago the Quakers in England were known as people of high honor, and once when several Quakers were put in prison (for their political views) it was necessary to transfer them to another jail, yet the jailer actually let them go alone, unguarded. That was a tribute to their honor!"

"And there's the honor system in school," said a boy. "We could be like the Quakers then."

Well, there were many nails, Thrift, Courtesy, Thoroughness, Courage, Kindness, Ingenuity. By the time they were all in, the little Hubbards had become big Hubbards, and were out in the world earning their livings doing this or that. They were prompt and truthful, honorable and thrifty, courteous and thorough, courageous and kind and ingenious, and merry, very merry. "Mercy!" they used to recall. "Weren't we poor? And wasn't the cupboard bare? But we were awfully rich in nails—we had a regular corner on nails, eh?"

And Mother Goose saw what she saw. She saw Mother Hubbard's children pegging away at jobs, but turning out so well, while her own children were playing idly around town, always getting into lots of trouble. So one day she said to Papa Goose: "Gander, your hair is white and your back is bent all on account of that pesky golden egg. Why don't you change your business again and go in for nails? I really believe it will be better for the children in the long run."

But Papa Goose was tired, so tired he was a bit rude. "The golden egg was your own idea, and I'm too old to learn a new business now. Besides your children are your penalty for marrying a Goose." Which was, of course, very true, although the dear lady was a goose herself to think that the rich cannot have the same nails as the poor. And everybody knows that poverty is no open sesame to honor and courtesy and kindness. So whatever the state of your pocketbooks, just look at the state of the nails in your shoes. Are they carrying you—on time, honorably, kindly, courteously? For, the shoe was lost!

For want of a nail

Among Ourselves

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

THE first commencement of the new Eastern Theological seminary was observed in the Memorial church on May 2. A class of eleven who had studied for a year in the institution were given diplomas and degrees that the seminary is now authorized to confer. Informal announcement has been made that Dr. Austin K. deBlois has been elected president in place of Dr. Charles Ball.

One incident in connection with the commencement exercises has excited comment. The baccalaureate sermon was given on Sunday morning by Rev. Russell Brouger of Patterson. When the occasion arrived, however, there was no senior class present to hear his address. They were out preaching themselves.

It seems apparent that the new institution is well fixed financially and will have to enlarge its accommodations for the students. The first year is reported as a very good one.

Three young men were recommended to their churches for ordination by the Baptist Union at a meeting in the Blockley church on April '22. One of them, Angelo Pantaleo, was from the Italian church. He had taken three years' work in the Italian seminary of Colgate and one year in the Eastern seminary. He was well fitted for the ministry in mind and heart. The other two, however, had only a high-school training with one year each in the Eastern seminary, quite a contrast, the Americans with the Italian. The painful part, to me, was that no expression was made in the examination, of regret for the meager preparation, while a contemptuous reference to colleges and their atmosphere of unbelief was applauded. The absence of the pastors of the strong churches from the council was conspicuous. It seems evident that we have here a wide open door to the ministry with no conditions of entrance save an expression of belief in the theology of anti-evolution days. I made my protest in a very chilly atmosphere.

The First church of Manayunk, Dr. G. Morton Walker pastor, has just observed its seventy-fifth anniversary. Dr. John Humpstone who was pastor from 1874 to 1877 was one of the speakers. An interesting story has just come from this church. One of its laymen, Benjamin Miles, a manufacturer who raises fancy stock because he likes to, heard of a need in China for blooded stock on a mission field. He had a bull which had won the blue ribbon in the Widener stock show. This bull he donated to the Southern mission, shipped it all freight paid to China, addressed to the missionary.

Doctor Walker has had a fine year at Manayunk. He has seen fifty-eight added during the year and baptized twenty-five at Easter. The church raised $20,000 during the year.

Rev. Michel Major, pastor of our Hungarian church has left for another work at Buffalo. He has been here nine years, is an able man, and received a great send off from his brethren. We commend him to the friends in Buffalo.

Rev. Harold Stanley Stewart who leaves this month for Oak Park was given a testimonial luncheon by his ministerial brethren on May 17. Oak Park is making no mistake in securing this able man.

The new Baptist home is making progress. The corner stone was laid with appropriate exercises on Mother's day, May 9. A. Ray Petty and Harold Stanley Stewart were the speakers. It is hoped that the building will be ready for occupancy in November.

Mother's day is Fraternity day in the Chestnut Street church where the writer is pastor. It was an impressive sight on the morning of May 9 to see ten different chapters from the university coming with their carnations. The audience was a great one. The sermon was from the familiar word in Proverbs, "Forsake not the law of thy mother." This church has just finished another successful year with a report of fifty-one added during the year and $34,000 raised for all purposes. Our membership includes members of several of the national boards as well as many who are active in local and state work. The work among students as carried on by Rev. Fred B. Igler has prospered.

Dr. Groves B. Drew, long time pastor of the Third church, has been installed as Pastoral Counselor for the Christian Endeavor of Philadelphia, the largest county union in the country. He succeeds Dr. Floyd Tomkins and is the first Baptist here to hold that position.

The First church under the energetic and wise direction of Pastor Rose is humming with activity. An enormous budget for the new year of $46,000 for home work was nearly met on the first day of the appeal and they expect to get it all soon.

The same sort of spirit and activity is characterizing the opening of A. Ray Petty at Grace Temple. The church is crowded both morning and evening.

Sesqui-centennial activities are tremendous. The first of them will be the Shriners who promise an attendance of about 250,000 from May 30 to June 4. Thirty-seven other conventions will come in June.

Montana Baptist Convention

By ROBERT W. SHAW

THE Montana Baptists met this year with the First church of Bozeman. Approximately 100 delegates and visitors were present and the convention was one of the best ever held. Especially is this true so far as recent years are concerned. There was no friction and the finest spirit imaginable prevailed.

All the old officers were reelected without a dissenting vote. Mr. H. T. Hedden of Billings, one of our fine business men, is the reelected president. On every hand there were commendations of the fine work which Dr. E. R. Curry had done in unifying the forces of the state.

All the reports indicated a good year of service. More than 500 were added to the churches, and the report is not yet complete. While the apportionment for the Board of Missionary Cooperation was not fully met, the amount raised exceeded that of last year by about $600.

Another feature of the meetings was the spirit that took hold of the convention with reference to the summer assembly. In Montana people have to travel long distances to get to these religious gatherings and one man traveled more than a thousand miles to attend this convention. The summer assembly affords an opportunity for the Baptists of this state to get together. When the assembly was presented in the convention there was a wave of unusual interest, and no doubt there will be a large registration at this summer gathering.

- The Speakers

There were three speakers who came to us from outside the state, and every one of them made a profound impression upon the convention. One of these was Mrs. Edker Burton of Moscow, Idaho who came representing the women's societies. She is the president of the Columbia river district. Her several addresses before the women and before the convention were of a high order and were well received. Dr. A. M. Petty, of Los Angeles, was also present. Many who were present will not forget the address which he gave on "Jesus' Estimate of Himself." The third speaker was Rev. L. W. Hattersley, of Burma. Mr. Hattersley was a seminary classmate of the pastor of the entertaining church and it was a peculiar joy to have him at this gathering. His address of nearly an hour held the closest attention of the convention and made the members see that the gospel of Jesus could be effectively preached in action, even if the name of Jesus was not used.

There were a number of speakers from within the state. The annual sermon, by Dr. W. Holt Smith, "The Sword of Jesus," told us that Christianity is a trouble-maker in the world and always has been, that Jesus was a trouble-maker. Men considered him so, but he pleaded for the Christianization of all the forces of life, personal and others. The other speakers of the state were listened to with great interest.

The convention will undertake to reach the increased goal next year; while they may not fully come up to it, it hopes to go far beyond what it did this year.

The closing meeting was the fellowship supper, with more than 100 people present. The best of good cheer abounded and it was a great occasion. Some considered it the best of all.

Next year the convention will meet at Fort Wayne, with Rev. Robert W. Shaw as the speaker.

Other Notes

Rev. E. R. Curry was reelected corresponding secretary, though by a change in the constitution he will be known as executive secretary.

A number of resignations are just now being placed in this state. Some of our long pastors are returning to school, a commendable procedure.

Rev. E. L. Hurley has resigned after five years at Dillon. It is not known what his future plans are. He has done a good work in this hard field. Rev. V. Holt Smith will leave Billings the first of June for his new field in Minnesota. He goes to the first church of the south. Rev. Ralph Knudsen will leave Fargo the middle of July. He expects to go to one of our seminaries. Rev. Charles Neilson will leave Laural about the same time. His future plans are not known to the writer. Rev. R. D. Britton will leave Miles City, July 1. After vacation with relatives in Missouri he will be ready for another pastorate, if not in this state in some other. All these men had done exceptional work in their fields. It is rumored that several other changes are in prospect.

The restlessness of ministers is not always the reason for their short pastorates. Conditions on the field and the unwillingness of the churches to look forward and move forward as opportunity presents itself is one of the reasons for this condition. The writer had a letter the other day from a young pastor who has done a constructive piece of work. In two years he has added 150 members to the church. The young people are alive and active. The Sunday school has increased in average attendance from 150 to 250. There is plenty of wealth in the church, but it has refused to provide the added equipment for this increased opportunity. Who will blame him for wanting to change when his church refuses to go forward? It might be well some times to examine this so-called restlessness of the ministry from the angle of the indifference and backward looking of the churches.

Montana offers unusual opportunities for constructive work, and it will do a man good to spend a pastorate in this great state.

Pacific Coast Letter

BY LEONARD W. RILEY

AFTER three busy days in Chicago

I am again on my way westward. The annual meeting of the board of education was called to order at 9:30 Wednesday morning, May 5, and adjourned at 5:30 p. m. the next day. Five long sessions were packed full of varied and sundry kinds of business connected with our educational work. The attendance proved that the large majority of the membership of this board take their responsibility seriously and are willing to sacrifice some other things in order to meet it. Drs. Elijah A. Hanley and James Asa White were present from California; Rev. E. R. Curry from Montana and Principal Milo B. Price from Minnesota. All the others were from the vicinity of Chicago and east thereof. Dr. Clarence A. Barbour of Rochester, N. Y., was the presiding officer. The meeting was held at the Chicago Beach hotel.

Drs. Ernest D. Burton, Albion W. Small and Treasurer Frank L. Miner were greatly missed at this meeting. They were always present unless unavoidably detained and always brought a real inspiration to our fellowship and discussions. They have passed on to a great and well-merited reward.

The reports made at this meeting were both encouraging and discouraging. There was encouragement in millions raised and in process of raising, but discouragement in the fact that these millions are not sufficient to meet our Baptist educational responsibility today. The situation east of Chicago is now fairly well provided for but on the whole perhaps the outlook west of Chicago is more serious than it has ever been before. This is due to the fact that standards in collegiate education have been advancing more rapidly than our standards of giving. We are a long way from the day of Mark Hopkins and his student on a log. Unless Baptists wake up and get terrifically busy they are likely to suffer a shame educationally which will only be enhanced rather than covered by their great numbers.

Campus Christianity.

The whole of Wednesday evening was spent by the board in taking a look in a right direction. Doctor Kenneth Scott Latourette, professor of missions in the Yale Divinity School and an alumnus of Linfield college, spoke for an hour on the problem of maintaining right moral and spiritual conditions on our college and university campuses. The discussion which followed was most enlightening

THE TUXEDO PARK PHILATHEA'S of Indianapolis are organized after the "Christian Life Program" plan. There are four presidents, each responsible with the officers for one point of the standard. The points stressed this year were, evangelism, devotional life, missionary membership and social. Jan. 17 found this class in a contest with the Philathea's of First church, Fort Wayne, which ended on Easter Sunday with Tuxedo in the lead. The Tuxedo girls spent a week end in Fort Wayne. They were given a banquet and a royal good time Saturday night, attended Sunday school and church service on Sunday morning, where Pastor Gunn preached to them on that oldest yet new subject of love. They were given a luncheon followed by a sight-seeing trip. They went home Sunday evening feeling that the friendship between the two classes had been strengthened and with a warm place in their hearts for the people of Fort Wayne. Teacher is Miss Ollie M. Burnett.

and enheartening. While concerned about financial and scholastic matters our board is evidently deeply concerned also about the necessity of having our educational institutions prove their right to exist by the maintenance on the campus of a genuine Christian atmosphere. Why have them if they do not? A denominational college or university in all respects like, and in no respect different from, a state institution is a less desirable place for our children than is the state institution. Our board of education is planning from this time on to take the moral and spiritual conditions of our educational institutions into their considerations and to put forth positive efforts to assist our college administrations in improving these conditions. This is a step which, I am sure, will meet with the approval of our constituency and which will encourage them in their support of our educational program.

Some News Items.

The Central church of Spokane, Wash., has called Rev. William Jackson of Kalispell, Mont., to succeed Rev. Arthur B. Waltz, who recently removed to The Dalles, Ore.

The East Washington and North Idaho Convention this year has thirty-nine students in Linfield college. Their names are printed in the last issue of the convention bulletin. Our state convention secretaries quite generally appreciate the relation which these students in our Christian colleges have to the work which they are promoting.

Dr. C. Oscar Johnson after completing the tour of Doctor Brougher was again in his own pulpit on April 18. His topics that day were "Hitting on all Six" and "Going West, or Through Golden Gate to the East." In the evening he gave a prelude on "My Visit to Luther Burbank's Home."

The annual reports of the various departments of the work of Grace church of Spokane were printed in the program of the annual meeting. The total membership is now 627 which is a net gain of forty-two over the preceding year. The total of the funds raised during the year was $11,723.85, of which $4,086.78 was for missions. Among the speakers on this occasion was Mrs. Frances E. R. Linfield, whose subject was "Retrospect and Prospect." The popular pastor of this growing church is Rev. Owen T. Day, an alumnus of Linfield College and of the Newton Theological Institute.

The First church of Eugene, Ore., has received 104 new members during the first six months of the pastorate of Dr. Charles L. Trawin. The church has also determined to build a thoroughly equipped plant on the west unoccupied quarter of a block on Eugene's main east and west business street.

The First church of Boise, Ida., Rev. A. F. Colver, pastor, is rejoicing over the honors which have come to one of their students in Linfield college. Miss Sumie Yamamoto, a talented and popular Japanese girl, has been elected president of the Older Girls' Conference of 400 girls recently held at Eugene, Ore., and also vice-president of the International Young People's Council held in Missouri. Next July Miss Sumie will represent Oregon at the interstate conference to be held at Geneva Glen, Colo.

Dr. Ambrose M. Bailey on April 4 began the seventh year of his work with the First church of Seattle, Wash. More than 1250 members were received during the first six years of this pastorate. The membership is now over 1600. The attendance at Sunday school has been increased from 172 to over 500 and a building debt of approximately $40,000 has been fully paid.

This splendid church was organized Dec. 21, 1869, and has had only one pastor whose term of service has exceeded in length that of the present pastor. Rev. J. A. Firth remained for eight years from 1875 to 1883; Rev. L. S. Bowerman, for six years from 1896 to 1902, and Carter Helm Jones for five years from 1913 to 1918. Two others had four years each, Rev. G. J. Burchett (once president of Linfield College) from 1889 to 1893, and Dr. B. L. Whitman (formerly president of Colby college and of Columbian university, Washington, D. C.) from 1908 to 1911. "Conditions are today the most promising in the history of this church," is the statement of one who ought to know whereof he speaks.

In Closing.

He was a typical "weary Willie." He had spent no time or effort on his personal appearance for "goodness knows" how long! He was waiting for the next freight train. An inquiry as to the reason for his mode of living brought the very elucidating reply "Oh, I alus wanta be where I aint." If this does not indicate a disease, it certainly reveals a most unfortunate state of mind which is as unworthy of a preacher as it is of a tramp or a hobo. It may get him somewhere geographically speaking but certainly nowhere in any other respect. All of which recalls the words of Abraham Lincoln: "If you intend to work there is no better place than right where you are. If you do not intend to work, you cannot get along anywhere. Squirming and crawling about from place to place can do no good."

The Church of the Beautiful Courtesy

THE other day I saw the picture of one of our meeting-houses with its identifying name underneath. I thought, "That name tells nothing of its heart. That church should be called 'the church of the beautiful courtesy.'"

Last summer I was one of the supplies there, and the courtesies shown me lie back of the new name. What the people did for me they do for all visiting preachers. From the day I was asked to come for a Sunday until I left the city after preaching I was treated with rare kindness. The courtly pastor scarcely had my acceptance than I had a letter bringing the official word of the church, which was signed by the secretary, and said that my hotel reservation was made (remember this was months in advance of my coming), and that one of the church officers, giving his name, would be my host during the visit. Later, a month before I was due to preach there, I had a letter from the secretary asking what my topics to preach on might be, and asking me to telephone my host on my arrival, adding again his name and telephone number. I reached the city, went to the hotel, registered, and the signing of my name was the signal for the clerk to say, "Your room is reserved, and I am asked to say 'welcome' to you in behalf of the church." The room was such as you might expect. I went to the telephone to let my host know I was in town, when the bell rang. My host was on the wire. He wanted to know if I was well taken care of, was there anything more I would like, was there anywhere he could take me that evening. I was well taken care of, there was nothing more he could do, there was no place I wished to go. Then he said he would call for me in the morning and stated the time of service. Sunday found the gentleman asking for me at the time appointed. He took me to the church in time to meet the folk, introduced me to many of them, to the church organist, who wished to make his program fit mine, if necessary, and to another gentleman who was to sit on the platform with me. This man assured me that he was not to preside, was not to read the scripture, or to pray, but that, if I would kindly give him a few minutes before the sermon, he would say something to the congregation.

His time came, and I sat wondering what he had to say on that hot summer day. He soon said it; it was an introduction of the visitor, it was a high estimate of things which folk say I have done, and a very gracious welcome. It was a very pretty proceeding. Of course, I was flummoxed, but I felt every word was sincere, and that overpraise was not flattery. But he said more; he said, "At the close of the service we (he and I) will be down stairs in the lecture room, and all those who would like to voice their own welcome may come down to meet our visitor." I preached. The people, about 150 of them, came downstairs and said their welcome. I was taken home to the hotel. The same procedure, all but the meeting with the organist, and the introduction from the platform, was the order in the evening. Again the automobile to the hotel, the early "good night," of the director of education of the church and the wave of the hand closed a day I will long cherish in memory.

The stipend was handsome, the hotel as extra, the courtesies were other plusses." I write simply that others may know how one church treated its visiting preachers, because I think that other churches would do like things, if they remembered them, and because the vacation season is at hand.

The Calvary church, Washington, D. C., is the "church of the beautiful courtesy," and I am just one of the recipients of her courtesy, who thus says thank you" to her for that courtesy.

The Chicago Letter

Chicago Baptist Week

BAPTIST associations nowadays remind one of the reported conversation: "Old Mack ain't what he used to be." "No," goes the reply, "and I guess he never was!" I do not know whether Baptist associations ever were what we are told they were in the good old days, but, at any rate, in recent years most of them have been rather flat. That certainly has been the case in Chicago. The reason is, perhaps, that other organizations have had functions delegated to them which formerly were performed by the association. The Executive Council with its several committees, the Permanent Council of the association, the Ministers' Conference, the Women's Mission Union and the city B. Y. P. U. now attend to interests which formerly were in some manner directly related to the association. This year's association meeting, however, held from Sunday to Wednesday, May 9-13, expressed a real renaissance of life under a plan worked out by the program committee in which Rev. Charles A. Brooks was chairman. The ninety-first anniversary of the association was held with the Baptist Ministers' Conference, the Women's Mission Union, the Chicago B. Y. P. U.

and the Baptist Executive Council co-operating. The general theme was "Baptist Contributions to the Present Day." The program was too long to permit any detailed statement. The general plan, however, provided for an exchange of pulpits on Sunday among Baptist pastors in the entire association and each pastor preached on some phase of the general theme. On Monday the Ministers' Conference was addressed by Rev. J. S. Kirtley at Immanuel church, on "The Baptist Objective." On Monday evening three sectional meetings were held for the south, north and west sides of the city, at which dinner was served and at which the main address dealt with Baptist responsibilities in that section of the city. On Tuesday morning and afternoon the Chicago Baptist Women's Missionary Exhibit at Washington Convention

By H. S. MEYERS

THE missionary exhibit at the Washington Convention will be largely new material and much of the old material has been revised and changed for this year's program. There are more than fifty different sections in it explaining and illustrating all of the phases of Baptist mission work, including what we ordinarily speak of as foreign missions, home missions, state missions, city missions, the M. & M. board, the Board of Education, Publication Society, etc. There will be special exhibits for the Watchman-Examiner, THE BAPTIST, and Missions.

Among the interesting sections that delegates will want to look up will be the American Indian, under the direction of Dr. Bruce Kinney and Rev. W. A. Petzoldt of the Crow reservation. A fine display of laces has just come from Bengal-Orissa as a product of the Industrial school. A missionary coming from the Philippines, Rev. A. B. Thornton, is bringing some fresh curios from the mission there.

A special section is set aside for the models of the new buildings which are to be built with the golden anniversary funds. There will be someone on duty constantly at the stereopticon table to give information concerning exhibits, moving pictures and stereopticon lectures.

Extra space this year has been allotted for the literature counters of the Publication society, Department of Missionary Education, and the Literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation.

A number of missionaries who are to be at the convention will have special hours in the exhibit. Over two hundred Washington people are now being trained as stewards to work in the sections of the exhibit and many of them will be dressed in costume and will assist in the giving of demonstrations during the intermissions of the convention session.

The double quartet from Storer college which is to sing in the convention has also promised to sing occasionally in the exhibit.

Union held its meeting in the Englewood church with a strong program, and in the evening the Young People's Union held its session in the same church. The Wednesday meetings, which constituted the regular Chicago association session also were held in the Englewood church, at which time all the reports of officers and commissions were presented. The outstanding feature of the program was an interpretative address on "The Baptist Outlook" by Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, of the Hyde Park church. The Executive Council session in the evening presented an excellent survey of the vast enterprise of Baptists in Chicago. A pageant entitled "Father Executive Council Dearborn" was an interesting feature. The association registered an attendance of about 900 delegates and visitors—more than three times as many, I think the moderator said, as at last year's session. It looks like a real rejuvenation; the credit is largely due to the able and resourceful chairman of the program committee, Rev. Charles A. Brooks, and to the energetic and popular moderator, Mr. W. R. Hibbs. The newly elected moderator, Rev. Mahlon C. Tunison of Elgin, will have to travel to maintain the pace that has been set.

Baptist Progress in Chicago

The May issue of the Chicago Baptist News and the superintendent's report to the Baptist Executive Council's session of the association, supplement each other in giving an excellent view of Baptist progress in Chicago in recent years. The Chicago Baptist News contains pictures of thirteen churches, some of them splendid properties of a value of more than $100,000, which have been erected or purchased with the aid of the Baptist Executive Council during the past six years. Among them are large edifices in prosperous suburbs, foreign-speaking and negro churches. To the statesmanlike leadership of Dr. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council during this period, the denomination is largely indebted for this era of progress. And yet one reads with a certain sinking of heart such a statement as the following in the superintendent's report: "However, in spite of the heroic efforts on the part of all the Protestant bodies, one who studies our city is appalled by the inadequacy of every Christian effort when compared with the stupendous annual growth of Chicago."

Crime Again

One's heart sinks still more when he considers not only the failure of the churches to keep pace with the city's growth, but the failure of the churches to grapple effectively with the terrific social problems of the city. Just now it is crime that has the spotlight. One Sunday night, Apr. 27, Assistant State's Attorney William H. McSwiggin, known as "the hanging prosecutor" on account of his successful conduct of murder trials, was shot to death in front of a saloon just west of the city limits. With him perished two well-known gangsters, with whom he had gone out for the evening. The triple murder was committed with a sub-machine gun from a curtained automobile. This is something new in gang-murder technique. As the chief of police said, "The gangs that deal in booze have become increasingly dangerous. First it was blackjacks, then revolvers, then shot-guns. Now it is machine guns." The whole thing is mystifying, but as a result of the probe which is going pretty deep this time, it has become perfectly clear that a mysterious connection exists between certain powerful political groups and the worst criminal elements. The gang-leaders are political henchmen. One views this as but a symbol of many baffling problems with which the urban church is faced, and asks, Can the church meet the problem of the city? or, in the words of the St. Louis Church Survey, "How shall the church learn to serve and to master it at once?" Certainly the church must learn to do something more than to build prosperous religious institutions in the suburbs. It must set in motion redemptive efforts on a larger scale than it has so far even conceived. It must assume social responsibilities and achieve social potency beyond anything that has entered its ken to date, or the dream of a "city of God" is less than an idle phantasy. How far the church is from assuming such responsibility is indicated, for one thing, by the dodging of responsibility at the ballot box, as any analysis of a primary vote will show. Much of this was brought to our attention and laid on the conscience of our people during the association. And while the church is facing such enormous tasks one brother introduced a resolution at the association asking that a committee be appointed to investigate the polity of Baptist churches in Chicago and to take steps to whip them into line with the particular practice of which he approves. It recalls to my mind the saying of the Master about tithing mint and anise while the weightier matters of the law, justice and mercy, were neglected.

Northern Baptist Seminary Commencement

The Northern Baptist Theological seminary graduates this year a class of forty-four, the largest in its history. The commencement exercises covered the week of Sunday, May 16, to Friday, May 21, with Rev. Julius Andrew Jensen, dean of the Danish department, as preacher of the baccalaureate sermon; Rev. William Kuhn, general secretary of the Conference of German Baptist churches, as preacher of the annual missionary sermon; and Pres. H. C. Wayman, of William Jewell college, as speaker at the theological conference. The addresses at the graduation exercises on Friday were given by President G. W. Taft and members of the senior class. I had the pleasure of hearing President Wayman give the address at the theological conference on Monday afternoon on which occasion the Chicago Baptist ministers with their wives were the guests of the seminary. President Wayman brought a most timely and effective message on "The Fellowship of Learning and Religion." If the spirit of President Wayman's address could become dominant among Baptists it would mark the end of that narrow dogmatism out of which arises so much bitterness and conflict.

Religious Education

Dr. Albert W. Beaven of the Lake Avenue church, Rochester, N. Y., was the principal speaker at the second annual convention institute of the Chicago Council of Religious Education held in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, the La Salle hotel and Immanuel church, on Monday, Apr. 26. Doctor Beaven gave three addresses, the chief address being on "The Challenge of Childhood and Youth" at the union ministers' meeting. It was a tremendous appeal to ministers to remember that their work would be judged not by the budgets raised or the buildings erected but by their success in sending out into the life of the world boys and girls and men and women of Christlike character. Among the other speakers were Supt. William McAndrew of the Chicago public schools, Supt. N. J. Hamilton of the Oak Park public schools, Prof. John E. Stout of Northwestern university and Dr. P. R. Hayward of the International Council of Religious Education. Religious education has a large place in the work of the Baptist Executive Council; Rev. Willard R. Jewell, director of religious education, is doing effective work in this field. Unfortunately the religious education session of the association was practically crowded out by the discussion of the resolution referred to in the preceding paragraph—an unwarranted shift in emphasis which no one with a real sense of values could justify. Prospects for daily vacation Bible schools in Chicago are very bright this year. In this important development Chicago leads the world and the Baptists lead Chicago!

The Young People

The announcements which are coming to hand with regard to the next convention of the B. Y. P. U. of A. look good. The plans which are being made for a real grappling with problems of industry, race and international relationships indicate a new awareness on the part of our young people's union to the areas of life in which Christianity must find expression if it is to redeem the world. I notice that my old college friend, Bert Bingham, of First church, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, is down for one of the main addresses on "The Conquest for the Peace of the World." The four simultaneous three-hour forums on the world problems of peace, industry, race and law observance, is a splendid feature entirely new in B. Y. P. U. conventions. The theme of the convention, "Adventure," is one that ought to find a ready response in the hearts of our Baptist young people today.

Summer at the Divinity School

The summer quarter at the divinity school of the University of Chicago is always one that attracts a large number of the best minds in many denominations. During that quarter one who registers will meet as fellow students some of the outstanding ministers, seminary and college professors, and other church leaders in the country. This summer quarter promises to be unusually attractive. In addition to the regular faculty the school announces that the following professors will offer courses: Archibald Main, University of Glasgow, Scotland; William C. Graham, Wesleyan Theological college, Montreal, Canada; Theophile J. Meek, University of Toronto; Alfred Morris Perry, Bangor Theological seminary, Bangor, Me.; Daniel Evans, Harvard university; John T. McNeill, Knox college, Toronto; Joseph Cullen Ayer, Protestant Episcopal Divinity school, Philadelphia; Charles Lyttle, Meadville Theological school; Franklin Chester Southworth, Meadville Theological school; Erwin L. Shaver, Congregational Educational society; F. Ernest Johnson, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Edgar George Frazier, Indiana university. The affiliation of the Chicago Theological seminary with the Divinity school greatly increases the service which the school can render. Courses offered by the Chicago Theological seminary professors are all open to Divinity school students. The great gift of at least two million dollars left to the seminary by the late Mr. Victor F. Lawson has made possible an extraordinary development. The physical equipment of the seminary is to be greatly increased and five additions have already been made to the faculty. Rev. Carl S. Patton, pastor of First Congregational church, Los Angeles, has been elected professor of preaching and church work; Rev. Fred Eastman, a frequent contributor to leading magazines, has been elected professor of religious literature and drama; Rev. A. C. McGiffert, Jr., is to become associate professor of Christian theology; Rev. Von Ogden Vogt is to be lecturer in art and religion; and Mr. Wilhelm Pauck, a graduate of the University of Berlin and the University of Gottingen has been appointed instructor in church history.

Our Southern Neighbors

At Redlands, Calif., May 13-16, a notable assembly of great significance for the kingdom of God was held. The annual Interdenominational Mexican Convention of Southern California brought together one thousand Christian workers to consider the evangelization of the Spanish-speaking people in Mexico and our own great Southwest. The leading address of the convention was given by Rev. Edwin R. Brown of Los Angeles, superintendent of Spanish-speaking missions for the Home Mission Society. The development of our Mexican missions in Southern California, both in evangelism and in theological education, is one of the finest features of Baptist work on the Pacific coast.

The Pomona Convention

The First church of Pomona entertained the Southern California Baptist Convention May 12-14. The enrolled attendance was 1800, and in interest and spirit the meeting was one of the best in the history of the state. The veteran executive secretary, Dr. W. F. Harper, gave a report showing that 101 of the 115 churches of the convention had raised their budget for the year, and that the total receipts were greater than last year. Pastor Otto S. Russell of Santa Ana was elected president of the convention, and Pastor J. A. V. Pieters of Los Angeles was reelected clerk. A feature of the convention was the missionary session, when seventy-five missionaries were on the platform together. Of special interest in the group was the widow of the late pastor of the Japanese Baptist church at Terminal island, Los Angeles. This body is the largest Japanese church in America, and has a Sunday school with 400 in attendance. The writer recalls a day last summer when he strolled over Terminal island, with its fish harbor teeming with schooners and small boats, with its immense canneries, and its rows on rows of cottages inhabited by Japanese laborers and fishermen. At a doorstep one of these little homes were gathered a group of bright-eyed Japanese children, singing lustily in a foreign tongue a song which revealed them as Sunday-school children: "Jesus loves me, this I know, for the Bible tells me so." Inquiry yielded the fact that they belonged to the Baptist Sunday school on the island. In a corner grocery operated by Japanese, talk was made while a purchase was under way, and the customer learned that three brothers who owned the store were all members of the Baptist church. They spoke with enthusiasm of their noble pastor and of his work. Terminal island is luminous with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. The beloved pastor died recently; but his widow, under appointment from the same Mission Society, continues his work. Mrs. Ito has a peculiar claim on the prayers and offerings of American Baptists. Dr. J. B. Fox, 313 W. Third Street, Los Angeles, secretary of city missions, will be glad to give information concerning this fruitful and important mission to the Japanese on Terminal island.

A Jubilee Advance

The First church of Los Angeles touched an ambitious program two years ago, involving the acquisition of a new edifice property to cost nearly one million dollars. Following the sale of the old Flower street building a sort of tabernacle in the wilderness was erected on Sixth street near Union, which has served admirably for a temporary workshop pending the development of plans for the permanent home. Under the wise and constructive leadership of Dr. James A. Francis a spacious church has been secured at Westmoreland and Eighth streets, in the growing Shire district, and on Sunday, May 2, the formal ceremony of breaking ground was held. Working drawings are ready and it is expected that the new edifice will be completed within a year, at a cost of $650,000. The new First church building will be one of the most beautiful and well-equipped in the West, and its occupancy will mark the beginning of a new era in the life of this historic church, which began its career as a witnessing people of Christ in 1874.

Washington without Its Monument

After you have been to Washington it will be difficult to imagine that lovely capital city without the towering monument which dominates and inspires it. That's the way we Los Angeles Baptists feel about the loss of our noble ministerial monument. For sixteen years James Whitcomb Brouger has dominated and inspired the city, and his gracious and loving influence has been felt in every Baptist church of Southern California and in practically every social and fraternal group in Los Angeles. To become accustomed to Los Angeles without Doctor Brouger and Temple church without its famous pastor, is not an easy process of mental and spiritual readjustment. The news of his instant success and of hundreds turned away at the services at the First church, Oakland, is a poor sort of consolation for our loss. One solace remains: it is of record in the daily newspapers that Doctor Brouger will return to Los Angeles to settle down permanently after he has fulfilled his ministry at Oakland and won his release from his Lord to return to the land of his heart's desire. Meantime we miss our "monument" greatly.

Temple Church Carries On

Having given up its pastor for six months for the sake of the denomination, Temple church, Los Angeles, proceeded to raise in full its missionary budget in his absence, its total offerings for all purposes for benevolence for the year being more than $68,000. The report to the annual meeting, held May 19, shows a total for the year for current expense of $57,241. The pulpit committee has been working quietly since January to discover the man indicated as God's choice to succeed Doctor Brouger as pastor. Contrary to widespread newspaper reports, Temple church has thus far extended a call to no one, nor has the pulpit committee yet made any recommendation to the church. While the search proceeds, Temple church is enjoying the ministry of able and versatile men in its pulpit from Sunday to Sunday. During May Dr. Herbert Spencer Johnson of Boston was the preacher for one Sunday, and Rev. George W. Phillips of Tenth Avenue church, Oakland, exercised an inspiring and fruitful ministry for the remainder of the month. During part of July Doctor Brouger's loved and honored son, Rev. Russell Morse Brouger of Paterson, N. J., will supply the pulpit made famous by his distinguished father. On July 4, when Temple church will celebrate with elaborate services the Sesqui-centennial of the Declaration of Independence, the preacher will be Dr. Lincoln McConnell of Oklahoma City, Okla.

Flaming Youth

The young people of Southern California are aflame with enthusiasm and eager expectancy concerning the International Baptist Young People's Convention to be held in Los Angeles, July 7-11. The magnificent new First M.E. church edifice, costing more than one million dollars and seating 3500 people, will be used during the week; and on Sunday the Shrine auditorium, just completed, will be the meeting place. Surely few places in all this glorious America can offer such a rich variety of attractions for a helpful vacation as Southern California, with its witchery of sea and desert and mountain, its charm of climate, its complexity of life, its social, industrial, racial—not to mention Hollywood with its stars and San Diego with its $25,000,000 naval base. If you do not know the ocean, be sure to include in your program a steamer trip to San Diego and return ($6) or to San Francisco en route. Los Angeles Baptist young people propose to make July, 1926, memorable.

The Southern Baptist Convention

An epoch making session

BY ERNEST O. SELLERS

"I AM happy to believe that this convention accepts Genesis as teaching that man was the special creation of God, and rejects every theory, evolution or otherwise, which teaches that man originated, or came by way of, a lower animal ancestry." With these words Dr. George W. McDaniels of Richmond, Va., closed his remarks in acknowledging his third annual election as president of the Southern Baptist Convention. Dr. M. E. Dodd of Shreveport sprang to his feet and moved that they be approved as expressing the sentiment of southern Baptists and that the convention at once "proceed to kingdom matters and give no further time to theological disputations or statements of belief." Thus, and with cheers and loud amens, opened the eighty-first session of the Southern Baptist Convention in Houston, Tex., May 12-16.

Twice later, however, the evolution question bobbed up. Once when an attempt was made to read a reputed memorial from a Kentucky association assailing Dr. E. Y. Mullins and others of the seminary at Louisville as being evolutionists. The reading was objected to and by an overwhelming majority not accepted. Doctor Mullins, who came to the platform soon after to make his annual report for the seminary, was received with loud applause.

The other reference to this question was the adoption of a resolution, with no debate or division (one single objecting voice was heard), requesting all boards, institutions and representatives whatsoever of the convention, to accept and subscribe to the McDaniel statement as adopted by the convention. The Fort Worth seminary trustees had taken the lead by such an action at a special session the second day of the convention.

Reports to the convention showed about the same amount of funds were collected during the past year as usual but by far a greater per cent was expended locally with the result that there was a slight increase of debts upon the boards. The goal set for all purposes, state and southwide, for the next year is $9,000,000.

One of the most marked advances made by southern Baptists is in the development of hospital work. There are now owned and operated by southern Baptists twenty-six hospitals, valued at $12,950,000, having 3495 beds, treating 111,373 patients and doing more than $3,000,000 of business a year.

The Sunday-school board, including southern Baptist publication interests, has assets of more than $2,000,000, enrolled nearly 3,000,000 in the Sunday schools and 531,415 in the B. Y. P. U. There are now in the south 254 Baptist Sunday schools each of which enrolls more than 900 pupils.

The home board demonstration of its variegated labors was the best and most impressive ever brought to the attention of the workers—Jews, Mexicans, Chinese (in America), Indians, sailors, city missions, mountain schools, Cubans, negroes and evangelists.

The foreign board reported great advances in spite of political changes and unsettled conditions abroad and the shortage of funds at home. The "love offering" of last Christmas to apply upon the debt amounted to more than $700,000 but it was the opinion of the convention that it is best not to have another such campaign at least for the time being. The foreign mission hour was perhaps the most deeply spiritual one of the convention.

One of the great addresses delivered was that by Dr. George W. Truett of Dallas upon education. "Christian leaders," he said, "as a rule, do not come from the state schools. The new social order is increasingly Christian and depends more and more upon the educational efforts of the churches. The trustees and faculties of our southern schools can be trusted. These institutions have not been built up upon doubt and suspicion. Much more might and ought to be said but you may read what you will between the lines."

This and similar statements and the action of the convention already referred to, effectively disposed of certain objectors who were holding forth in a circus tent in Houston at this time.

The address of Dr. E. E. Fuller, the new superintendent of evangelism under the home board, was one of the best of its kind the convention ever heard. It sent all away feeling that they ought to repent and "do the work of an evangelist."

Prolonged cheering greeted the statement of Dr. A. J. Barton of Missouri when presenting the social service report, who said, "if ever the democratic party should be so foolish as to put up a wet governor from New Jersey or New York and the Republicans a good clean, law-enforcing dry from most any state, I stand ready to vote for a republican president of the United States."

It was worth while to behold the Southern Baptist Convention in action—the way the president maintained order and yet granted liberty, the introduction of sacred song into the business of the convention, the high character of the leaders and the spiritual tone and, with all, the unified purpose.

Doctor McDaniels in adjourning the convention said: "Some of us came to Houston with apprehension and doubt. We are now leaving with thanksgiving and rejoicing. God, not man, prompted my remarks and our action the opening day and we have moved forward preparing the way for what I verily believe will be the greatest and most favorable crop, this next year, ever gathered by southern Baptists." Without exception, so far as leaders could be interviewed, all agree that with the possible exception of the launching of the seventy-five million campaign in 1919, this has been the most notable convention held perhaps in a generation. Its unity and determination and its devotion to its leaders was most marked.

The attendance of messengers was over 4000 with nearly as many visitors. Considering that Houston is so far west of the great Baptist population east of the Mississippi river this is remarkable. Eleven years ago when the convention met in Houston there were but 1408 registered messengers showing a growth of 350 per cent of interest in and support of the work and program of the convention.

Houston, "where eighteen railroads meet the sea" is an example of modern city growth in America; twenty and even thirty-story buildings and all of the push of the most aggressive western city; having no harbor the city proceeded to dig one and now is rapidly taking the shipping away from Galveston. Descriptive adjectives are soon exhausted by Houston visitors, and the convention seemed to imbibe some of the spirit of the city. Never were convention arrangements better. Delegates were enthusiastic over their treatment by Houstonians.

Central District Women Meet

BY MARGARET B. OLMSTED

THE thirteenth annual meeting of Central district of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society and Woman's Home Mission Society was held Apr. 28-29 in the Central church of Quincy, Ill. The cordial hospitality and cooperation of members of the local church added much to the occasion.

The sessions were inspiring; the devotional services, especially, were a great spiritual uplift. The president, Mrs. George W. Taft of Chicago, in her opening address, spoke of the unsettled conditions in China and asked that missionaries there be remembered in prayer. She quoted from Dr. A. B. Gray of Burma, who, in speaking of the missionary clinic, added "Many more get medicine for their souls than for their physical ills". This feeling of need for soul help, she explained, is expressed in the foreword to the program "We would see Jesus". Incorporated in the morning service was a memorial for Mrs. J. W. Mauck of Hillsdale, Mich., the first president of Central district, who passed away in Egypt. A tribute, telling of her activities in Christian service and of her unselfish life, was prepared by her husband, Doctor Mauck, and read by Mrs. W. H. Dorrance of Detroit.

Mrs. Washington Laycock of Chicago with the help of the state secretaries presented the subject of the Golden anniversary. Mrs. F. S. Osgood, home mission vice-president, and Mrs. C. W. Peterson, foreign mission vice-president, called attention to our missionaries on home and foreign fields. Among the workers who brought messages were Miss Ethel Masales, Impur, Assam; Mrs. C. L. Conrad, Bassein, Burma; Miss Frieda Wiebe, Katherine House, East Chicago; Miss May Morey, Aiken Institute, Chicago. Addresses were given by Mrs. Smith Thomas Ford of Wheaton, Ill., and Mrs. Clayton D. Eulette of Chicago.

Two unusual features were introduced. The first was a playlet, "Enlightenment," written by Mrs. Taft and presented by the World Wide Guild girls of Central church, Quincy. The second was a pageant given by the children of Central church, directed and assisted by Mrs. E. S. Osgood, Children's World Crusade chairman for the Central district. Song services were led by Mrs. Milton Taylor assisted by Mrs. Chas. Blackwood, pianist. Reports of the work in the various departments were given by the secretaries and directors. Mrs. Charles H. Parkes of Chicago, administrative vice-president, told of relations with the national societies. She called attention to the necessity of standing back of the Eighteenth amendment and read a report of resolutions adopted by the national W. A. B. F. M. and N. A. B. H. M. societies relative to law enforcement. She mentioned an effort which is being made to have Mrs. Montgomery granted the award of $5000 given by the Pictorial Review to an outstanding woman. At Mrs. Parkes' suggestion, application blanks for this award were circulated and signed.

After the election Mrs. Taft introduced Mrs. Washington Laycock of Chicago, the new president of Central district, who thanked the members of the district for the honor conferred on her and for this expression of confidence and assured them that it was her earnest desire to serve the organization faithfully.

Resolutions were adopted expressing appreciation to the women of Central church, to the pastor, the musicians, the members of local committees and all who have assisted in any way; thanks to Dr. Charles H. Parkes for his professional service given to our missionaries in honor of the retiring president; and in favor of all law enforcement and especially the enforcement of the Eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The registration committee reported an attendance of 277.

The treasurer, Mrs. E. L. Robinson of Chicago, reported the financial condition receipts for year, $837.64; disbursements, $348.73, leaving a balance of $488.91.

On Wednesday evening a dinner was served, followed by a program on Christian Americanization. Mrs. F. S. Osgood acted as toastmistress, introducing

Ms. Charles H. Parkes, who related an incident which had come to her notice in Chicago showing the need of this work; Mrs. C. W. Peterson, who explained "where our field is"—that it is, in reality everywhere beginning at our very doors and extending to the uttermost parts of the world; Mrs. L. L. Woodworth and Mrs. Helen Long who gave a reading lesson, portraying the method employed by a "friendly visitor" and the relationship brought about between the American woman and her foreign neighbor; Mrs. Clayton D. Eulette who spoke of the "Disregard of Law" and made an appeal for the enforcement of the Eighteenth amendment; Mrs. W. H. Dorrance, who told of "The Power that is Ours"; and Mrs. R. V. Meigs, who offered the closing prayer.

Thursday evening the World Wide Guild banquet was held. Cheers and songs led by Miss Gene Welsh enlivened the program and Miss Minnie Miller of Macomb, Ill., proved herself an able toastmistress. Miss Nell Jackman of Quincy told of "A Girl's Look into the Future". Final messages were given by Miss Masales and Miss Wiebe and a talk "Kaleidoscope or Telescope" by Mrs. Clayton D. Eulette. A devotional service conducted by Mrs. Smith Thomas Ford closed the convention. The members left with the feeling that surely they had communed with Jesus and had been inspired with new determination to make the district motto the aim of their individual lives: "Not to be ministered unto but to minister".

FIRST CHURCH, Batavia, N. Y., Rev. G. K. Warren, minister, received forty-one new members during April, twenty-four being baptized.

REV. CHAS. BEBB, 1474 Penn avenue, Columbus, Ohio, was pastor of the Gibbard church of that city for five years. After some months of recreation made necessary on account of illness, Mr. Bebb is ready for another pastorate.

REV. A. F. MALMBORG has been with the church at Montevideo, Minn., for a little over a year. Previous to his coming there had been no pastor for four years. Forty-three new members were added, twenty-two by baptism.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Northampton, Mass., has just held a three days' reunion celebrating the 100th anniversary of the organizing of the body. All living ex-pastors were present. Rev. Edward A. Estaver is the present minister.

REV. G. C. WALTERS of Parsons, Pa., gave the hand of fellowship to five new members on April 25.

FRANCES HARING of Japan and Eugene Giedt of China, children of missionaries, found themselves having the same birthday anniversary in the mid-Pacific in March. Each was six years old. The chief steward arranged an elaborate birthday celebration.

THE GRAND RIVER AVENUE CHURCH of Detroit Mich., Rev. E. J. Parsons, minister, has received sixty-nine new members the past year. Initial steps have been taken to erect a new edifice.

A memorial organ costing $20,000 will be added. $5000 has been given for an echo organ. A new educational plant to cost $100,000 will be erected, one half of its cost being borne by Mr. Chas. King and sons. The completed plant will be valued at $300,000.

REV. HARVEY JAMES LOCKE was ordained in the Calvary church, Rochester, N. Y., on April 28. The sermon was given by Rev. Geo. Middleton, the prayer by Prof. F. O. Erb, and other parts by Dr. A. E. Isaacs and Dr. C. A. Barbour.

REV. ALVIN FREDERICK CLAUSE was ordained in the Walker, N. Y., church on May 9. The sermon was delivered by Prof. H. B. Robbins, the prayer by Rev. Hale Cole, and other parts by Rev. Roland Hudson and Prof. Geo. Cross of the Rochester seminary.

REV. T. B. MARSH of Saulte Sainte Marie, Mich., has resigned and will return to England next August.

REV. ELMER E. DRESSER died in Philadelphia, Pa., Mar. 31. Pastor Dresser had spent twenty-nine years in four pastorates in Wisconsin. Later he served at Philadelphia, N. Y., Lowville, N. Y., West Pittston and Germantown, Pa. He was a graduate of Kalamazoo college and the Morgan Park seminary.

REV. M. W. COATES of Roseville, Cal., has received twenty-six new members the past six months, eleven being by baptism.

REV. HECTOR C. LELAND is stated supply at Everett, Wash. He will complete his work soon and be ready for other engagements. His address is 1242 Broadway, Hannibal, Mo. The Everett church has purchased a parsonage costing $7000.

REV. A. W. CLARK, the first pastor of the Calvary church, Omaha, Neb., attended the annual meeting of the church on May 4.

DR. C. D. GRAY of Bates college began his seventh year as president on May 1. During his administration the productive funds have increased 50 per cent, the annual income has doubled and the budget has balanced annually. A gift of several hundred thousand dollars provided a plant for physical education second to none. Doctor Gray with his wife and two younger children will spend the summer in Europe.

REV. L. J. PACK, pastor of two churches at Greensboro, Pa., died on Mar. 23. His churches had more than doubled in membership in three years.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Vancouver, B. C., gave a reception to Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Ross on their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary and presented them with beautiful gifts of silver service articles. Dr. Lee R. Scarborough will conduct meetings here from June 6-20.

BAPTIST OLD PEOPLE'S HOME

Maywood, Ill. Rev. L. T. Foreman, Ex. Sec.

Nearly a score of years of blessed service. Fifteen thousand days of kindly ministry to worthy aged people every year. Seventy-five requests yearly for rooms. Requires new building for 150 people at once. Gifts gladly welcomed for our $250,000 goal.

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, 2320 S. Michigan avenue, Chicago.

"Good evening, friends. Thank you for the kind words you are continually sending to this office. Every week we are refreshed by such greetings as these:

"'Dear BAPTIST: Shoot me fifty subscription cards to be used next Sunday. Hurry them. Hurry and hooray for THE BAPTIST.'—Pastor D. I. Coon, Kearney, Neb.

"'We are hoping to increase the number of readers of the splendid paper you are giving us. We are at work to that end at this time.'—Pastor George F. Lowe, Pueblo, Colo.

"'We have appointed a special committee to push the sale of THE BAPTIST. Mr. George Gleiss, son of Superintendent Gleiss, will have the responsibility for THE BAPTIST, Missions and the Michigan Baptist.'—Pastor Robert White, Detroit, Mich.

"'A six-month trial subscription for THE BAPTIST is offered for $1. The paper is a weekly containing helpful articles and news of the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention.'—Bulletin of the First Church, Norwich, Conn., Rev. Edward C. Dunbar, minister.

"'THE BAPTIST, the official journal of the Northern Baptist Convention, offers the special rate of six months' subscription for $1. To be informed of the great work of our denomination every member of this church ought to be a subscriber to THE BAPTIST. Particular interest centers in the convention to be held in Washington in May. Full reports of this as well as many other interesting and helpful things may be expected in the coming numbers. You may hand your dollar to our agent.'—Bulletin of the North church of Camden, N. J., Rev. James Dalton Morrison, minister.

"'Here are three subscriptions that came in yesterday. You are giving us a great paper these days. Keep it up and more strength to your elbow. Just keep sweet, pour on the oil and you will come through with flying colors. Remittance by check herewith. Have them begin with current issue. Thank you a million times.'—Pastor Ernest H. Shanks, Salem, Ore.

"'I have long been a reader of THE BAPTIST and all its progenitors. Early in 1854 my father moved from Fulton, Oswego county, N. Y., to Delavan, Wis. Either that or the next year he subscribed for the new Christian just starting in Chicago. From that time on I have had access to it every week until now. Enclosed is my check to pay for another year in advance. The Lord has been very good to us in giving long-continued time for service among appreciative friends, the most of whom are waiting to welcome us "over there." With best wishes for THE Baptist.'—D. DeWolfe, Newark, N. J.

"NOTICE: Doctor DeWolfe now takes first place on the Honor Roll of the denominational paper. He has been a reader of the papers issued from this office for SEVENTY-TWO YEARS consecutively without a break. His residence is 66 Ingraham place. Hearty congratulations to you, old friend of the long trail.

"'After reading WCOY in THE BAPTIST, I am constrained to donate at least one year's subscription for the benefit of some worthy prisoner. In doing so I enclose an acrostic on THE BAPTIST:

T—THE BAPTISTS to prisons go,
H—Helping men in deepest woe;
E—Even though in prison bound,

B—BAPTIST there a work has found.
A—All men time and chance have got
P—Prisons have proved for some their lot;
T—To help them redeem what's lost,
I—I send one year's subscription cost;
S—Some poor man perchance may see,
T—Trusting in Jesus makes us free.

—W. J. Howard, Hauser, Oregon.

"The office boy will now conclude the program with a bit of a verse from Captain Jack Crawford, entitled "The Boomerang:"

"When a bit of sunshine hits ye, after passing of a cloud,
When a fit of laughter gits ye, and ye'r spine is feelin' proud;
Don't fergit to up and fling it, at a soul that's feelin' blue,
For the minit that ye sling it, it's a boomerang to you."

"WCOY now signs off. Get the boomerang habit. Goodnight."

PASTOR E. V. GOAD and wife were given a reception on May 4 by the church at Berwick, Ill. The church will conduct a daily vacation school.

REV. WALTER FOWLER resigns at Sparks, Nev., after two years and returns to a former church at Gonzales, Cal.

REV. VINCENT WIDNEY has accepted a call to the church at Loyalton, Cal., and is on the field.

REV. CARL FISHER of Lusk, Wyo., has been appointed colporteur for the Sierra-Nevada convention.

REV. H. G. GWINN has closed his work at Olathe, Colo., and will locate in California.

REV. CARL A. NISSEN was ordained at Barrington, Ill., on May 14. Sermon by Dean Shailer Mathews, charge to candidate by C. T. Holman, prayer by G. Clifford Cress, other parts by Rev. J. Burk Bowman and Rev. M. C. Tunnison.

THE 105TH ANNIVERSARY of the First church, McKeesport, Pa., will be observed on June 6-7. Dr. John Snape of Cleveland will be the special speaker. Pastor P. H. Lynch has completed thirty years of ministry, the last two with this church.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Terre Haute, Ind., Rev. R. B. Deer, minister, has voted to employ an assistant pastor.

A WEDDING RING and $30 were found in an old pair of shoes being sold in a rummage sale in the Newburyport, Mass., church. The ring belonged to the mother of the man who donated the shoes. He gave the church $5 for finding the ring. Wonder who got the $30!

REV. AND MRS. W. C. COOK and Mrs. V. H. Cowser of Clovis, Cal., went to the Washington convention via the Panama canal.

REV. JOHN M. CURRIE of Boston conducted a union evangelistic meeting in Bellingham, Wash., the four Baptist churches of the city taking part and sharing in the gracious results.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Bellingham, Wash., closed a reading contest in which 151 readers took part, scoring 9315 points.

MRS. CLARA ROSS MOORE, wife of Dr. John M. Moore of the Marcy Avenue church of Brooklyn, N. Y., died on May 8 after a lingering illness. The funeral service was conducted by Dr. A. A. Shaw of the Emmanuel church. Interment in Flushing cemetery.

THE CORNER STONE was laid on May 22 for the new buildings at the Baptist orphanage in Pittsburgh, Pa. Two brick structures will be erected at once. Each unit will house twenty children. Pledges amounting to $72,000 have been secured and of this $55,000 has been paid in. One third of all money collected goes toward endowment. The campaign goes on.

DR. H. R. McMILLAN is closing five years with the church at Franklin, Ind. The past year saw $55,000 expended on the edifice. The year closed free of debt. Eleven members were received by baptism on a recent Sunday.

DEAN R. H. LYNN of Colorado Women's college and Rev. W. F. Ripley of Denver have supplied the First church of Colorado Springs on recent Sundays.

New Books

"Forbid Him Not," by James I. Vance.
New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.50.

Here is an attempt to mediate between indamentalism and liberalism on the basis of the faith that is common and indamental to both. In doing so Doctor Vance defines Christianity in terms acceptable upon all matters not in controversy between the two wings, but when dealing with the really difficult and converted topics, the grasp lacks a degree of virility. There is too much preaching in proportion to the underlying argument, but on the whole the conception of essential Christianity is correct and the treatment incisive and stimulating.

The Mind of Jesus, by Louis Howland.
Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill. $2.50.

The aged Sage of the Indianapolis News provides us with a youthful and vigorous study of some eighteen characteristics of the mind of Jesus. He is clear-cut and helpful in the conclusions to which he comes. Doctor Howland is neither of our thinking laymen who could point us all to Jesus: to his liberal intellect, his divine inclusiveness, his prophetic love calling to repentance. This is a volume calculated to clear the way for constructive Christian growth and progress as opposed to theological air-splitting and conflict.

—JOHN SHADE FRANKLIN.

Imagination and Religion, by S. Parkes Cadman. New York: Macmillan Co. $1.50.

The essence of "Imagination and Religion" was embodied in a series of lectures given at Vanderbilt in 1924 on the noble foundation. The material is now expanded for publication in six chapters: The Power of Imagination; the Wonders of Imagination; the Perils of Imagination; Imagination in Man's Spiritual Growth; Imagination and the Bible; the Christ of Romance. A reading list of nearly eighty titles and a full index make the volume a good one for the study; for this is not a collection of radio talks broadcast before breakfast, but a careful and close-reasoned treatise which seeks to enlist the faculty of imagination in the service of religion for the greater glory of Christ. "Certainly the boundaries of religious imagism in theological statement, preaching, artistic symbolism and architecture will have to be enlarged so as to include the whole of life. Once this is done or even attempted, multitudes of disaffected, indifferent or ignorant people may be induced to seek communion with the sacred mysteries of faith. Whenever the Church puts a ban on either the gains of modern science or the notable contributions of art, she exposes her mission to the perils of fanaticism or to a barren repulsive ugliness. Her worship inevitably is degraded when either the intellect or the emotions are denied their legitimate functions."

—GEO. E. BURLINGAME.

Inner Radiance, by Evelyn Mabel Watson.
New York: Abingdon Press. 75 cents.

The reader must be something of a mystic to understand and appreciate this book. It is a series of idealized meditations on the Holy Spirit, God, Jesus the Christ, prayer, revelation, the church and mysticism. But the discussion of these are detached spiritual musings and observations on the deep things of the soul and of life. Its paragraphs are spiritual insights and impressions rather than the logical presentation of any subject. Its special emphasis is on the inwardness of religion. To the person with the more practical turn of mind which communes with God in the actual tasks of the age, this book will appear rather supermundane. While it is mystical and contemplative, yet it is not ascetic. If a person reads it with a sympathetic and reverent spirit, it will bring him religious insight into spiritual realities.

—W. C. DEER.

"The successful Mr. Bagley", still in the adolescent stage so far as mentality is concerned and not much beyond it in actual years, is the spoiled brother of Ann Lampson, who as a child upon their being orphaned accepted Webster as her special responsibility. Ann marries money and becomes a snob. Her chief object in life is to keep Webster near her and to have him marry a girl of wealth, who is willing enough. Webster, "the successful Mr. Bagley," is doing a poor job at minor clerical work and carries a perennial chip on his shoulder because promotion does not come to him. He marries a secretary in the firm where he works, and they struggle along, not always happily, on their joint incomes until shortly before twins are born. Then matters become worse and finally are on the way to righting themselves.

If the reader is analytical he will wonder what the capable Sally can see in the unstable fledgling to whom she gives the devotion of her heart—for Sally is a real woman, the best character in the book. But women are women—and in the end perhaps her faith is justified as it does something toward making a man of her husband.

Pen-Portraits of the Prophets, by Bernard C. Clausen. New York: Revell. $1.50.

Clausen's latest is a plunge into the Old Testament, and he comes up with twelve etchings of the prophets, beautifully done. He seems to have caught the real spirit of the prophets in that he sees them as preachers bringing personal religious messages for their contemporaries. They are men, not books. His characterizations of these twelve are particularly apt and set off their distinguishing marks, as, for instance: Hosea is "the preacher whose heart was broken," and Jeremiah "the preacher who buried his clothes." He overworks his system a bit in the case of Zechariah, "the man who discovered the devil." As a matter of fact, Zechariah did not discover the devil a la Clausen—he borrowed him from the Persians.

The reviewer believes that this book is superior in style and originality of homiletical content to the "Pen-Portraits of the Twelve." Occasionally one runs onto a disconcerting slip; the author refers to the Hebrews as slaves in Babylon, getting their shelter, food and clothing from their masters. They were not slaves there: they lived as exiles, but were free to work out their own individual lives. Then on page 147 we read: "Jesus put it simply when he said: 'Be ye doers of the word, and not

The Holy Spirit in the Gospels, by J. Ritchie Smith, Professor of Homiletics in Princeton Theological Seminary. New York: Macmillan. $2.75.

We have here presented to us a book of 394 pages well prepared, neatly put up in print and dedicated "To my children."

In his introduction the author says, "This volume comprises a series of exegetical studies in which every passage of the four Gospels relating to the Holy Spirit is examined, that its precise significance may be discovered." We see at once that he proceeds in the spirit of a real scholar looking up every verse, consulting many authors and examining many commentaries in search for the true teachings on the Holy Spirit. The book is divided into three parts. In part one Doctor Smith takes us to the Old Testament showing that here we have the types of all that is unfolded in the New Testament. He discovers under what names the Holy Spirit appears, his nature and his work, revealing unto us one true God, telling of the coming Christ and his work, sanctifying and inspiring the prophets. In part two he considers the Holy Spirit in the life of Jesus first in the Synoptics and later in the fourth Gospel. He begins the study by examining every scripture relating to the virgin birth, reviews every argument for this doctrine and meets fairly and squarely every difficulty and objection showing that while belief in the virgin birth is not necessary unto salvation it is necessary to a correct biblical theology. We then see the Holy Spirit at the baptism of Jesus and throughout his life and work. In part three Doctor Smith studies the Holy Spirit in the teachings of Jesus first in the Synoptics where he traces fulfilled prophecies in Christ, the blasphemy against the Spirit, the promise of the Spirit, the gift of the Spirit and David's Son and David's Lord, and in the Christian baptism. In the fourth Gospel he shows the distinctive relation of the Holy Spirit to Father, the Son, the disciples and to the world. The book closes with an index of subjects, authors and texts. This volume is serving a real need in the Christian church at this time and we recommend it for summer reading to both ministers and church members.

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for June 6

JACOB AND ESAU

Lesson Text: Gen. 33:1-11. Golden Text: Eph. 4:32.

Twenty years at least have passed since Jacob built his memorial at Bethel in honor of his vision. He is now on his way back home. Having made his settlement with Laban, his father-in-law from whom he had secretly stolen away, he marches on with his caravan and tries to conceal the fear that grips his heart as he nears the borders of Esau's country.

Reconciliation with God

The incident at Bethel was promising but it did little for Jacob. The same old, crafty spirit prevailed in him as he tried to meet the trickery of his father-in-law with schemes that out-Labanned Laban. It was like diamond cutting diamond when Jacob and Laban met. Wits outwitting wits. God was left out of the question. Jacob had met Laban and conquered him. But he was not so sure of meeting Esau and winning by his wits. Probably he was beginning to feel that mere cleverness was not sufficient to solve the problem which the meeting of Esau involved. He had used all his own resources to meet the situation and had formally prayed; but still he was nervous and dissatisfied. Another meeting was necessary before he could meet Esau. Jacob must meet God. God must conquer Jacob before Jacob could overcome Esau. Jacob must be reconciled to God before Esau could be reconciled to Jacob. That is the meaning of the mid-night struggle between Jacob and the unknown antagonist. Bethel must be followed by Peniel before any Jacob can become a prince having power with God and with men. Alas too many so-called Christians are content to remain at Bethel, the house of God, instead of going on to Peniel, the face of God.

Reconciliation with Esau

Who can tell of the unseen forces working upon Esau as Jacob wrestled through the night in his attempt to conquer the unconquerable? Something had softened the vengeance of Esau. It is true the evident desire of Jacob to meet his wronged brother in peace in token of which he sent forward relays of sheep and goats and camels as a present must have had its pacifying effect upon a man who was well able to appraise the value of cattle. And yet as he had enough, as he afterwards said to Jacob, there must have been some other influence working upon the heart of Esau. The same power that had conquered Jacob and transformed him must have touched Esau. Reconciliation between two estranged brethren is easy when God first has his way with each. The years had taught Esau no doubt that he was as much in the wrong as Jacob because he had sold his birthright, and time had taken the edge off his hope of revenge. Both brothers had met with prosperity and that also had its effect in the final reconciliation. But the Hebrew writer of Genesis is meticulous in keeping God to the front in all things.

With the Board of Missionary Cooperation

CAN YOU READ THIS WITH A CLEAR CONSCIENCE?

A letter from Miss Carrie Putnam, Baptist missionary in Maubin, Burma, says, "In view of the financial condition of our missionary societies at home and the crushing debt they are carrying, we have voluntarily given up all appropriation for our school from America. This will mean increased school fees, and will make it impossible for many who desire an English education to attend."

TRANSLATING IDEAS INTO ACTION

Several members of the Tabernacle church of Albany, N. Y., attended the recent church officers' council conducted by Doctor Agar in Troy. They made a report on the conference to the rest of the members of the church at the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and as a result a special meeting of all the church officers was called for the following week. The suggestions made at the Troy conference will be taken up by the officers, and plans developed for carrying them out in the church.

101 OUT OF 135

Southern California had 135 churches and missions contributing to the denominational program in 1925-26, and of these 101 reached or exceeded their quotas.

NEVADA-SIERRA KEEPS FAITH

An editorial in the Nevada-Sierra bulletin says, "With a quota of $3,389, we have given $3,496.69, or an excess of $107.69. Ten of our sixteen churches have given their quotas and of this number seven exceeded them. Five of the six churches failing to attain their quotas are at present pastorless. Too much credit can not be given those churches that were willing to give beyond their quotas. Without their 'over and above' we should not have made up what others fell short."

This page is conducted by the Board of Missionary Cooperation, New York City, as a medium for circulating items about local churches which are carrying on their own and denominational projects in an effective way. If your church has developed any interesting ideas or methods we shall be glad to have you write about them to the Board, at 276 Fifth Avenue. Brief outlines of denominational plans, important news, etc., will also appear here from time to time.

PUT YOUR CHURCH ON THE WORLD MAP

You cannot expect church trustees to delegate themselves for the missionary objective of their church; they have a big enough task when they care for the local expenses of the church," said a trustee in a committee meeting where the church missionary quota was being considered.

The difficulty encountered in the thinking of this officer is similar to that found in many churches. There are many Baptists who think of the denominational missionary work in its relation to their church as "Our church and missions," spelling the "and" so large that the church is divorced from denominational missionary work except as it finds it convenient to finance the work.

Jesus taught his disciples that the field of the church is the whole world, and from this it follows that the true content of denominational missions is, "Our church at work in world fields."

To visualize this idea the woman's committee of conference has prepared a large wall map (a picture is shown above) which is being used with success in church meetings and conferences of women. The missionary officers of any church whose constituency needs arousing to a keener sense of their own relationship to denominational missions, might do well to prepare a similar map. They can do this by pasting up an outline wall map of the world with small pictures of their own church represented on each Baptist mission field.

Denominational statistics reveal that these churches which take advantage of their privilege of representing themselves in world fields by generous contributions to the denomination's missionary work are those which grow and thrive in their own communities.

GETTING OFF TO THE RIGHT START

Several of the largest churches in Rhode Island, such as Calvary, Central Baptist of Providence, and others have voted to accept their missionary allotment for next year and remit one-twelfth of it each month, authorizing their treasurers to borrow from the banks if necessary in order to carry out this plan.

CUES TO SUCCESS

From the Massachusetts State Convention office come the following illuminating facts:

"Churches that make monthly remittances, and which issue quarterly statements to all their subscribers, come to the closing month of the year with the larger share of their apportionments in hand.

"Churches which use missionaries and the secretaries for missionary education in the Sunday school and throughout the program of the church, are the churches which keep up their missionary contributions."

THREE IRONS IN THE FIRE AT ONCE

During the month of March, the Immanuel church of New Bedford, Massachusetts, Rev. J. A. Vachon, pastor, carried on three important activities. They raised enough money to install a fine new Estey organ, conducted an every-member canvass for current expense and benevolence budgets, securing $200 more than previously, and also put on a pre-Easter campaign of evangelism, including extensive visitation work.

OVER THE TOP AND TO SPARE

The First church of Evanston, Ill., Rev. James Stifler, pastor, went over the top on its 1925-26 benevolence budget of $18,800 by more than $100.

Here, There and Everywhere

college on May 23. The Boy Scout troop of the Calvary church has been awarded more honors than any other of the 200 troops in the city. The record covers ten years.

PASTOR L. P. JENSEN conducted a two weeks revival meeting at the Wentworth Avenue mission, Chicago, beginning May 3.

DELTA, COLO., Rev. E. Payne, minister, has installed a new lighting system, re-decorated the edifice and paid its missionary quota in full.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Waukegan, Ill., Rev. W. D. Whan, minister, raised 50 per cent more for its unified budget than last year, oversubscribed the missionary quota, and received eighty-two new members of which forty were baptized. The church sent the pastor and his wife to the Washington convention and gave him a substantial raise in salary.

REV. P. J. JOHNS of Davison, Mich., has resigned, this resignation to take effect on August 10. He has been with the church five years. Under his ministry the property was improved and seventy-four new members were received, forty-seven by baptism.

PASTOR E. C. HERRICK of Fall River, Mass., has received 111 new members the past year.

TEMPLE CHURCH, Los Angeles, Cal., raised for all missionary objects the past year the sum of $68,443.

THE UTAH BAPTIST summer assembly will be held in North Ogden Canyon, Ogden, on July 20-30. Tourists take notice. You will be welcome.

THE UTAH BAPTIST CONVENTION raised $1200 more for denominational benevolences in 1925-1926 than was raised in any previous year.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Jamestown, N. Y., Rev. R. I. Wilson, pastor, received eighty-five new members last year, forty-nine by baptism. The budget for this year includes $30,000, with an increase in the pastor's salary. An anonymous gift of $35,000 will go toward a new educational building.

EVANGELIST WM. S. DIXON conducted a meeting at Marshall, Mo., that resulted in 102 new members being added to the local church of which Rev. A. A. Love is pastor.

THE "MOTHER AND DAUGHTER" banquet in the First church, Galesburg, Ill., Rev. C. A. Carman, minister, was "cooked by men, served by men and paid for by men."

MISS DOROTHY KINNEY, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Bruce Kinney of Denver, will graduate from the medical department of the University of Colorado in June. She will spend the coming year in the State Hospital.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Barry, Ill., Rev. T. E. Jones, pastor, publishes a pithy little bulletin called the Dagger. Its contents are as attractive as its title is odd.

ITEM FROM AN Iowa church bulletin: "Dishes, dishes, who has the dishes? Please make a survey and see how many you can find in your cupboards that belong to the church. Bring them in by Monday." Incidentally we might call attention to the hymn books that have been purloined from the sanctuary. "Let him that stole, steal no more."

DEACON FRANK NIGHSWONGER of the First church, Wichita, Kan., has been elected as mayor of the city.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES of the Eastern theological seminary at Philadelphia, Pa., were held May 2-4. The sermon was delivered by Rev. R. M. Brougher of Paterson, N. J., and the annual missionary address was by Rev. J. F. Fraser of New York City.

REV. J. W. McDONIELS of the Temple church, Lincoln, Neb., has received sixty-six new members during his pastorate, thirty-five being adults, giving the church a membership of 232.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS MADE of the engagement of Miss Vera M. Rice and Pastor L. H. R. Hass of the First church, Waterville, Me. Miss Rice was formerly director of young people's work in Minnesota and vice-president of the B. Y. P. U. A. She is a graduate of the training school in Chicago and has a B. A. from Denison and an A. M. from Columbia university. Mr. Hass has a B. A. from Des Moines university, B. D. from Newton seminary and S. T. M. from Harvard university.

THIRTY-FIVE MEMBERS WERE added to First church, Oshkosh, Wis., Rev. W. S. Ryder, minister, during the past year. Missionary apportionment of $2400 was fully raised, jubilee fund oversubscribed, old debt of $1000 paid and balance in treasury.

A church was organized in August at Bollepolli, South India. A government schoolteacher gave up his position to take charge of the parish formed by this and four other villages. The church started out on a self-supporting basis. Seven of its members pledged a tenth of their incomes and there were many promises of support. A week after its organization, Rev. John Dussman baptized 160 into its fellowship. In November he baptized five believers from the caste people who came from villages whose authorities are opposed to Christianity.

Obituary

Fannie M. Cone, born in Waukesha, Wis., May 21, 1839, died in Prairie Du Chien, Wis., at the home of Dr. W. A. Hall, Apr. 29, 1926. She moved with her parents, to McGregor, Iowa, in 1859, and was a faithful member of the Baptist church there, of which her father, G. C. Cone, was a deacon. She was a constant attendant at church, continuing even when unable to hear a word of the service. She said she "counted one."

Morgan Guilford Millard. Born in Saratoga county, New York, Aug. 20, 1844, passed from this life, Apr. 11, 1926. Laid to rest at Park cemetery, Marquette, Mich., Apr. 13, 1926. A true Christian, affiliated with the Baptist church. He leaves two sisters: Miss Ada Millard and Mrs. Ida Armstrong, of Marquette, Mich.; two nieces: Mrs. Clara Miner, Chicago, Ill., and Mrs. Myrta Gunderson, Beaver Dam, Wis.

The Northern Baptist Convention

In annual session at Washington, D. C., May 25-30, 1926

Tuesday Morning, May 25

WHERE in the world on this morning of May 25, 1926, is there a more beautiful city than Washington? Pages of glowing description could not convey its chaste luxuriance. A tonic coolness in the air and a soft radiance in the sunshine put into the assembling members of the Northern Baptist Convention lightness of step, laughter and song.

But bing! here comes the morning paper with headlines of discord: "Modernism Assailed by Fundamentalists"; "Denunciation Received with Hisses and Applause"; "Tense Situation"; "Split Expected." The newspapers have thus declared war while the Baptists themselves are shaking hands and asking about one another's health and the folks. The net fact in the news is that the Baptist Bible Union has just closed a conference in which several well-known brethren have expressed themselves with their accustomed freedom concerning certain live questions in the denomination.

At the hour of meeting both floor and gallery of the great auditorium were well filled with a crowd that looked like 3000 persons, all singing under the inspiring leadership of Mr. Percy S. Foster, who also led the singing for the first meeting of the convention held in Washington in 1907. Applause greeted the appearance of President Edward H. Rhoades, and Dr. Emory W. Hunt offered a brief and appropriate opening prayer.

Secretary of Labor James J. Davis and Rev. Samuel J. Porter delivered formal addresses of welcome, both eloquent and well embellished with historical and mythological allusion and the arts of rhetoric. The address of Mr. Davis consisted of a story of his own religious life in the course of which he said that most of his education had been received in the Sunday school. At the close of his address he called on the assembly to stand and unite in the Lord's Prayer. Mr. Porter's address lauded the pioneers of the Baptist movement, and portrayed the greatness of this occasion for Baptists, thus complementing Mr. Davis who set forth the value of religion to civilization. Mr. Rhoades responded briefly, simply and earnestly, building his response about the statement: "If we meet only one another here we shall fail, but if we meet God we shall have victory."

Executive Committee's Report

Rev. W. C. Bitting, corresponding secretary, presented the annual report of the executive committee, calling special attention to three items. The first was a warm tribute in the report to Mr. Frank Miner, deceased, who had rendered unusually efficient and sacrificial service as treasurer of the convention during nearly fourteen years. The second stated that Mr. and Mrs. Howard R. Bliss of Connecticut have given to the convention a fund of $25,000 on the annuity plan, and proposed amendments to the act of incorporation and by-laws of the convention to provide for a regular system of handling such funds. The third was the proposed budget for the coming year as follows:

For this meeting of the convention, $2000; committees, executive, including expenses of president, corresponding secretary, and recording secretary in attendance at convention, $5000. Finance: General expenses, $2000; salary of comptroller, $6000; expenses of comptroller, $1000. Officers' Expenses: Corresponding secretary (clerk, postage, supplies), $1500; treasurer, $300. Transportation manager, $3100; estimated cost of Annuals above receipts from registration fees, $4000; contingent fund, $5000; committees on city missions $500, foreign-speaking peoples $500, denominational day $250, international justice and goodwill and near east relief $500; Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, $10,000; Baptist World Alliance, $2500; total, $44,150.

Enthusiastic applause, followed by a hush of expectancy greeted Dr. James Whitcomb Brouger when he came to the platform to deliver the "keynote address" on "Our Common Denominator." But the hush was soon broken by a roar of laughter at some sally of wit. The address, which appeared in the May 29 issue of THE BAPTIST, was heard with close attention and frequent expressions of general approval. It was followed by prolonged applause. Meanwhile some of the friends of Doctor Brouger, at intervals in the program, were actively and frankly campaigning for his election to the presidency of the convention.

President Rhoades announced the registration at this hour of more than 2600 delegates and 841 visitors, and introduced Dr. Frederick E. Taylor for the first of a series of morning devotional talks. This first one was profoundly moving in its effect and brought the first half day to an impressive close.

Tuesday Afternoon

The afternoon opened with a song service led by Percy Foster. Many masters of music can get people to sing, but Percy Foster is without a peer and the song service is an admirable introduction to each session.

Dr. C. A. Barbour, of Rochester, offered prayer and thanked God for the atmosphere of the opening day, then graciously remembered the schools and colleges, whose work was to be the subject of discussion.

Dr. William A. Hill gave the first report on the educational work of the year as related to missions. He detailed the splendid progress of the last few years—the World Wide Guild reporting 5000 chapters, with a membership of 50,000; the Children's World Crusade, now numbering 3350 groups, with an enrolment of 52,000; and, most recent, the Royal Ambassadors with 100 chapters. Doctor Hill made a notable report of the numbers engaged in the reading courses. During the last year 10,143 men and women read at least five missionary books, and thousands read a smaller number. This department has issued for the coming year the following text books: "Early Baptist Missionaries," Stewart; "The Baptist Family in Foreign Mission Fields," Prescott; "The Second Century of Baptist Missions," Lippard; "With Christ in Assam," Vickland; "What Forty Rural Pastors Are Doing," Hayne; "Who Makes Who's Who?" Hayne; "Plow Time and Harvest," Sutphin; and "Missionary Education in the Rural Church."

The convention then listened to a statesmanlike report of the broader field of general education from Dr. Frank W. Padelford. Before turning to his report Doctor Padelford stopped to pay an affectionate tribute to three men whose service in the board of education has added greatly to its power and who have passed on during the year: Mr. Frank L. Miner, treasurer of the board, "a man of gentle and Christian spirit who endeared himself to all"; Doctor Albion W. Small, whose knowledge of the small college made him an invaluable counselor; Dr. John Y. Aitchison, who, although not a member of the education board, rendered service which cannot be measured. In the interests of the denomination he literally "poured his soul unto death." Only one new student pastor has been appointed, other appointments waiting on enlarged contributions. Doctor Padelford called attention to the fact that the only interest the board has in education is in securing a type of education which builds a distinctly Christian character. The board declares that it is interested only in those schools which make Christian purpose primary in their task.

In closing his report Doctor Padelford offered the motion that the board be allowed to distribute its funds as seemed wise either for current expenses, endowment, or equipment. This motion was adopted without discussion.

These reports on the two avenues through which the education board does its work, were followed by two addresses of strength and inspiration: one by President Million of Des Moines university and the other by Rev. F. B. Igler, student pastor in the University of Pennsylvania.

President Million defined the Christian college, not as one which taught the Bible in its courses, but as one which had

Dr. Daniel L. Marsh is now president of Boston university. His inauguration occurred with elaborate ceremonies, May 15. Although a young man, his address followed conservative lines in theory of education.

The Erukala reformatory settlement in charge of Rev. S. D. Bawden, American Baptist missionary at Kavali, India, is composed of people born to lives of criminality, that is, children of hereditary criminals. On a recent Sunday seventeen of the boys and girls asked for baptism. Two of the girls recently graduated from the Bible women's training school at Nellore. One of them, Miss Samadanamma wrote a graduation essay on "The High-Priesthood of Christ in Hebrews."

The Tabernacle, rebuilt and reequipped, is again functioning as a heart in the throbbing center of Tokyo, Japan. Its ministries are as varied as the needs of the environment. The people of the Tokyo-Yokohama area are making a heroic effort to come back but it is a staggering task. The rest of the reconstruction work is held up on account of the lack of funds. The destroyed churches are carrying on in temporary shacks. Buildings for these should be provided at the earliest possible time. The Mabie Memorial school is in desperate need of buildings. It is still doing its work in temporary quarters. The theological seminary is in the same situation. Only one of the homes of the missionaries has been rebuilt.

Prof. A. E. Ross, writing in the Western Christian Advocate, in a discussion of the balance of good and evil tendencies in modern civilization, notes a dominant characteristic of modern business in the following words: "The predatory financial interests, who must control government in order to prevent interfering with their crooked acquisitive schemes, finding themselves no longer able to retain control by buying votes with money or whiskey, stuffing ballot boxes, and setting up hand-picked dominating conventions, are centering their efforts further back. They are trying to sway the mind that casts the ballot, to fool the farmer or wage earner into voting against his interests, and for the men and measures favored by predatory business. Hence they turn with the savagery of a wild boar upon anyone who, by showing up their crooked propaganda, spoils their machinery for chloroforming the voters. They aim to oust, discredit, or intimidate the teacher or college instructor or school superintendent, or preacher, or editor, or lecturer who says things which 'debunk' the people."

Can a residence be searched for liquor without a regular search warrant? This has been a sensitive point in prohibition enforcement. The court of appeals in the District of Columbia has decided in a case appealed on this ground that such a practice is unlawful.

Again resolutions are introduced in congress to make the metric system standard in the United States. But the proposal attains the peak of awkwardness by providing that our common names of various measures be retained but the quantities they represent changed to those of metric units. Thus the yard would equal a meter, the quart a liter, and so on.

"Meanwhile the movement against military training in colleges continues to grow," declares the Western Christian Advocate. "Anti-compulsory drill leagues are springing up all over the country. Students in Ohio and California are preparing to carry the fight to the voters. Boston university has announced compulsory military training will be abolished in that institution. Principals of high schools in Massachusetts have recently voted 300 to nine against military training in high schools. A petition has been signed against compulsory drill by one-half of the students of Cornell university."

Rev. James Goodman, one of the most widely known of our ministers in the west, died in Chicago, April 29, 1926. He was the oldest graduate of the University of Chicago. He had held several pastorates in New York, Illinois and Michigan. For twenty-four years he was associated with Johnston Myers as assistant pastor of Immanuel church. For several years he was connected with the Standard, now THE BAPTIST, both in the office and in field work. Later he was employed in the book department of the University of Chicago. He was all that his name expresses, a good man. Few men in the ministry have been more familiar with literature than he. He was possessed of a remarkable memory and could repeat hundreds of passages from the best authors. His writings and his conversations abounded with quotations. He has enriched the world and the church. In many respects he was like his sainted brother, Edward Goodman, whose unselfish life will never be forgotten. His funeral in the Immanuel church was attended by representatives of the churches, the press and the pulpit. Dr. Thomas W. Goodspeed who was his roommate in college days and who has been his intimate friend during his entire ministry spoke words of highest praise for this faithful, consistent servant of God.

The Department of State has been advised of the passage of a new compulsory education law in the state of Yucatan, Mexico. It provides that all farms and industrial establishments distant from towns must be provided with schools for the children of the workers.

Italy has ratified by royal decree the draft conventions adopted by the International Labor Conference establishing a minimum age of fourteen years for the employment of children in agriculture during school hours, and of eighteen years for employment on vessels as trimmers and stokers, according to information received by the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor.

For months past McMaster university, Toronto, has been under attack by the Baptist Bible Union, and many friends of the university have feared that the long over-due financial campaign might suffer as a consequence. It appears, however, from information coming to hand that Canadian Baptists, generally, stirred by the character of the attacks upon McMaster, are rallying more vigorously to the support of its financial campaign.

The National Student Federation of America has taken a poll of 315 college presidents, forty-two student editors and twenty ministers actively engaged in college work and the composite opinion thereby expressed is that there has been a gain in practical Christianity in American colleges in the past decade. This showing is specially encouraging in view of the extensive agitation and alarm over a supposed anti-religious tendency in higher education.

"Knighthood" is the inspiring concept of the coming convention of the B. Y. P. U. A. to be held at Los Angeles, beginning July 7. "Adventure for Christ" is the slogan of the convention, and the symbolism of knighthood appears again and again in the program, ending with an address by Dr. James A. Francis on the topic, "Arise, Sir Knight!" The committee expresses the hope that "the forums, conferences, and mass sessions will all combine to assure the delegates that an attempt to solve or eliminate some of the problems of life offers an adventure with a hope of satisfactory achievement not exceeded by the bridging of a Mississippi, the tunneling of a Hudson, the chaneling of an Isthmus, the circling of the globe in airplanes, the picking of music from the air, or the converting of desert wastes into garden spots." Thus the Christian youth are in the way of discovering the "moral equivalent for war" and the hope of the world grows more radiant.

The Religious Press Digest, published at Milwaukee with Carl L. Zimmerman as its editor-in-chief, makes its initial bow to the public with the issue of May 1. The first article in this first issue of a new magazine is a reprint from THE BAPTIST of "Death and the Life Beyond" by Frederic C. Spurr.

Nearly 80 per cent of the men and women who reach advanced age in the United States are dependent for support on relatives, friends or the state. Some definite plan of providing for the aged is now in force in Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Argentina, Australia, Sweden, Italy, Portugal, Greece, Switzerland, Denmark, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and New Zealand.

The cause of adult education gathers momentum. The latest item of giant gain is the report that the University of Melbourne has opened an elaborate system of university extension for the purpose of opening up opportunity for advanced education of every desirable kind to the people generally who have been deprived of educational opportunities in youth.

Prof. Ernest M. Patterson of the University of Pennsylvania thinks that the foreign debts settlements are half-way covenants that invite failure. He says: "The people of the United States have firmly announced that the war debts due our government must be paid, and almost in the same breath have declared that we shall interpose every conceivable obstacle to payment. The liquidation of these debts means the annual transfer of about $210,000,000 with an ultimate increase to $425,000,000. Only with commodities and services can these payments be effected. If we want payment we ought to work out some plan for receiving whatever is offered. Instead we have raised tariff barriers indiscriminately to the highest levels in our history, we have built a merchant marine and even consider subsidizing it because we prefer to render these particular services to ourselves. We keep foreigners out who might work for us."

"In theological discussion," according to the Religious Telescope, "it is easy to slip into exaggerations. This is true particularly with regard to the fundamentalist controversy in some of the big churches. It is the course for one paper, say, to state the belief of a certain church leader touching the Bible, the deity of Christ, and other related questions. Then, the opposition paper comes back and charges misrepresentation and lies and slander, and sets up a defense for the accused man. This modernistic way of clubbing those it cannot control or silence is not modern—no more modern than it is Christian. We presume that this will continue till one side or the other wins out, and the defeated part sets up housekeeping for itself. The modernists counsel peace and harmony—of the kind they prescribe. The fundamentalists go to extremes, and would throw some fairly good furniture out the back door during their perpetual housecleaning."

In his latest bulletin, Chicago's Health, Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, commissioner of health, states: "In 1925 over 130,000 children were examined by the Chicago Department of Health. Of this number over 2000 were found to have heart disease. The majority of these were acquired cases. There would be little heart disease among our children if physical defects were properly corrected; if strict quarantine were kept to prevent the spread of contagious diseases, and if strong resistance were built up by giving the youngsters plenty of nourishing foods containing vitamins; plenty of fresh air day and night; sunshine; sufficient sleep and rest, and cheerful surroundings. That's the heart of positive health."

Young people's societies of Tacoma Wash., have won for their city the first prize in a national contest organized by the Near East Relief, as the locality enlisting the largest proportion of its population in the observance of Golden Rule Sunday last December. A committee consisting of representatives of the young people of all the churches under the chairmanship of T. A. Swayze, of the Epworth League, enrolled 74,800 persons, or 76 per cent of the entire population of Tacoma as "observers" of the day, who on Golden Rule Sunday gladly partook of a frugal meal and made an offering that the orphans of Bible lands might have food. The prize consists of a trip to Palestine for the person whom the members of the young people's societies may elect. The award was made by the National Young People's committee, of which Dr. Daniel Poling, president of the Christian Endeavor society, is chairman. Other cities receiving honorable mention were St. Paul, Minn., Akron, Ohio, Richmond, Va., and Greenville, S. C.

Dr. J. Whitcomb Brouger has been honored by the Northern Baptist Convention in being elected its president for the coming year.

New national parks are to be created if bills for this purpose go through congress. One of them will be in the Blue Ridge along the Shenandoah, one in the Great Smoky mountains and the third about Mammoth cave.

Americans are rapidly taking lessons in new social controls and watching one's step is coming to be intricate business. For instance, in an Oregon city something was found to be interfering with radio reception over a considerable area. A careful investigation revealed that cause of interference was an insignificant sign on a peanut roaster. Perhaps a generation or two of such experience will be sufficient discipline to teach the average American to look beyond his own doorstep in his quest for social causation—as for instance the causes of strikes and of wars.

Scientists and engineers recently paid homage to Ambrose Swasey the man, and Ambrose Swasey the designer of telescopes that have enlarged the world's fund of knowledge. He was the guest of honor at a dinner in Hotel Cleveland, arranged by the Cleveland branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. Lauded in addresses by Charles F. Brush and Professor Dayton C. Miller, internationally known in their fields of invention and scientific research, he responded with the declaration that, despite his approaching eightieth birthday, he still is interested in the work of science and engineering, especially in that of the young men, who are to "carry on." Numerous telegrams and letters from prominent research workers, inventors and scientific leaders were received, and a bound volume of appreciation, signed by eighty prominent Cleveland scientists, was presented to the guest of honor.

Hugh Murray, a Presbyterian layman, writes in the Presbyterian Advance on "Putting Creed Above Christ," in which he makes an original distinction between laymen and ministers. The lay member of the church, he says, is required to be nothing but a Christian, but the minister is a Christian plus or minus. And he thinks that the plus or minus in the minister is the source of the theological controversy. He offers the following suggestion: "I sometimes think the devil holds on to the world through the creeds of the churches, and that in them he finds his last and final stronghold. I would humbly suggest to the commission of fifteen appointed to investigate and report to the coming meeting of the assembly on the condition of our church and to make recommendations as to the best steps to be taken to preserve its peace and well-being, that the commission recommend. That all our ministers be requested to confine their preaching to the gospel as taught by the Master, and to that alone, for one year. Let our church give Christ a fair trial for one year."

Will Free Faith Survive?

A STRONG revival of the Roman Catholic church is reported from central and western Europe. This church is working assiduously and with new promise for a reunion with the eastern "Orthodox" church, with a view to healing the ancient breach between the Greek and Roman parties and to consolidating the papal hierarchy throughout the world. In the established church of Great Britain there is always a party seeking reunion with Rome. Even among the negroes of the United States there seems to be a growing favorable response to friendly approaches from the Catholic church. Cardinal Mundelein is preparing to assemble in the city of Chicago in this month a meeting of the International Eucharistic Congress in which vast crowds and elaborate pageantry will celebrate the glory of Roman Catholicism. Catholic periodicals are already looking forward with jubilation to the early collapse of the Protestant movement and the return of the free churches to "Mother Church."

Protestants cannot afford to treat this Roman revival with contempt. It is not a passing accident. It is carefully calculated. It follows a definite and statesmanlike program. It knows how to utilize all sorts of secular agencies. It is supported by ample funds drawn from thousands of unpublished sources and by the most efficient and powerful ecclesiastical organization on earth. It cannot be checkmated by a resort to that phase of divine guardianship which provides for idiots and children. Protestantism sprang from a situation not likely to be repeated in history and it cannot expect to be perpetuated by mere momentum. Neither can it live on negation and opposition, nor by the mere indulgence of a boast of freedom. If it survives it must do so in an intense competition with an old, firmly established, world-wide, powerful, sagacious, accredited and persuasive institution of the Christian faith. It is, therefore, a suggestion of vital importance that Protestants begin to take a frank reckoning both of the strength of Romanism and of their actual resources for such a contest.

One resource upon which they frequently depend is bound in the end to disappoint them, namely, trust in an authoritarian system. By any test of legitimacy derived from tradition, or succession, or established ecclesiastical order, Romanism is able to establish a superior claim. If appeal is made to any test of infallibility, Romanism is vindicated. In short, if Protestants continue as they have often done to play the pope's game in the pope's way, they must expect that in the long run the pope will win. All authoritarianism plays into his hand. And unless Protestants are prepared to relinquish that principle and to commit their cause entirely to a personal, spiritual and saving union with God mediated completely by faith in Christ, they may prepare to return at last to Rome. And the one ground of hope for Rome that they may at last return lies in the fact that Protestantism as a whole has never so far comprehended the logic of its own revolt as to swing clear from an authoritarian to a spiritual base. Until Protestantism crosses and burns the bridge its future is not secure. Over against a system of tradition, succession, prescribed creed, holy orders, infallibility, saving rites, and submission of the intelligence to official dictation, it must commit itself to the principle of spiritual liberty, of immediate access to God, of saving faith, of the fellowship of love, of the scientific freedom of mind, of the priesthood of believers, of the kingship of the follower of Christ, and of consequent democracy throughout the whole social area.

Moreover, it is not enough merely to affirm a spiritual system as inherently the true one. The value of such a system must be demonstrated in the actualities of living. The supreme test of any religion is the result it produces in human life. Can Protestantism surpass Romanism in leading people into a true spiritual union with God, in the attainment of moral character, in actual Christian fellowship and cooperation, in social idealism and service, in education, in the harmonious adjustment of international, interracial and industrial relations, and in mass impact upon human life and human society? Under all of these heads the Roman Catholic church is able to exhibit substantial though of course not perfect results, and it does not hesitate to invite comparison. What if Protestantism, yielding the field of tradition and of ecclesiastical authority should not be able to show larger and better results than Romanism in the fields of human life and service? The answer is the defeat of Protestantism.

If in the competitive exhibit of life values, Romanism is handicapped by autocratic inheritances from the Roman empire and from feudalism, Protestantism is also handicapped by its association of interest with the modern system of commercial exploitation. And it remains to be seen which of the two groups can release itself in the greater degree from its handicap, in order that it may the more freely minister to the common and unprivileged mass of mankind. Is it clear, for instance, that any representative Protestant group is doing more to give practical effect to Christianity in the economic life of the people than the Catholic group for social action is doing?

At any point of comparison it is not difficult for the convinced partisan on either side to convince his fellow partisans of the superiority of the system to which they hold a common partisan attachment. But the court in which the merits of rival religions are tried is a far more exacting one. It is the court of public opinion. That religion wins which can most effectively influence human thought and behavior among the unpledged mass of the people. Here as elsewhere, merit wins.

Protestants are called therefore to something far higher than either emotional partisanship or spectacular pageantry. They face the necessity of a showdown in the major religious values. Can freedom function? Is the undelegated lordship of Christ actually effective? Is spirituality a sufficient principle for the creation of a working fellowship? If every man is left free to interpret the Bible for himself, and to discover his own path of Christian life and work, what assurance is there of sufficient unity for the larger collective tasks of the kingdom of God? Or is there after all a deeper utility of schism in virtue of which the voice of faction glorifies God? Does Protestantism really know what it stands for and where it is going?

All of this is written in the firm persuasion that the ultimate religion is the religion of the spirit and that the present revival of Romanism brings to the door of Protestantism a great opportunity to clarify its own position, to plant itself on its true fundamentals, to reconceive its mission in terms of the present state of the world, and to form its lines of fellowship anew not for a fight against Romanism but for a world-wide endeavor to promote a free faith and a brotherhood of goodwill.

Baptists ought to lead the way. Their principles have always been those of radical freedom and spirituality. They have now become so numerous, so well organized and so rich in resources that they should take the responsibility for a great unsectarian and unselfish effort to lead in the unification and mobilization of Protestantism in the fellowship of the Spirit for the winning of the world.

The Annual Report of the Board of Cooperation

THE second annual report of the Board of Missionary Cooperation has just come to our desk. It is put up in pamphlet form and bound in artistic covers. In twenty pages illustrated with half tones and drawings the board tells the story of the year which closed April 30, 1926. The report is one of the most readable issued in recent years. The facts are faced with fraternal frankness. After stating the one comprehensive purpose governing the board in all its plans and activities which is the enlistment of the whole denomination in the task of carrying the gospel into all the world, the report proceeds to an analysis compiled by the stewardship committee showing that only 51 per cent of the membership of local Baptist churches in the territory of the Northern Convention give regularly to current expenses and only 32 per cent to missions. "When it is considered," the report goes on to say, "that a few churches in every group rate high above the remainder in giving for all purposes, one realizes the gravity of the situation with reference to the majority." That is to say, if 32 per cent is the average of giving to benevolences then many local churches fall far below that level.

The problem and its remedy is then discussed. The problem is an old one and the remedy suggested is just as old. "What does bring a new factor into the situation is the fact that we have come to a point where we have the experience, the knowledge of conditions and the organization that enable us to give more concentrated and more effective attention to the subject than heretofore." Yet with all the aid the new factor may render, the problem remains. Only as the spirit of the Lord Jesus possesses the members of the churches in a larger measure can the problem be fully solved. This is the one dynamic to meet the apathy which registers itself in the financial returns.

Progress, however, is being made. After pointing out the value of the Brougher meetings, the success attending the efforts of the stewardship committee, the aid rendered by the women, the laymen and the young people, the results of two notable conferences and the wise use of literature and stereopticon, the report then in graphic form shows the actual and average trend in missionary giving since 1921. From $12,000,000 given in 1921 to benevolences we have dropped to $4,904,000 in 1925-26. But had the actual trend continued we should have received only $3,833,000 for 1925-26. Hence it is cause for comfort that the actual trend has been stopped and the average trend gives hope that this year we may begin to climb back to the scale of giving of 1921-22. The report should be read by every Baptist from Maine to California and from the Canadian border to the southern line of Northern Convention territory.

Baptists May Debate; Converts Come

Preliminary reports from the ten mission fields of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society seem to argue that the Lord of Glory is beckoning us to a great and united advance. The number of converts on the field in 1924 was the largest in any of the 110 years of the work of the society. It was 19,786. Every one of them was baptized on a profession of faith in Christ. But read on. The number of converts baptized on those fields in 1925 was 22,460. At that rate of growth ministers now on the foreign field will live to see the membership of the Baptist churches in those fields equal the whole present constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The World in Transit

By THE ASSISTANT EDITOR

This Is the Kind of Faith that Hurts Religion

"Just what the power is that manages this and other universes man cannot know, except for the teachings of faith." It is copied from a secular paper. But do we believe in God because we know him or because we do not know him? True faith does not act in a vacuum. It follows the light of known facts. That is, faith, in its very nature, is the affirmation by the human mind that the normal registration of facts in personal consciousness, whether those facts be objective or subjective, is true knowing, true to the universe and to whatever reality the universe involves. On this faith, and nowhere else, rest both science and religion together. Believers in an "unknown God" are "too superstitious"; in an imagined God, idolaters. God is as truly and fully known as the universe itself is. It is time to quit talking of science as the realm of fact and religion as the realm of faith. Such a distinction discredits one or the other—you take your choice.

Democracy Needs Better Tools, Rather Than a Coffin

Is democracy dying? The Continent is not the first to observe not only the present decline in parliamentary government in the state but also the unsatisfactory processes of the assembly and the convention in church affairs. Evidences of decadence in the system of mass representation have become commonplace. But what is the reasonable deduction from them? Certainly we cannot conclude that democracy is false in principle and impracticable as a process, for monarchies and aristocracies have experienced decay and death. If liberty is to survive the people must have some method by which upon such occasions as they will they may express their mind through the machinery of government. Any method which secures to them that privilege is democracy. If the present method is unsatisfactory, the remedy lies not in destroying democracy but in perfecting its method. Experience proves that periodical popular election of officials, unsupported by any other safeguards, is insufficient. Democracy requires in addition at least an adequate and adapted education of the whole people and a more scientific method of selecting the capable and fit for official positions.

Self-Education for the Workers of the World

A good many years ago labor leaders began to realize that the progress of industrial democracy depends upon the creation of social competency among the workers themselves through education. Even before advanced educational theorists had begun to announce their visions of universal and adapted education, the most far-seeing of the social prophets were ringing the changes on the slogan, "All in school all of the time." What is coming of the ideal? The New Leader for March 6, under the caption, "Hundreds of Labor Universities Dot the European Continent," presents a survey of institutions of learning of various grades created by and for the wage-earning class in Australia, Austria, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Ireland, Luxemburg, Switzerland and Jugo-Slavia. These schools adapt their methods to existing conditions. Night schools, lectures, dramatics, training in leadership, technical classes, reading rooms, in fact any sort of plan is acceptable that affords opportunity for the acquisition of knowledge, art and skill. Their value may be judged by the facts that the Countess of Warwick has given for this purpose Easton lodge in England, with 1000 acres of land as a home for a new labor college, and that the first Austrian resident labor college has just been opened with ceremony in the summer castle of Maria Theresa at Heiligenstadt. The significance of the enterprise lies not so much in its method as in the fact that it undertakes definitely to educate for industrial democracy and for the cooperative organization of society. It holds a great hope for the future of humanity.

It Will Never Do to Let the People Know How They Get Their Living

Social gains are slow coming and private ones die hard. By presumption any man who is engaged in honest business is willing for the public to know what he is doing. But the presumption does not seem to work. For every attempt of a government agency to investigate the methods of a corporation is resisted by the corporation with might and main. The anthracite coal business is the latest reported instance. A committee of congress is trying to get the facts for constructive legislation about coal. The attorney of the Anthracite Operators Association frankly tells the committee that his clients object to "compulsory fact-finding that goes into all phases of the coal business." On any classification except a purely technical one, coal is more than a public utility, it is a public necessity. People must have it or stop business and freeze. The whole population is vitally affected by the way it is produced and distributed. They have suffered greatly and are still threatened by concealed and bungling methods of handling the business. Yet they are frankly told they have no right to try to find out where the trouble is. Well, that program will work awhile longer.

Rotarians Are Invited to Make Good on "Service"

Profession of a principle is a dangerous thing; it exposes one to the risk of being invited to put the principle into practice. Just now the Rotarians and Kiwanians are under the pressure of such a demand. While the American Mercury thumped at their doors they could afford to ignore the din as the prank of mischievous boys. But the earnest world has been holding in courteous reserve certain questions of moral responsibility to which it has hoped to see such organizations arrive. Some inhibition, perhaps psychological, perhaps vestigial from former habits of thought, seems to have arrested their progress from a pre-Rotarian and pagan attitude to that of Christianity. A long time ago men said: "Honesty is the best policy." Now, a current Rotarian maxim is quoted: "He profits most who serves best." The moral advance from the old to the new seems microscopical. And yet there is no doubt that Rotarianism is a movement of moral and social idealism. Zion's Herald puts the situation pertinently in these words: "The whole question runs deeper than the personal giving of oneself and one's means for good purposes. Is the system under which we operate right? If not, what is wrong with it? Here is the crux of the discussion. What is to be said of competition, at least in its present form, as a principle of acquiring wealth? Cannot actual Christlike cooperation be substituted?" Christianity has planted itself on the principle of living together in brotherly cooperation, and it will keep on asking such questions.

The Great Quest

A condensed report of the convention sermon preached on Sunday, May 30, at Washington, D. C.

BY W. H. GEISTWEIT

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God"—Matt. 6:33.

"The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit"—Rom. 14:17.

"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in Heaven"—Matt. 6:10.

JESUS is ever trying to explain what he meant by the kingdom.

It is a hidden treasure—to be diligently sought after.

It is like seed sown in a man's life—it is a thing that grows. Its beginning may be small, but it becomes a sheltering tree.

It is leaven, which attacks the meal until the whole feels the impulse and power of the new life.

These things are not as clear as we might wish, for there is confusion in the minds of men concerning them, and sometimes much controversy.

This Kingdom of heaven, or of God, evidently meant the best possible life for the world. It was the one great, absorbing ideal Jesus was trying to put into the hearts of men. He knew the eternal search—for something.

That altar back yonder in the early twilight of our known history was the expression of the great quest. What were the brothers seeking—by two differing altars? Was it not a kingdom, other than where they found themselves? In yonder great library, our national library, to the left of the main entrance, is a panel by Charles Sprague Pearce. It is the first panel in that great rotunda—which of itself is significant. A crude stone altar; a fire burning, sending a little streak of smoke into the sky; a man, a woman, primitive, dressed in skins and simple robe; they are kneeling before the altar; the man's face is buried in his hands; she, with bowed head and extended hands is before the fire. The artist has given one word to define his work: "Religion." It could be titled, "The Great Quest." It is the eternal search for another kingdom, another life than men are living. It is the Kingdom of God.

The Kingdom of God

Did Jesus exhaust his definitions in his parables? It would appear that where he did not attempt to define and to declare—we can understand him more clearly. The kingdom is the authority of Christ through the character of men vitally affecting and directing the affairs of the world. That authority is love; that character is righteousness. Its form is neither occidental nor oriental; it has a universal spirit. It is not so much a social expression as it is a social spirit. It is not meat and drink; it is evermore righteousness; it is peace; it is joy in God.

That is our great quest. Everything else shall be subordinate. We are to go seeking, seeking, seeking, and where we find a soul that has these characteristics—righteousness, peace, and joy in God, we find the kingdom, we realize the object of our great quest, and we go on to tell the story, ever rejoicing, not in the labels of the kingdom, which are many, but in the spirit, which is one, as we may discover it in the lives of men.

The disciple may not always follow us; who said he should? It is a serious thing to ask a man to follow you. A man did it once, but he had the good sense to say: "Follow me as I follow Christ." (1 Cor. 11:1.)

That is the only honorable thing to do. To tell a man to follow you in your thinking, in your way of saying things, is a bold thing to do and sometimes a foolish thing. The Master's great prayer for unity will never be answered in that realm. We must be honest enough to say: "Follow us (only) as we follow Christ," remembering that there is but one evidence of that following: "If any man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." And that spirit of Jesus has no finer expression than that of Paul: "Love is very patient, very kind; knows no jealousy; makes no parade; gives itself no airs; is never rude, never selfish, never irritated, never resentful, never glad when others go wrong; is gladdened by goodness; knows how to be silent; always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient; never disappears."

A Believer in Jesus

What is this undercurrent of the tide moving against us in our mission fields? Why are we told to preach Jesus, but not western Christianity? There must be a reason. I met a Jew in Jerusalem last summer, a scholarly man, who is devoting his life to the telling of the story of Jesus to his own people. Through the war he was brought into touch with the New Testament. He found Christ. He crept away from Jerusalem, went over to Carmel, found a Baptist preacher, and after much discussion, and waiting, begged to be baptized, which was done in the river Kishon. He said to me, "I do not call myself a Christian. I dare not. When I talk with Jews, which I do constantly, they turn and say, 'You are a Christian!' But I answer, 'No—I am a Jew, a believer in Jesus. He is the Messiah. I have taken him as my Saviour, my Master, my Lord.'" He went on to say to me, "I dare not call myself a Christian, for they will judge me by the Christianity they see about them."

Look at this other picture. A tourist is sitting on a bench with a young Mohammedan Turk, in Constantinople. "Where did you learn to speak English?" asked the tourist. "At Roberts college," was the reply. "Did you become a Christian before you graduated?" "No, I am not a Christian," he answered. "I am just an humble follower of Christ." "They are one and the same thing," the tourist said. "Oh, no," the young Turk replied, "they are different. To be a follower of Christ is to be a lover of peace with good will toward all men, and a seeker to do God's will, with a burning desire to establish the Kingdom of Christ on earth. Christianity is a political system of intrigue that has brought to the world bitter pain, human suffering, hatred, and death." "Surely you are mistaken," said the tourist. "Your view is warped. Did not Christianity bring Roberts college? Are not the missionaries heralds of Christianity?" "You must excuse me, if I differ," he politely smiled. "Roberts college and the missionaries are ambassadors for Christ. They teach us Jesus, the Son of God, Saviour of men, the way of truth and life. We accept Christ, but we cannot embrace Christianity."

Something has happened. We seem to have lost something by the way. Great has been the story of triumph in the preaching of salvation from sin. Nor can we cease that preaching. But something has happened, and we seem to be in the trough of the sea. With unexampled prosperity we have suffered seriously, until the very existence of our institutions is imperiled. In 1913 the Baptists stood fifth among the denominations in per-capita giving to missions. In 1924 we fell to the sixth place. In 1925 we fell from the sixth place to the eighteenth! We dropped thirteen points in missionary giving! We cannot blink our eyes to these things. Religious interest isn't dead; whatever it is, the interest is on the first page of the daily newspaper. Which way is this interest going?

Two Letters

To further place this matter, I beg the privilege of reading from some letters which have come from college men away from home. One of them is doing special work in a great law school. He has doubtless done what too many do, gone about the great city sampling churches and preachers. He writes often to his mother. I begged the privilege of using this paragraph; his words cut deep; they hurt; but we of all men should welcome each rebuff that turns each smoothness rough," and perhaps we may learn some needed lessons.

"Now I'm all for religion and Christ and the Bible, and you needn't worry about me on that score at all. You will find my criticism of churches and preachers pretty caustic at times. This law school has just one aim, to make its students think critically and deeply, and all of its energy is directed to that one end. Now when I begin to apply these methods to churches and preachers I find much sham and lack of earnestness. I find that the preachers take too much for granted, and that even I can go farther back and deeper down than some of them. Now I object to being preached to by some one who can't go deeper than I can. It looks as though I were setting myself up as critic superb, doesn't it? But I do have this restless, dissatisfied feeling about the outward workings and manifestations of this religion of ours. And when I rumble I want you to know that God is my forte, but that that fact does not keep me from kicking about the status quo as it exists under its name."

This other letter hurts yet more, because it seems to touch more deeply the sore of our later life. We can afford, perhaps, to be charged with ignorance or shallowness, but we cannot afford to be charged with an un-Christly spirit, with bitterness, and even hatred, says this young collegian, a commercial traveler, "I went to hear ———— this morning. It was a disturbing sermon. He consigned all who disagreed with him to the fiery flames of hell. Now pastor, tell me, if a man as the love of the Lord in his heart, how can he stand up and preach such sermons? Does Jesus in any of his teachings sanction such actions? . . . Let me be frank: my education has not affected my faith in Jesus one iota; rather has it magnified my idea of God and his great works. . . . I am stronger in my faith now than I have ever been. . . . If Jesus had been in the church this morning he surely must have hung his head and wept. . . . The experience hangs heavily on my heart. I cannot believe this to be the spirit of Christianity. If it is, then, pastor, we need something else—something more. I trust I may hear from you."

Here is another picture. A visitor, a prominent leader of his own denomination, tells of his visit on one day to two churches, opposing schools of dogmatic religious thinking. In both services the air was charged with the fighting spirit; no, not fighting against sin in the hearts and on the streets of men, but fighting opposing types of thought, each of them fondly supposing he was set for belligerency. Each granted the other Christian character but the sheep that had come to be fed were given gunpowder! The visitor tells how he went out into the street, saw the seething mass of people, out for a good time of some sort, for it was Sunday; laughing, giggling, painted girls, careless and frolicking young men, struggling, sad faced old men and women, all after something, they knew not what. Did the contentions in the temples interest the crowd in the street? Was there a message in either place for a soul for whom Christ died? Aye, Christ was dying that very moment on the streets of that great city. What can we say?

"Pharisee and Sadducee, true to form in every age,
As of old Christ's blood can scarcely their hostilities assuage.
On one side suspicion, rancor; on the other,
scorn and pride;
And between them, sad, forsaken, Christ their King is Crucified."

Over against all this is an appeal that comes from a strange quarter, from a distinguished Jew and leading merchant in Boston. It is of the utmost significance. Says Mr. Filene in a letter to Dr. Cadman, president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America:

"Perhaps you will not agree with me, but I have a growing conviction that to further this movement there is need for a nation-wide religious revival if the church is to regain in this generation a position of effective leadership in the public mind. In theory, I have always been opposed to, or at least have doubted the efficacy of religious revivals. But when I think of the enormous forces of hate and destruction let loose by the war, it seems to me that nothing short of a great religious revival will have the power to check those forces and substitute for them the greater force of brotherhood and tolerance."

The Beating Heart of the Gospel

Brethren, the world is turning to religion for the answer to the great human problem; it is the problem of human character, human relationships, and human destiny. A re-examination of the creeds of Christendom reveals a striking barrenness right here. I can find nothing in any of them that gives evidence that the church believed in the Kingdom of God as a possible condition of human order as apparently taught by Jesus; as urged by Jesus in that prayer that should be the consuming passion of his disciples: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done—on earth as it is in heaven." Why pray for it if it is not realizable? Why put it in the department of a disputing sociology, when Jesus placed it as the beating heart of his gospel—in spiritual biology?

What is that kingdom? Righteousness, peace, joy in God. It begins in individual regeneration; it issues in peace, social transformation. It is a personal possession—within; it is an order of human society in which the principles, the motives, the rule of Jesus Christ become the dominant force, "as it is in heaven." As I see it, this is the burden of that three-fold petition in the great prayer, "on earth as it is in heaven."

If this is true, it charges that great prayer with a dynamic that shall yet shake the earth. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done—on earth as it is in heaven." Here is no spirit of feeble and helpless submission, but an enlistment to the great quest, the great adventure, for that rule of righteousness, "on earth as it is in heaven."

Righteousness is a militant word. Peace does not mean lying down to dream away the hours:

"Peace does not mean the end of all our striving,

Joy does not mean the drying of our tears,

Peace is the power that comes to souls arriving

Up to the light where God himself appears,

Joy is the wine that God is ever pouring

Into the hearts of those who strive with him,

Opening their eyes to vision and adoring,

Strengthening their arms to warfare glad and grim."

My brethren, this is a time for the unsheathing of the new-old sword of the spirit—the message of the kingdom. A rising up, and frankly and honestly facing the challenge. Is it not also a time for the unburdening of the heart, for a greater spirit of self-effacement, of self-abnegation; of self-obliteration; until the honest word can come from the inner heart of each of us, "For to me to live is Christ."

Not I, but Christ, be honored, loved, exalted,

Not I, but Christ, be seen, be known, be heard;

Not I, but Christ, in every look and action,

Not I, but Christ, in every thought and word.

The world of nations, the family world, the social world, the industrial world, the world of the spirit, this world—whose is it? God's! Then we must have a message for it. In that unctuous word of Paul as he pleaded for himself to the Corinthians he unfolded the great task which consumed him: "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh (for the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds); casting down imaginations, and every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God, and bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. 10:3-5). Aye, that is the sum of it: capturing the thinking of the world for Jesus!

The Idealism of Jesus

Jesus projected into the world a new idealism: the worth of the human; not the survival of the fittest, but the regeneration of the unfit: "unto the uttermost." He projected into the world the enriching idealism of sacrifice as the full expression of love; that selfishness, and self interest are the greatest enemies of the progress, the realization of the Kingdom of God. We forgot it. Darwin, with his law of natural selection (a refined expression for that brutal doctrine, the survival of the fittest, in the plant world) was caught up in the social reasoning of Herbert Spencer; and he in turn was caught up by that Teutonic philosophy of the superman which culminated in the doctrine of the supnation. All this reasoning was against Jesus, against the Kingdom of God!

It was Haeckel who said that "love your enemies was as useless a teaching as it was impractical." It was Nietzsche who flung all restraint to the winds and declared that force is the only possible law. "I impeach," said he, speaking of Christianity, "the greatest blasphemy of time, the religion which has enchained and softened us." "A new table set I over you, oh! my brethren: become hard." "For the best things belong to us, the best food, the purest sky, the fairest women, the strongest thoughts. And if men do not give us these things, we take them."

Was it the voice of the superman? No, it was the voice of the superbeast! It was that philosophy that brought on the world cataclysm. High above it rises the philosophy of the true superman, the Christ. Healing him: "If any man wishes to be my disciple, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." "He that saveth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

Seek ye first—first—first—this kingdom: not in order of time merely, but in order of emphasis, the consuming passion of life.

How the issues have been clouded! How we have thrown dust into the air! How we have confused minor and anise and cummin with the weightier things—the eternal things; and we have come nigh losing the kingdom-tone; and with the added inrush of a material tide, a tide of prosperity, there is an indifference to the vital things that should make us thoughtful.

Yonder in the prison on the spur of that lonely hill overlooking the Dead Sea, sits a disconsolate, disappointed man. The Man he introduced to the world has disappointed him. He expected a man with a winnowing fan and an axe, and he seemed to have neither. In agony he breaks out with the message, sending it to the north country, "Art thou He that should come, or lookest thou for another?" Hear the answer, it is the Kingdom of God defined in a sentence: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have good tidings preached to them." Poor John, he never did understand the Kingdom of God, which Jesus came not only to talk about but to establish!

On the High Way with Jesus

As we think of it we have sometimes committed similar errors. There were men among us like Walter Rauschenbusch, and Samuel Zane Batten, whom we loved, but somehow thought they were on the side lines calling us from our chief business. The day is coming when we shall see they were on the high road with Him who answered John, in the long ago.

In our baptisms we often quote: "We were buried therefore with Him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead, through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6:4.) Oh, the army, standing at the baptism—never walking! So many don't know where to go! Repentance, faith, baptism, walking! Perhaps we have not told them where to walk, the kingdom goal has not been set before them. We are suffering from an indifference, an apathy, many aimless folk, who hope to go to heaven when they die, but who have heard little of the Kingdom of God, of the great passion of Jesus which he put into his prayer: "thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." We are smitten with this apathy and indifference. Is it not true that unorganized indifference within the church is more to be feared than organized opposition outside the church? A dead church is far worse than a wicked world.

"When Jesus came to Golgotha they hanged him on a tree,

They drove great nails through hands and feet, and made a Calvary.

They crowned him with a crown of thorns, red were his wounds and deep,

For those were crude and cruel days, and human flesh was cheap.

When Jesus came to Birmingham they simply passed him by,

They never hurt a hair of him, they only let him die. For men had grown more tender, and they would not give him pain,

They only just passed down the street, and left him in the rain.

Still Jesus cried, 'Forgive them, for they know not what they do,'
And still it rained the winter rain that drenched him through and through;
The crowds went home and left the streets without a soul to see,
And Jesus crouched against a wall and cried for Calvary."

Who should lead in this great quest? Stanley Jones says: "Christianity is breaking out beyond the borders of the Christian church." Where will the tide go? Who can take this movement in? What body of Christians is best fitted to welcome these Christians into fellowship? That church must be as large as the sympathies of Christ; it must have his spirit; it must own no other; it must have his vision, his compassion, his passion, his sacrificial love. Can we measure to it? It seems to me our Baptist principle, fundamental—freedom of action, democracy of spirit, unshackled by any ecclesiastical machinery, logically puts us in a position, here with extended hands in welcome, we can say: If Jesus is supreme, if Jesus is regnant—your Master, march with us to the emancipation of the world from sin and shackles of every sort. Take this New Testament, let it exalt the Lordship of Christ, find in him the way, the truth, the life, and let us live and work and walk together, seeking the will of God to be done "on earth as it is in heaven."

Our Covenant a Cable of Love

I have been looking again at our common covenant. What a wonderful thing it is; it is not a rope of sand, it is a cable of love. Having been led, as we believe, by the spirit of God, to receive the Lord Jesus Christ as our Saviour . . . we solemnly and joyfully enter into covenant with each other by the aid of the Holy Spirit, to walk together in Christian love; to contribute cheerfully and regularly; to spread the gospel throughout all nations; to promote family and secret worship of God; to walk circumspectly in the world; to avoid all tattling and backbiting and excessive anger; to watch over one another in brotherly love; to cultivate Christian sympathy in feeling and courtesy in speech.

Does not this covenant touch the very confines of the Kingdom? Is it not the constitution of that kingdom in a few strokes of the pen? Is it not the complete body of Christ? Here is both freedom and bondage. Freedom in Christ and the bond slaves of love, what body greater than we can welcome the world to fellowship in the spirit which is the only rightful tie that can ever bind us together?

If what has been said is true, then, it seems to me, we should come to a clearer interpretation of ourselves and our gospel. Personal salvation is a great thing—the first thing. Our gospel must be interpreted in terms of service as well as in terms of personal rescue; I think more so. That is a great question, "What must I do to be saved?" And every man must ask it. But I sometimes wonder whether that is the greatest question after all. It was asked by a frightened man who was fearing punishment. We do not hear that cry often enough. But for a man to ask it, and to keep asking it, and to cling of no other question is to remain a dwarf in the Kingdom of God. There was another question, asked one day by a young man. He was on a journey, on a great quest, a wrong quest on a wrong road: "What wilt thou have me to do?" Aye, that's it. It is the question of an awakened man, looking for orders. The question of the hour is insistent: "What wilt thou have me to do?" And His answer is clear and explicit: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness"; "righteousness, peace, joy in God!" It is the consuming passion of life; it is the great, gigantic, stupendous task of seeking to have the will of God done "on earth as it is in heaven."

I hope there is no necessity in my saying that I thoroughly believe in what we commonly call evangelism. My purpose is to remind ourselves that it includes far more than our common interpretation. A deacon once said to me, "Get them into the baptistry; I don't care what becomes of them afterwards." Jesus came to seek and to save the lost; but he came that men might have abundant life. There is only one gospel; there is no social gospel, no economical gospel, no political gospel. The message is good tidings, for the redemption of lost men to Christ, the building of saved men into Christ, the transformation of the kingdoms of this world into the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. Life is one, not two; humanity is one; God is one; destiny is one.

There are those who do not have a large hope for the realization of the Kingdom of God "on earth as it is in heaven." But there did not seem to be in the mind of Jesus any question as to the reality of that kingdom, or as to the possibility of it. It was a spiritual possession; it had a material expression. It could be seen; where it was not seen it did not exist. It was righteousness; a right spirit, right speech, right relationships according to the pattern of Christ. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). Love, a consuming passion for service, "as I have loved you," service to the reach of sacrifice. For the synonym of love as one sees it in Jesus is sacrifice; it is greater than filial love; it is greater than the golden rule; it is sacrificial love: "as I have loved you." He loved us—until he gave himself for us.

The Commended Love of God

"God commendeth his own love toward us in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8). That is the commended love of God to us. We expect it in the missionary! How gloriously it has been exemplified. These rare souls have gone to the ends of the earth, the good tidings in one hand, and the school, and the hospital, the medicine chest, the care of little children, in the other hand; they were charged with that commended love of God, a passion that loved not its life unto the death. This sacrificial love has saved us to this day.

What is our hope? We are cheered by some great visions: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of Jehovah of hosts has spoken it" (Micah 4:3-4).

And the reason for it: "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 11:9).

And John saw: What did you see, John? "I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, made ready as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of the throne say, 'Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them and they shall be his peoples, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God'" (Rev. 21:2-3).

There remains just this word to say: how shall this kingdom come? As it has ever come; by the deeper movements of the Spirit; by the path of the heart. Listen: the tide of iniquity is full; it is the end of an age, the end of a world. A new era is born; and a baby floats in a basket yonder in the back waters of the Nile. It is God's way.

Listen again: the tide of iniquity is full; it is the end of an age; the end of a world; the closing of an era. Then—

"There's a song in the air,
There's a star in the sky,
There's a mother's deep prayer,

And a Baby's low cry.
And the star rains its fire
While the beautiful sing—
For the manger in Bethlehem
Cradles a King."

Come here, children of the newer idealism, heralds of a better time, interpreters of the Kingdom of God! Come here: I would have you look at three mountains. They are the mountains of our holy religion; they are the foundations of the Kingdom of God.

This is the mountain of the law; listen to it, once again:

One god; one holy day in seven; honor your father and mother; don't swear; don't kill; don't steal; respect womanhood; don't lie; be true to your neighbor.

Oh, the law on the mount: it is vital in the Kingdom of God! But now: look at this other mountain. Listen: Blessed are the humble; blessed are the non-conceited; blessed are those who long to be good; blessed are the pure in heart; blessed are the peace-makers.

Listen again:

Our Father who art in heaven; hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Calvary

But there is another mountain. I can best describe it in Heine's great vision. He was at Olympus—in his dream. Far to the top he saw a strange banquet. It was spread by the gods of war. Mars was there, Thor was there, Odin was there. They feasted on blood; they laughed loud with a hellish laughter; for the gods of war had their way at last. Down at the base of the mountain stood a pale, lonely man, looking up at the revellers of darkness. He had a load on his back. He began climbing the mountain. It was a hard climb—with the load on his back. Heine watched him as he climbed. On, on he went, till he reached the top. Then taking the great load from his back, he placed it in a hole, and it faced the sky. Then he placed himself upon it. And he hung upon a cross. And the banqueters? They disappeared, faded away in the darkness. And he who hung upon that cross, said, "And I, if I be lifted up, shall draw all men unto me." And the law on the mount and the sermon on the mount are joined together by that cross! No, it is not Olympus! It is Calvary!

Sinai, Hattin, Golgotha: the law on the mount, the sermon on the mount, the sacrifice on the mount: these three. And what God hath joined together let no man put asunder! Thy kingdom come! Even so, Lord Jesus.

What My Religion Means to Me

BY R. E. BROWN

MY religion means the only rational explanation of the universe. Among many voices one speaks with authority. God, a personal Being, created all things. There is a purpose in the plan and everything is moving toward an ultimate goal that is glorious. The world is spiritual and the highest value in it is the soul. But God is more than Ruler of the universe, he is my Father. The Bible is his Word revealed to me. Prayer is an experience as real as any other personal conversation.

Then, my religion is the answer to my personal problems. Our greatest problem is simply how to live. This is a religious problem. My hopes and dreams find expression only in religious experiences and activities. I find here a worthy goal and a worthy motive for my life. By exercising faith in Jesus I find forgiveness for sin. Through the cleansing of my own heart I have peace with God which is essential to worthy living.

Again, my religion gives a meaning to life. Life is not an accident. God's plan, while big enough to take in the universe, is great enough to include every life. My greatest fear is that I shall fail to carry out the divine plan and so make a failure of my opportunity, hence my religion means constant fellowship with the Spirit of God and constant dependence on him for direction in the affairs of life. My highest happiness is found in his fellowship and after that in useful service to others under his direction.

But, to condense years of experience into a dozen words my religion means comfort in sorrow, strength in discouragement, joy in trial, and then—the assurance of fellowship with the Saviour and saved loved ones in a better world beyond the grave.

A Scientific Religion

BY H. L. STETSON

A SCIENTIFIC religion! What would it be like? This question is answered in Harper's Magazine by Julian Huxley, grandson of the celebrated Thomas Huxley. After describing the revolution wrought in our thinking by modern science he says that the whole supernatural substance of Christian faith has fallen into innocuous desuetude: "scientific humanism" takes its place. This comes from a scientific analysis of "the realities by virtue of which" the formulated beliefs of men have persisted. "The values are there. They may be perceived practically by the man who ruefully surveys the self-caused ruins of his old belief; or they may be perceived by the scientific mind which has analyzed away the sanctions of the codes and theologies of humanity into myth, or false assumption, or error." The supernatural has no place in our thinking. Human beings are investigated in the same way a zoologist studies bugs and a botanist examines plants. This is the sole source of religious enlightenment and faith.

This is, of course, as Mr. Huxley says, "naturalism." It is a very old philosophy which he has tried to put on a modern scientific basis.

As a religion "scientific humanism" is on a par with Comte's "altruism." He tried to substitute this for the Christian worship and faith and failed. Mr. Huxley like Comte, seems to think that man will have some form of religion, and he offers "scientific humanism." Will he succeed any better than did Comte? "I was an hungered and asked for bread, and ye gave me a stone; I asked for a fish, and ye gave me a serpent."

The Devotional Life

Leaving It There

"Leave it all quietly to God, my soul."—Psalms 62:1 (Dr. Moffatt's translation.)

BY GEORGE H. MORRISON

THERE are times in life when it is greatly helpful to have someone say to us, "Leave all that to me." Like a gentle wind it blows the clouds away. There is much in life that we must do ourselves. Of certain duties no one can relieve us. There are crosses each of us must carry and burdens nobody can take away. But how much more difficult life would be for many, in certain times of anxiety or strain, were there not someone standing by to say to us, "Leave all that to me." That is peculiarly the voice of fatherhood. It carries the secret of childhood's undisturbances. A child does not worry about clothes or meals. Instinctively it leaves that to its father. It is beautiful to notice how the psalmist had grasped that comforting energy of God. Baffled, betrayed, a prey to bitter anguish, "Leave it all quietly to God, my soul." And so for him, too, came interior peace, and the lights of heaven began to shine again, and the storm was changed into a calm.

We Know in Part

This command which the psalmist gave his soul is one of the secrets of the spiritual life. No passing of ages has made it less imperative. When prayers seem to go unanswered, when someone dear and young is taken away, when those who would not harm a living creature are bowed under intolerable pain, how hard it is to say that God is good, and saying it believe it, with that confidence which is pleasing in His eyes. We want to know. We want to understand. Sometimes like Job we expostulate with God. And so, expostulating, everything grows harder, till we are brought to the margins of despair. How much wiser the attitude of David, plunged into a very sea of troubles, "Leave it all quietly to God, my soul." We are not here just to understand. Now we know in part and see in part. We are here to glorify God by trusting him even when we do not understand. And such trusting carries its own evidences, in the rich inward harmonies it brings, as if our life were in tune with the eternal. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me." His meat was neither to probe nor to expostulate. When the cup was bitter, when the cross was heaviest, when the lights were darkened in the garden of Gethsemane, He left it all quietly to God.

Problems

One thinks again of those intellectual problems which visit and perplex the human mind. There are times in life when these are very sore. And so made are we that we cannot avoid thinking of them, with the mysterious faculties which God has given us. There are times when it is well to ponder such things. A great problem may be an inspiration. The opposite of faith is never reason; the opposite of faith is sight. But there are other times when the highest part of wisdom is not to beat ourselves on things too high for us, but to give our souls the counsel of the psalmist, "Leave it all quietly to God, my soul." Some day we shall arrive and understand. We shall see His face and His name shall be in our forehead, it shall be written out in the region of the brain. Meantime we have a life to live, a heart to cultivate, a service to perform. "What is that to thee—follow thou Me."

When Failure Is Success

Again, we are to remember that deep counsel in the hours when we have done our best, and failed. The higher the service that we seek to render, the more are we haunted by the sense of failure. The man who is sweeping a crossing does not fail. Give him his brush and he will sweep it thoroughly. The man who is driving an engine does not fail. He brings his train in at the scheduled time. But in higher ministries, when soul is touching soul, when we are working not in things but lives, how haunting often is the sense of failure. Every Sunday-school teacher knows it well, every mother with her growing family, every visitor to lowly homes, every preacher of the great evangel. So little done, so little difference made, so little fruit for the laborious toil, though the seed sown may have been steeped in prayer. What, then, are we to give things up? Are we to throw our duty over in discouragement? Are we to leave the battle-line and be spectators because we hear no cheering sound of triumph? My dear reader, there is a better way, and it is just the old way of this gallant psalmist, "Leave it all quietly to God, my soul." Often when we fail we are succeeding. We are doing more than we have dreamed. We are helping, with our rough, coarse hands, because another and a pierced hand is there. Do your best, and do it for His sake. Keep on doing it. Do not resign. And as to fruitage and harvest and success, leave it all quietly to Him.

"When obstacles and trials seem Like prison walls to be,

I do the little I can do,
And leave the rest to Thee."

Mary's Little Lamb

A Sketch of Out-of-the-way People

By CLARA DENNIS

"COME in, come in, whoever you may be, I declare to my soul I don't care, come in," were the words of unstinted greeting that hailed me as I paused at the gate to admire an old-fashioned house on the lonely island of Tancook, off the coast of Nova Scotia.

The house was an old one. The garden in front looked as if a package of mixed flower seeds had been upset in a heap on the ground and had taken root where they fell. Around the garden was a field of waving potato tops. Other fields stretched far down to a beach, beyond which was the sea.

Through the potato patch came the one who had hailed me, a tall, upright man. As he drew near, I saw that he was a young old man. I afterwards learned that he was seventy-five years of age, that he owned the old-fashioned house and that his name was Mr. Israel Baker.

The room into which we stepped was a kitchen. Just inside was a flight of stairs that strongly resembled a ladder and which led to rooms above. A huge brick oven occupied one end of the kitchen. At another end was an old dresser with old-fashioned dishes. Old chairs, an old table and an old-fashioned couch comprised the remainder of the furniture. A quaint little old lady was in the midst of preparing a meal.

We passed through the kitchen to a room adjoining. It was a large room, oblong in shape, with a little bedroom opening off one end. The ceiling was crossed by large wooden beams.

"This here house," said Mr. Baker, "is an old German, builded out of two-inch planks—the only one left on Tancook," he added impressively. "And she takes," said he with pride, "a peck of lime to whitewash her; yes, a peck of lime to whitewash her entire. Americans come here one year to get pictures of her. They bring cameras wit and snapped her off."

At this point Mr. Baker's words were unexpectedly "snapped off" also by a diversion which was caused by the entrance into the room of the quaint little old lady. She carried with her a huge loaf of bread, which, after she had seated herself, she placed firmly on her knees. Her hands she then clasped tightly on top of it, as if to check any natural tendency on the part of the bread to rise. This was Mrs. Israel Baker.

The room was filled with things which bore eloquent testimony to the industry and ingenuity of Mr. and Mrs. Baker. A large full-rigged ship occupied a prominent space upon the floor. Baskets, and frames destined to be baskets, lay everywhere about, while willow withes of which they were made were to be seen in profusion. Numbers of mats, hooked by Mrs. Baker, called forth admiration. They were deprecatingly declared by Mrs. Baker to be as nothing to her Mary's Little Lamb mat.

"Here it is, here it is," cried Mrs. Baker eagerly. "Here's my Mary's Little Lamb mat. I made it fur the king," she added in a tone in which awe and reverence were mingled with pride. "But he didn't accept of it because he wasn't acquainted with us, he said."

Mrs. Baker had led the way to the opposite side of the room, on the wall of which hung an ordinary picture frame.

An appropriate pasture of green formed the background of the mat, on which the lamb stood out in snowy whiteness. Its posture was such as to suggest that it had been aware from the beginning that its ultimate destiny was to appear before royalty.

Frequent custom has rendered either "heads" or "tails" prominent, but in Mary's little lamb both "head" and "tail" were equally prominent.

The lamb's head was an inverted triangle, from whose base rose two straight points of ears and whose apex ended in a perfectly straight nose, dark green in color. Its gentle eye, of the same green shade, gazed unwinkingly ahead, while its trusting face was set steadfastly toward the beholder.

The legs were absolutely straight and totally minus joints. Realistic black hoofs formed the feet. The tail was a model in more ways than one, unerring in its straightness.

And, lest there be any dispute in the matter, identification by Mary being no longer possible, across the top of the mat there was hooked in letters unmistakable, unmistakable although the "s" in Mary's was turned west and east instead of east and west, the name "Mary's Little Lamb."

In a lower corner of the frame was pasted a royal letter and an envelope which bore a royal seal and was addressed to Mrs. Israel Baker. The letter was headed "Buckingham Palace," and read as follows:

The private secretary has received the king's commands to thank Mrs. Israel Baker for her letter of the 14th inst., and to assure her that His Majesty, although fully appreciating the kind and loyal motives which prompted it, regrets that the rules laid down with regard to offerings from individuals with whom the king is personally unacquainted, will not allow of his acceptance of the present.

So, as it was against the rule for

Mary's little lamb to go to school, it was thus made known that it was also against the rule for it to go into a king's palace.

The hour of eleven o'clock having arrived, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, with a wealth of hospitality, urged me to remain to dinner. They would take no refusal, so we returned to the kitchen, where the dinner was even then upon the table.

A moment's pause occurred while Mr. Baker petitioned heaven that the food might be blessed to our dying bodies, then with simple and unaffected kindness they made me welcome to their home and board. Delicious cold slaw, potatoes and meat were followed by wild strawberries and tea.

"I like strangers on earth," declared Mr. Baker suddenly, adding, as if by reason for his preference, "I'm bound to see strangers more than ever I see when I git to heaven."

"How did you come to settle on Tancook?" I asked during the course of my visit.

"That's what they all asks me," replied Mr. Baker. "The Americans as come here, they says to me, 'Mr. Baker,' they says, 'how did you drift?'"

"I drifted here by my grandmother and my grandfather, I says to them."

"Tancook was all grinette rock when he come here," continued Mr. Baker. "I could a gone away from Tancook. I bin invited to California. But I says 'I'm just as well wheer I am.' California's a poor climate—too many earthquakes and torpedoes theer. But I'd a liked to a went and seed the place, then cleared out and back to Tancook," he added reflectively.

My seat was just in front of the window which looked out upon the water. I recalled to mind the story of the American privateer Teazer which had proved so disastrous to trade and commerce and which was pursued in 1813 by a number of British ships and whose final end occurred in the very waters which met my gaze. After a long chase the Teazer took refuge inside Tancook. Seeing the ship surrounded, so history goes, an officer of the Teazer, a deserter from the British service, fearing the punishment which awaited him if caught, set fire to the magazine and blew up the vessel. The noise of the explosion was deafening. Men from the mainland fainted at the sights witnessed by them in the vicinity of the disaster. Only eight of the crew were saved, some of whom were terribly burned.

The tragic fate of this frigate is the source of a superstition among the people of the islands and the shore.—Boston Transcript.

Boys and Girls

Boys and Girls Who Have Done Things

Dear boys and girls of the Explorer's club:

Put on your thinking caps and explore the insides of your heads. Do you find there the stories of any boys or girls who have done something conspicuous when they were still children, or had an idea in their childhood which led to something definite and worthwhile later? For instance, there was Isaac Newton, who watched the lid of his mother's teakettle rising and falling, rising and falling, as the kettle boiled. What in the world made it rise, that lid? Steam! So Isaac Newton all his life had a dream of steam. If it could lift the lid of a teakettle it was strong enough to lift other things. Because one boy was interested in steam and teakettle lids you and I today have steam engines, steamboats and all kinds of machinery.

I am thinking of a little girl in the Bible, an inconspicuous child who was only a slave-girl in a great man's house, yet when this man became ill with a curiously dreadful disease which no one seemed able to cure, this little girl spoke up and said: "There is a prophet in Israel, if you please, sir, and I am sure he could help you." Imagine the courage of it, a mere little slave-girl daring to speak to this important gentleman. Yet when Naaman took her advice, and journeyed to meet the prophet, the prophet really did tell him how he could be made well. I have often wondered about that little girl: was she dreadfully puffed up about it? And did the great man come home to pat her on the head in high gratitude? Did he, perhaps, set her free? Did he give her a new dress or a bracelet as a "thank you"? Nobody knows how it all came out, but this girl who dared to say something was important enough to get written into the Bible, and I think that perhaps that is thanks enough for her, today, don't you?

There's a boy who was also "written into the Bible." You know all about him, that boy who had a lunch basket, with only five loaves as big as biscuits and two small fishes. Just exactly enough for himself! Yet along came Jesus and saw him. And Jesus knew that there were five thousand hungry men and women who had listened to a long sermon, far from home, so he said to the boy: "Boy, let's feed this big multitude, you and I!"

Boy, how did you feel then? For a great many boys and girls here in America have often wondered about you. Were you startled, amused, quite sure it was almost a joke? And then, when Jesus really did it, didn't you adore him?

The Explorers' Club

CONDUCTED BY MARGARET T. APPLGARTH

Didn't you tag at his heels day and night after that? Didn't you tell all your pals about the most wonderful person you had ever met? And how did you feel when the Lord Jesus was on the cross? We wonder! We boys and girls of 1926 often wonder about you, and wish that Jesus could use something we have had, as he used your lunch basket.

So, Explorers, write me a letter telling me about some boy or girl you have heard about in school, or at home, or at church, or elsewhere, who did something splendid. This contest will be open until June 20, 1926.

RULES

1. Send your letter to Miss Margaret Applegarth, 21 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y.
2. Mail before June 20.
3. Write in your own words about this boy or girl. Tell what he did, and why you admire it.
4. A prize will be given for the best girl's letter, another, for the best letter from a boy.

To Help Others

By ELSIE P. HOLMES
Seattle

WAR hinders every helpful thing in life and that is one reason why it is wrong. It upsets families and schools and churches, it makes the well people sick and the sick people nervous, and little children get scared and miserable. Jesus wants his followers to help others, and he must be very disappointed when Christians fight one another.

Dear Miss Applegarth:

This is what I have explored about the negroes so far:

1. They were brought to America as slaves from Africa in 1613 on a ship called "The Jesus."
2. Abraham Lincoln freed these negroes from slavery after the Civil War when he signed the Proclamation of Emancipation.
3. Today one in every ten persons in the United States is a negro.
4. The following are conspicuous negroes, well-known by everybody: Booker Washington, Major Moton, president of Tuskegee; Alexander Dumas, French author; Paul Lawrence Dunbar, American poet; Nanny Burroughs, head of a wonderful school for colored girls in Washington; Roland Hayes, one of the most wonderful and popular singers in the world.

5. Negroes should always be spelled with a capital N out of courtesy, just as Italian, American, English, etc., are spelled with capitals.

I love your stories and think you must have such a good time writing, they sound very jolly. I like this page.

Your new friend,

Emerson Johnston, (age 11),
Washington, D. C.

Dear Chimney Corner:

I have read you ever since we took THE BAPTIST and I like it so much. I thought it was fine of Brougham and Robert Wallace to write such a long hard story all alone. It has so much happening. I am writing a story now too about a man we really know who had an adventure in Kentucky once, which you may like to hear if I ever get it done. I may get time to do it in Christmas vacation. There is always school work to keep me busy, and I guess you all have the same trouble. We gave a play by Miss Applegarth in our church and I was Jack the Giant Killer. It was to get subscriptions to Missions, and I think it did. A big giant came in and I asked missionary questions until she shrank to nothing. I like the Chimney Corner a lot. No more now, from —Jack Truman Fox, (Aged 12),

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Miss Applegarth,

Thank you very much for sending me so many foreign postage stamps. You must have lots of friends in other lands, for it is hard to get stamps from South America and China, I find. I liked the little book of stories about the various countries where your stamps came from. I can join the Explorer's Club now for I have explored postage stamps, and know that the Chinese stamp has a sort of sampan on it, like your story of the boat that had an eye to see with. We are using your "Merry-Go-Round" book in Sunday school, and I made the elephant to go on the merry-go-round when we studied India. We are having lots of fun with it during the church hour when the juniors meet in our room for our own service. Drop in if you come to Chicago, we would love to see you and other explorers too. I like the page.

Very truly yours,

Paul Prentice Stone.

(Age 11, Chicago.)

Miss Pert: "Don't you ever get tired of staying alone?"

Young People and the Kingdom

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topics for June 27

Note: All references hereafter made in these "Meeting Helps" will be to the following books: "Modern Discipleship and What it Means" by Woods; "Twelve Tests of Character" by Fosdick; "The Man Nobody Knows" by Barton; "Gates and Keys to Bible Books" by Robinson; "How We Got Our Bible" by Smyth; "A Short History of the Christian Church" by Moncrief; "Peasant Pioneers" by Miller; "God's Dynamite" by Lerrigo. The entire set of books may be had from the American Baptist Publication Society. A few others may be added later.

This lesson is based on the second chapter of "God's Dynamite" from pages 47-73. Read this over carefully and ask your group members to read it also.

In presenting this lesson, bring in several of the interesting stories in this chapter, showing what prayer did for the missions in Africa.

Have all of this leading up to the need for prayer today. Show that just as the missionaries needed prayer in Livingstone's day, so they need it today. Bring to the attention of the young people the "Book of Remembrance" which gives names of missionaries and workers for whom we are asked to pray each day.

If you have not already instituted a "Remembrance period" in your weekly devotional meetings, and wish to do so, send thirty cents to the B. Y. P. U. of America (same address as THE BAPTIST) for a copy of the "Book of Remembrance" and a leaflet on how to use it for this purpose. If you already have your "Book of Remembrance" send for the leaflet on its use in the weekly devotional meeting.

Have such a "Remembrance period" at this time for the missionaries in Africa, mentioning them by name. Ask the young people to continue their prayers for these missionaries throughout the week.

Exchanging Ideas and—

An exchange of pulpits is getting to be a common thing in these days. Sometimes Baptist pastors change with those of another denomination. Sometimes they change with those of another race. Sometimes they change with those of another city or district. Usually both churches affected in the exchange are benefited by it.

The First church of Detroit, Mich., has tried an exchange of a different sort. One Sunday each year for the last two years the pastor, Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, has exchanged with his young people's society. Mr. Sanborn lead the young people's meeting each time and the young people assumed charge of the evening church service. Several of the young people acted as ushers. One young person read the scripture; another lead in prayer; others gave special instrumental or vocal selections. The presentation of the evening's "sermon" was made by three young people and the benediction was offered by a young person. In fact, the entire meeting from start to finish was planned and carried out by young people.

Such an exchange would give the young people an idea of what the pastor faces on Sunday evenings. If the audience is "slim" they may catch a vision of a full church if they themselves stayed. They will be ready to help the pastor in the problems with which he is confronted because they are able to see for a brief time what these problems are. On the other hand, the pastor is able to see more clearly some of the problems menacing the young people, and he will be ready to lend his aid in their work more fully than before. Then, too, the older people of the church get a glimpse of what the young people are trying to do. They see something of what the training in the young people's society is doing for them. They learn something of what the young people are thinking and of their capability, and will probably be willing to trust them with more responsible tasks about the church.

An exchange such as this, once a year, would seem to be beneficial to all churches. It would probably result in a close cooperation of all groups within the church, and a better understanding of the aims and possibilities of each integral part of church life.

The "Mo-Sho-Me"s

"I'm from Missouri: show me," is a common expression and whenever people doubt the word of others, they usually fall back on this trite but expressive phrase. That is why the group of Baptist young people from St. Louis who have been to a Baptist young people's convention call themselves the "Mo-Sho-Me"s. You've noticed, of course, that the first syllable is the abbreviation for "Missouri." And the last two syllables say "show me." Quite unique, isn't it?

The purpose of this Mo-Sho-Me club is to create and maintain interest in the state and international B. Y. P. U. conventions. Meetings are held on the third Tuesday of each month and any one and every one interested in one or the other of these conventions is asked to attend. And, from what we hear, these meetings are well worth attending. The features of the conventions are discussed, latest information as to programs, cost, accommodations, etc., are given, and good programs of fun follow. Little sketches showing something of the trip or portraying in a humorous way some feature of the convention, are sometimes introduced for the amusement as well as the enlightenment of those who attend.

In addition to these regular meetings, this club issues a little paper telling about the conventions, so that those who do not attend the meetings may have the information just the same. "And there-on hangs a tale." You know, of course, that Missouri is noted for its braying quadrupeds. This has lead the Missouri delegation to adopt the "mule" as its mascot and those of you who have attended the Baptist young people's conventions will recall the "braying" of the "mules" in all the pep sessions. What, therefore, could be a better name for this little paper about the conventions than "The Hee-Haw: Official Mouth Organ of the Mo-Sho-Me Club." Isn't that appropriate?

No, this isn't a news item to be read and forgotten. Here is the purpose in telling you about this: have you ever thought of—Yes, you got the meaning. All young people would be interested in having a "Convention club" keeping them informed about state and national conventions for Baptist young people. Perhaps you live too far apart to try having meetings, but everyone would welcome a little paper (mimeographed or printed) giving the "high lights" of the conventions. If you want to tell them in a humorous way, all well and good. Or perhaps you would prefer mixing up some seriousness with the humor.

Executive of the Los Angeles Camp Fire Girls, and author of five books on dramatization and pageantry, of which "Dramatized Bible Stories for Young People" is probably best known, will conduct the conferences on Bible Dramatics and Pageantry at the Baptist Young People's Convention to be held in Los Angeles, July 7-11.

Among Ourselves

West China Letter

BY JOE TAYLOR

SOME time ago, I sent some information regarding the growth of the opium traffic in this province (Szechuan) which showed that we are in danger of drifting back to the worst days of the vil before the late Empress Dowager promulgated her now famous edict that he production, manufacture and consumption of the drug must be abolished a ten years. You will remember how we all rejoiced and looked on with keen interest at the progress of this splendid reform. Of course we knew that the imperial lady took her daily whiff at the pipe before retiring for the night. But that did not matter so much as she could not live long—she died about a year after her edict was published. The reform would go on for there was a solid body of opinion back of it. The Christian church was lined up in its favor and its influence was away out of proportion to its numbers. Schools were beginning to teach the evil effects of the drug and the younger generation was fighting it. A lot of good came out of that crusade and we looked for the final extinction of the vil. We did not get it. In 1911 came the revolution and the abdication of the Manchus. Then the hectic days of Yuan Shi Kai and then—the deluge, whose waters continue to mount up every year. Now opium is back again and one can see dens on three-fourths of the streets of Chengtu right under the nose of the government.” Out in country places anybody can get a smoke that wants it. In the Arcade in this city, the opium pipes are exposed in shop windows for sale. Back of a dirty curtain in lots of the houses on the streets of Chengtu, the little lamps can be seen glimmering while the addict sucks at the pipe on the bed. Opium is back again; and like the seven devils of scripture seems to be determined to make the last state of China worse than the first.

Illicit Dealing in Drugs

But there is an equally great evil closely allied to opium that is eating the life out of this republic. It is the drug habit. In America, you know somewhat of this enemy. In China it is secretive in its methods and baleful in its results. The first time it is met is at the three principal ports of China—Shanghai, Tientsin and Tsingtao. During 1925, the total seizures of narcotic drugs by the Maritime Customs at these ports were as follows: Shanghai, 6574 ounces; Tientsin, 2916 ounces; Tsingtao, 1356 ounces, making a total of 10,846 ounces. The drugs thus seized consisted of morphia, 5611 ounces; heroin, 4068 ounces; cocaine, 1167 ounces. The seizures were made on thirty-eight steamers; of these twenty-nine were Japanese; one was American, the President Pierce, but she came from Europe by way of Southampton, Canada and Yokohama. Of the seizures that were labelled, twenty-four were from firms in Japan; while thirteen packages were unlabelled. It would appear that certain firms are not proud of their contraband trade but do not object to the enormous profits to be had by this illicit dealing.

Bear in mind that this large amount of narcotics only represents what was seized by the customs authorities. How much escaped it is not possible to say; but when one remembers the ease with which these drugs can be secreted either on the person or in the baggage of a traveler, it is not too much to say that as much escaped as was caught. Japan has stated at the League of Nations that she desired only “the social and moral welfare of the Far East.” No wonder that this smuggling goes on for it yields tremendous profits. I quote from “The Anti-opium War” published in Peking. “Apart from repeated analysis it is difficult to estimate the amount of morphia in the thousands of samples of ordinary morphia pills. The amount is probably very small, for the average sale price is about $6 a thousand pills. Contraband morphia is sold at prices varying from $400 to $600 a pound, thus giving a profit to the trafficker of nearly 1000 per cent if the drug is bought at market rates.”

A National Menace

So that, in addition to being exploited by her own military leaders, China is being hastened to ruin by some foreign merchants. Opium may be easily detected and confiscated; but these drugs are difficult to find and many get through to the hurt of the people. “Opium and its products metamorphoses the human soul; it debauches the human will; it wrecks the human body. Its addict ceases to be a voluntary agent; he becomes a slave, a tool, a victim of his own weakness, and a menace to society. The drug addict is a national menace, a canker in the body politic. Both the state and the victim need mutual protection both for and against each other.”

In Peking, during the year 1925, 5743 ounces of morphia were seized and burned. It is encouraging to learn that since 1922 not one ounce of British narcotic drugs has been seized. This is mainly owing to the fact that the British government only allows two firms in England to manufacture morphia and heroin. And one of those firms was receiving such large orders for strychnine nitrate from China that they stopped all shipments of that drug to China until they could get some facts as to how and where it was being used. Now they only sell it in small quantities ordered for bona fide medical purposes.

“On June 7, 1924, the congress of the United States passed H. R. 7079, prohibiting the manufacture of heroin. This action was taken after exhaustive hearings and by unanimous vote in both houses of congress.” While one is glad to know that America has taken this noble stand on this drug; it is sad to learn from the same authority that Japan is increasing her output by leaps and bounds; so that while one country destroys the evil another increases it. The seizures by the customs in 1925 goes to show that morphia is coming to China from Germany and heroin and cocaine from Japan.

The world's production of opium ranges from 2500 tons to 15,000 tons depending on the amount estimated for China. The health committee of the League of Nations declares that 450 milligrams per capita is sufficient for all medical and scientific purposes, which is equivalent to 720 tons for the world.

So you can see that China has more than one difficult problem on her hands. She has the militarists who demand most of her revenues for their armies. In order to get sufficient revenues, these same men of the sword have forced the planting of the poppy on hundreds of farmers—they collect the tax whether the farmer raises the poppy or not. She has a vast system of opium smuggling within her own borders; and added to this she has the contraband trade in drugs at her ports carried on by the citizens of countries whose representatives sit close to her's in the assembly of the League of Nations.

Chengtu, April 16.

Letter from India

BY W. L. FERGUSON

THE holiday season has been upon us recently, not that holidays are anything new or special, but because this year so many of them come in a heap. Most Hindu and Mohammedan feasts, as well as the Christian Easter, are determined by the phases of the moon and not by the Gregorian or Julian calendar. I fell to looking up some of these holidays just now, and I find that in a somewhat modest list thirty-four are set down for the Hindus, twenty-nine for the Mohammedans, and sixty-three for the Christians, most of these latter being saints' days. These three lists total 126 days, but not all Sundays are included, therefore we need to add some forty more days. To be sure, no one observes all these special days, that would be a great feat of religious adjustment. Legally there are fifty-two Sundays in the year which are government and commercial holidays, and there are twenty-nine other days, chosen from the numerous festival days of Hindus, Mohammedans and Christians, which are "bank holidays," i. e., days on which business is not carried on, as Christmas, New Year, and the king-emperor's birthday. All stripes of religion have these Sundays and bank days to themselves. In addition Mohammedans can claim six more; Hindus two; Christians three, of which two only may be observed by Protestants, while Romanists may have all three. Since Dec. 31, 1925, we have had three new year days, one of which was European (Jan. 1), one Tamil and one Telugu. For eight days in succession certain offices were closed recently, during which no business was possible. We have other and frequent closings for two, three or five days because Hindu, Mohammedan and Christian days came one after the other in rapid succession. Nor have I exhausted the possibilities of rest, play and vacation from inksome toil, for in the city and out there are other times of respite. The last Saturday in the month is a day of leave for those employed in certain government offices, and every Saturday is a half-holiday. Meal times too are puzzling things. Government and municipal offices open at 11 a. m., lunch comes on at 1 p. m. or later, as far on as 2:30 p. m., and afternoon tea begins at four and runs on till five. And five is closing time. It takes some skill to get business done in the midst of conditions such as these. To dodge the holidays, the late openings and the early closings, the personal programs of eating and drinking during the business hours, and to get something done quickly is a real feat. If one can accomplish a half dozen items of moderately important business in a half day or a day, he has reason to be quite elated.

The East Moves

And yet I would not have my readers infer that the East is not moving—that it is incurably slow. Things are coming on with incredible swiftness. Motor traffic, for instance, is revolutionizing travel in this city and all the surrounding country. Vepery, the section of the city where the Day memorial, King hostel and "Bishopville" are, was formerly a very quiet residential and educational section but now is in the center of a great traffic. No less than seven bus lines run past the main gate, and business is rapidly closing in from all sides. We are in a fine location still for mission work, but what it will be a few years from now one can only guess. Fortunately, however, we have a fine three acre plot of ground on which the mission stands, and we probably will not be forced off it for a few years at any rate.

Just now Calcutta is in the midst of great trouble and excitement. For the second time within the past three weeks rioting has broken out between Hindus and Mohammedans with fatal results. In the first onset some forty or fifty people were slain and hundreds wounded, not by the police or soldiery, but by the opposing factions. In this recent outbreak the death toll is considerable and the bruised are many. At the latest accounts the militia was out patrolling the streets. Inquests, imprisonments, and court cases are proceeding. To find the causes of these outbreaks is not easy. Religious animosity, political rivalry, race feeling, communal jealousy, a crime wave, and hooliganism with plunder as its object, are among the suggestions offered. It is plain that whatever the cause, the cleavage between the two peoples is deep. From of old it has existed, and it will not be wiped out in a day, in spite of talk of Hindu-Muslim unity. Mr. Gandhi has made heroic efforts, for political purposes, to bring the two peoples together in peace and concord, but almost always soon after unity is proclaimed an outbreak occurs. A year or so ago following one of these breaches Mr. Gandhi imposed upon himself a twenty days' fast, as an act of penance for India's cleansing. One wonders what the good man will do in the face of the present disorder, in some respects the most extensive that has happened.

"The Morning Cometh"

There are not a few signs that a new era for missions is near. "Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh, and also the night." These ancient words from Isaiah are perfectly applicable to present conditions here. On the one hand there is a strong movement Christward; and on the other, hostility towards all that bears his name. I have been talking with some missionaries who have recently returned from touring among the villages on their fields. They are filled with joy and hope. They tell of many baptisms, of conversations of the deepest interest, of victories won in which caste men and caste women have openly confessed and taken the great step. One such tale has just now been told to me of a Naidu convert, a fine up-standing man who is the father of four sons, coming of his own accord to the missionary and asking for baptism, taking his place along with candidates from the outcasts, the Malas and the Madigas, sitting on the same bench with them. No one who is unacquainted with caste-ridden India can appreciate what a scene like that means. Its plain message is that Christ is the leveller who breaks down the middle wall of partition between caste and outcast; who supplants hate, contempt and pride with love.

Our mission schools, however, are more and more being pressed with heavy conditions, reduced grants and extra requirements. Hospitals are coming in for their share of difficulties. One finds resentment in the hostile press that missionaries should seek to make converts at all, especially among the sick and the youth of the land. Let missionaries educate the young people; let missionaries doctor the patients, but let them beware of exerting religious influence! There are many shades of opinion and opposition. The propaganda goes on chiefly in cities, and from there outwards. There are societies at work whose definite object is to reconver Christians to Hinduism or Mohammedanism. Another recent development has come from a "retreat" which was carried on by some persons who thought it would be a good thing to get Christians and non-Christians together for a frank comparing of ideas and for framing a possible program. Among other things discussed, I understand, was the possibility of having an unbaptized church membership. Let no one be unduly disturbed over this item, even though it does look suspiciously like something now to the front in the Northern Baptist Convention. So far as I know, no Baptist attended the "retreat." Nor have I heard of any who have so far abandoned the great commission as to talk of "non-essentials."

Bishopville, Vepery, Madras.

The New Temple at Joliet, Ill.

AT THE time of the coming of Rev. Raymond S. Carman to the pastorate of the again united Baptist church July 1, 1923, the idea of a new and modern church edifice was in the hearts of many of the members. It is this idea, modified in some part, developed, but essentially the same, which bears fruit in the wonderful building recently dedicated.

In the autumn of 1923 no real concerted action had been taken. Mr. Carman, realizing the dangers of drifting, threw all the force of his personality into getting concrete form for unanimous ideas, and his leadership proved adequate to the task. By January, 1924, the floor plans were ready, and in February the church voted unanimously to proceed with the enterprise. From this has emerged the beautiful Tudor Gothic structure, representing a quarter million dollars, with its sunken garden, its three-story building for educational and recreational purposes, and its auditorium for worship.

From the narthex in the rear which is entered from the panelled and tiled cloister, one looks out upon a cathedral type of auditorium, whose organ chambers on either side at the front enclose an altar type of pulpit, choir and baptistry, the whole surmounted by a lovely hand carved reredos which conceals behind its panels the baptistry and choir loft. In the center of the reredos is an inlaid and illuminated cross.

Its stone mullioned and stone coign windows of high clerestory type of Bedford stone are set with graded imported amber cathedral glass offset by suggestive color panes and symbolic plaques and shed their light from above upon a room of such dignity and feeling, such purity of proportion, and such balance of form in beam and plaster, woodwork and stone, that to enter it is to feel the reverent sense of rest and worship.

The three-story edifice facing Clinton street provides complete facilities for class work and extra-class activities for the well organized and manned departments, each of which has its own assembly room and individual class rooms, but one of which have direct outside light.

The full standard size gymnasium, marked out for basketball, indoor baseball, and other games, has a clear height of twenty feet from the extreme edge of the floor to the nearest beams and twenty-six feet to the ceiling, the whole room being lighted by eight great skylights, and with 3000 watts of projected flood light by night. This room is also an auditorium, banquet hall, Sunday-school assembly hall, and is equipped for concerts, pictures, dramatics, lectures and assemblies, with galleries on two sides and space for 200 spectators of games.

Large locker rooms with individual metal lockers have been provided on separate floors for men and boys and girls and women. The shower rooms are built of glazed white tile and marble with hot water provided. All athletic toilet and shower facilities have been laid out on the specifications of the international committee of the Y.M.C.A.

The gymnasium is also a community hall with a well planned stage and galleries. The curtain and scenery are the product of one of the church's young men, Mr. Albert Siegrist. The lighting effects have been designed by Messrs. Leonard and Lester Jager, father and son, of the church membership. A dramatic club has been organized in the church for the presentation of plays.

The culinary arrangements include a kitchen with equipment designed by a hotel engineer, and two complete kitchenettes on the second and third floors.

The ladies' parlor, the young people's department, the custodian's apartment, all measure up to the high standard of quality of the entire building.

No such building as this could be the work of one man, nor of a dozen. Only the united membership of the church could have done it. But to the pastor and to Messrs. H. W. Spencer, E. T. Brewster, E. A. Brewster, J. Frank Whallon, Charles Shaw, and T. H. Bruce and to their willingness to sacrifice time and money and long hours of work this wonderful church edifice is a reward and a promise.

Detroit Baptist Doings

Annual Meeting Detroit Baptist Union

THE great event of the year among Baptists in Detroit is the annual meeting of the Detroit Baptist Union. This organization is what its name implies, a union of all the Baptist churches in the metropolitan area. It is an example of cooperative effort facing a challenge that only the most rapidly growing major city in the world affords.

As usual the meeting was held in the Woodward Avenue church, May 11, and the program occupied the time from 1:30 to 10 p. m. There were about 500 delegates present at the two sessions. The afternoon was given up to the transaction of necessary business, reports of the board of trustees, superintendents, affiliating organizations, missionary workers and pastors, and a general survey of the field and its needs. The treasurer reported expenditures for the year of over $300,000, while the addition to the churches was the largest ever reported. In the evening the ladies of the Woodward Avenue church served dinner.

A drive was launched for $50,000 for a new building for our Baptist Children's home. This is our latest denominational enterprise, and its growth has been far beyond the physical ability to care for. Its need is now widely recognized. The Detroit Community Union has recognized its place and efficiency and has made it one of its beneficiaries. It operates under state control so that the standard of service is of the highest save for inadequate accommodations. This, the proposed new building will supply. Substantial subscriptions are solicited that the new building may be gotten under way at the earliest possible date.

Doctor Gleiss presented the annual report of the board of trustees and the educational department in printed form, with a copy at every plate, but supplemented this by a running explanatory talk that made it even more vital in its meaning and comprehension.

Rev. A. V. Allen, pastor of the Jefferson Avenue church gave an illustrated lecture covering the history and personnel of the Detroit Baptist Union, and view of the various Baptist churches and missions—in part only—in the metropolitan district. It was keenly interesting, informing, and to many of the delegates a real revelation of the magnitude of our Baptist work in Detroit.

Death of Walter W. Smith

At the annual meeting of the Detroit Baptist Union a letter of loving appreciation, after earnest prayer in his behalf offered by his pastor, Doctor Hoag, was sent to our brother Walter W. Smith, then in Grace hospital. Tuesday morning following, May 18, the Master called him home. The funeral was largely attended from the family

R. S. Carman, pastor of First church, Joliet, Ill., and the new building, recently dedicated

residence in Vinsetta Park on May 20. Doctor Hoag and Doctor Hoben, president of Kalamazoo college, were present.

For forty years Mr. Smith had lived in Detroit. He is remembered as an eminent business man; a constructive Christian; a member of Woodward Avenue church, where he had filled nearly every position of responsibility to chairman of the board of deacons and chairman of the board of trustees; for four years president of the Detroit Baptist Union; a trustee of Kalamazoo college; treasurer of the Michigan Baptist Convention for four years; member board of directors of the Y. M. C. A. and the only president of the Detroit real estate board who was ever elected without opposition. He was quiet, retiring, but effective in all his plans and purposes. He will be greatly missed. He leaves a wife, a son and wife, daughter and a grandson.

A Centenary Occasion

One hundred years ago the first cooperative effort among Michigan Baptists was effected by the organization of the Michigan Baptist Association, when only four feeble pioneer churches existed in the territory of Michigan then on the frontier. The four churches were Pontiac, Stony Creek, Troy and Farmington. The First church, Detroit, had not as yet been organized. Many years later the association changed its name to the Detroit Baptist Association, its present name. Pontiac in the meantime has joined the Wayne Association, a later organization. The Stony Creek and Troy churches have gone out of existence. Farmington is being born again. In the First church, Detroit, the centenary of the association will be observed on October 6-8. An historical program is in preparation, and an outstanding event is anticipated. Historical facts and documents are solicited for the exhibits features.

Among the Churches

The First church has purchased a large residence and lot just west of the present church property on Pingree avenue, and a modern social and educational unit is planned. Great apartment houses are springing up, meagre in space, practically compelling their occupants to seek their social and especially their religious life elsewhere. Dr. Sanborn, the pastor, is leading in this enlarged work.

Bethel church, (formerly First German) has purchased a new site on Mack avenue, in the Indian village, and is preparing to build a modern meeting house which will be one of the best in Detroit.

Plans are in preparation for new houses of worship for Jefferson avenue (auditorium), River Rouge, Grand River avenue and Ferndale. These are important and prosperous fields. Birmingham is also facing a new building proposition.

Warren Avenue church has decided to remain in its present field to enlarge and to make an effort to meet the needs of its changing environment.

The work among the negroes of Detroit is enlarging. The Christian center will have its closing exercises within a few days. It is doing a splendid work, but enlargements in building and staff are badly needed. It is expected that the advisory council will consider this problem at its annual meeting held in June in the Calvary church.

Annual Meeting of the New England District, W. A. B. H. M. S.

BY GRACE B. FRYER

THE annual meeting of the New England district of the Woman's American Home Mission Society was held in the First church, Worcester, Mass., Apr. 28.

The district president, Mrs. W. J. Budgell, had charge of the devotional service. Annual reports were read, and the following officers were elected for the coming year: Honorary president, Mrs. George W. Coleman, Boston; president, Mrs. W. J. Budgell, Somerville, Mass.; first vice president, Mrs. W. H. Jones, Portland, Maine; missionary vice-president, Mrs. G. A. Miles, West Somerville, Mass.; recording secretary, Mrs. A. E. Watkins, Arlington, Mass.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. S. Budgell, Newton Highlands, Mass.; treasurer, Miss S. M. Hayward, Malden, Mass.

The silver candlestick given by Mrs. Florence G. Thomas in memory of her daughter who was killed on her way to teach at an Americanization meeting, was presented by Mrs. Ivan S. Nowlan to Mrs. Wakefield for the state of Rhode Island which had the best record for Christian Americanization during the year.

The loving cup was presented by Mrs. W. J. Budgell, district president, to Mrs. C. W. Corey for the state of Maine which had the best record for the reading contest during the year. Mrs. H. W. White, the district chairman of the reading contest, states, "Of more importance than the gain in the number of points registered last year in the reading contest of the New England district is the decided increase in the number of churches reported reading. Even as in one state where the number of points reported shows no gain, the number of churches reading has increased eightfold. Our goal for 1926-1927 is, every church in the district reading and reporting."

Mrs. Katherine S. Westfall gave an address, "A Lighthouse in Alaska," which was followed by a Golden Anniversary hour conducted by Mrs. W. H. Jones, of Maine, district chairman.

Tree posters from each state showed progress in leaves turning to gold. Chairman from each state reported on the success of the campaign under their leadership. Rhode Island was the only state to go over the top in pledges. Massachusetts has paid in $24,949.40, which is more than any other state. All seemed confident of ultimate success.

An honor gift of a bough was presented to the district president, Mrs. W. J. Budgell, from four Boston associations.

The White Cross ushers of the district presented a bough to their chairman, Mrs. A. C. Reynolds, to be used for a scholarship in the Baptist Missionary Training school of which she was formerly a dean. This will be known as the Mary C. Reynolds' scholarship.

Student Aggressiveness

BY FRANK H. LEAVELL

FOR four scholastic years we have been promoting a distinctly student religious program. Whenever we have called upon the students themselves for cooperation we have received even more than we have asked. Among Baptist students of the South there has been an expressed willingness to follow Baptist leadership. Two special weeks were set aside for student emphasis this spring. They are interesting.

Student Evangelistic Week

At the state conferences last fall the students voted, in every state, their willingness to promote a week of distinctly student evangelistic work. Feb. 14-19, 1926, was the week. A program with suggestions for each day's activity was sent to the schools. A full week of preparation was suggested. All day and all night prayer meetings were included. This was not to be a week of evangelistic preaching—or a meeting. It was distinctly student personal effort.

The program was sent to only forty nine selected schools. From forty schools we have received reports. A number of schools held the all-day and all-night prayers. More had all-day prayer. Practically all observed the week of preparation. The largest victory nineteen won, was at a school having all night prayers. The results show that 646 students agreed to do personal work that week. There were 344 unsaved persons listed as possibilities to be won. A total of 289 were spoken to. The reports show 105 confessions of Christ. In the years to come these numbers, most gratifying as they are, may be multiplied (Some schools postponed the week's emphasis, while others had conflicts precluding it.)

Vocational Emphasis Week

The other week's emphasis is that of vocational emphasis, Apr. 19-24, 1926. This is promoted jointly by the education board and the inter-board commission. A program for chapel exercise for the week was prepared and sent to all Baptist schools. It was sent also to the Baptist pastors where state schools are located with suggestions for use there.

This effort was for the purpose of leading students to face the necessity of choosing their life's work and taking their college work in preparation therefor. The subjects for the chapel lectures were: "The Necessity of Individual Choice of a Vocation"; "The Different Fields and Your Choice"; "The Various Talents and Your Choice"; "Difficulties (Temptations) Surrounding Your Choice"; "The Decision—Your Choice."

All Southern Baptist Student Conference

Plans, promotion and program are well under way for the great South-wide Baptist ist student conference to be held in Birmingham, Oct. 28-31, 1926. We are seeing the necessity of making this an all-denomination effort. We shall need the cooperation of students, schools, boards, school churches, home churches, parents, pastors, newspapers, conventions and assemblies. Response and cooperation thus far is 100 per cent.

Beautiful June

JUNE always reminds us of Newton. It is then that the Social Union dines its faculty and senior class, and we have trial speakers who speak to us from the angle of the wide world, and from the smaller circle of the students. It is also then that the wonderful old hill assumes its ravishing June decorations, and beautifies the approving smiles of the large and happy commencement company. After so long having the "Horr habit," now strange will the anniversary seem without him, but how many will be there gratefully remember him, and love him! But we are thrilled by the announcement of President Faunce as the baccalaureate preacher; and Dr. Richard Cabot as the orator. This is written before anything has happened, merely anticipation. We are sure of the majestic glory of old Lewton Hill, and full of anticipation as we look forward to "Newton night," as baccalaureate preacher, the "beloved physician" orator, and the "boys."

William Wallace Everts

The passing of Rev. W. W. Everts, May 14, in his seventy-eighth year, calls attention to a man of beautiful character, and uncommon mental acquisition. He was well born, wisely trained, and soundly consistent. He was named for his father, who in his generation, was an outstanding Baptist leader in the Middle West. The son resembled the father more in intellectual quality and accomplishment than in aggressive, achieving leadership. But his path was his own, and his character and record high and creditable. He was as sturdy and clear in his conviction as he was in frankness in avowing it. We never knew, nor cared, just where he belonged among the different "contestants" for the faith. We were certain that the spirit of Christ was in him, and keeping him in a realm entirely above our pitifully superficial theological classifications. Always there was kindness in his most emphatic avowals, and you never could draw out of him one bitter or brotherly word about the men with whom he differed. He was a pattern of charity and helpfulness—"an Israelite indeed in whom there was no guile," and helper whose vigilance never slept.

He was a genius in out-of-the-way investigation. Competently armed with the modern languages, he would burrow into the libraries, with a feel for the old brilliants of literature, that he loved enthusiastically to share with his brethren. He never came in without leaving riches behind him, both in the radiance of his own purity, and the opulence of his mind and Christian nature. Dr. de Blois, his longtime pastor, gladly came all the way from Philadelphia to the funeral, and, inspired by his subject, pronounced as truthfully perfect a tribute as we ever heard.

There are two uses of life widely different. You can make of it an endless comedy, or a glorious achievement. The first was Horace Walpole's way: "That flippant dilettante, who trifled away his existence, and never really lived at all," as Gamaliel Bradford analyzed him. Everts chose the better way: to turn his face, high-gifted and friendly to life, helping others and making the world better; permitting no sorrow or calamity to dearest ones ever to quench his triumphant consecration. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

Some News Bits

Sometimes a Baptist church strikes it rich: gets more in its minister than ever before, and finds a double blessing in the minister's wife. The whole town appreciates the unusual enrichment, and there comes such response both in church enlargement and community welfare as has not been known in fifty years. That is just the two years' experience of the church at Hyannis "down on the Cape," under the leadership of Pastor and Mrs. Frank M. Holt. They make an effective team. Mrs. Holt is expert in high-grade religious teaching, regularly writes for our Adult Leader, specializing in leadership of women. The whole community is responding to such wise, mature and competent service as Pastor and Mrs. Holt are giving them.

Rev. H. Eugenius Hodge long time pastor at Winchester, and later at First church, Everett, is happy with a new wife, Miss Evelyn Ames Leach of Everett, and a new church. He goes to Putnam, Conn. Thus from its surplus of good ministers, the old Bay State sends one of its best to the "land of steady habits." We have none better than "Eugenius."

From deftly driving a double team a long time as pastor of the Federated church at Hudson, Pastor Herbert B. Francis takes a simpler task, but with more people, at the Third church, Fall River. His tactful discipline will come in well in a plain Baptist church, and his characteristic devotion will do the rest.

Ill health compels Rev. Nathan Bailey of the North church, New Bedford to resign. His fourteen years there, added to his substantial previous pastorates in the state, have made a veteran of him. May his old vigor come back!

The Baptist Home

It has been a keen delight to watch the great "drive" for the Baptist home, just to see it go. It is going over the top by such enthusiasm and such leading and pushing as you do not often see or feel. Dr. Charles H. Moss is the "big chief," Harry A. Gilman, secretary of the Social Union, and Deacon Edgar Rhodes of Tremont Temple, are the great "braves." How the eyes of Deacons Chipman and Wentworth, the original lifters of the long ago, would glister, to see the Temple people and the churches, so nobly lifting in this beautiful charity, under such leaders! $800,000 is the figure; $300,000 for building and equipment, and $500,000 for annuities and ultimate endowment. Two-thirds of both amounts, at this date, are raised, and churches all through the state are warming up. "It can never be done!" exclaimed some of our solid Baptist citizens. Other citizens just as solid are exclaiming, "It shall be done!" It now looks as if all would rejoice together in the triumph, as the beautiful home is built.

Two More Departed Ministers

The first is Rev. Asa E. Reynolds, aged eighty-six, who was buried from the Winter Hill church, Somerville, May 24. For some months he had been failing. In the days of his earlier strength he had strong pastorates at Natick and Wallingford, Conn., and at Cambridge, Mass. He was a man of scholarly habit and attainment, and of even pulpit ability. He was in Colgate in the early sixties—the period of William Newton Clarke, John Peddie, Monson A. Wilcox, Zelotes Grenell, and John James Lewis—they were a rare company. His widow is Mrs. Mary E. Reynolds, so long the inspirer of our home mission women. Theirs was a long comradeship of high purpose, and congenial occupation.

Rev. Arthur P. Wedge passed very suddenly, May 24, when he seemed in the prime of his powers. He came to us from the Free Baptists at the time of the denominational reunion, and was always welcomed in our pulpits as stated or occasional supply. He long was a government supervisor of our American Indian schools, but followed his calling as minister for love of it. With warm spiritual nature, he was loyal to the master, and beloved and enjoyed by his brethren.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Connecticut

THE annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Connecticut was held May 13 at the First church of New Haven. In addition to routine business, the session included speakers, music and intervals of prayer.

The poster contest in which the various committees described their special lines of work by means of a distinctive poster, was won by Mrs. J. F. Barton, superintendent of the Overland White Cross work. Her slogan was, "Don't stop the train for Mather, but don't forget to start the train for 'Over all the land.'"

Rev. J. V. Napash of the International college of East Orange, N. J., drew a graphic picture of the Baptists of Russia. Miss Jennie L. Reilly gave an address, "What are you doing for the women of South India?" Miss Goldie Bailey who is stationed at the Kodiak orphanage in Alaska, described the life there. Miss Jenkins, a Connecticut missionary in Japan, told of her work, and Miss Elsie Ford pointed out the new and great opportunity for work in Connecticut.

The Golden anniversary was stressed by an exercise, "The Talking Tree," given by the World Wide guild of the First church, New Haven. This was supplemented by Mrs. J. H. Morshead, state campaign director, who stated that Connecticut is making good her part in the anniversary gift and now stands second in the New England district in the percentage of the quota raised. This has been largely due to the work of Miss Ellen P. Hubbell, state financial secretary.

Eight churches received certificates for church schools of missions while sixty-one reported taking part in the national reading contest.

At this time the society learned with regret of the resignation of two of its members: Mrs. J. B. Kent of Putnam, who had served the Woman's Foreign Society in Connecticut for thirty-three years and for twenty-five years was state secretary of the National Woman's Foreign Society, and Mrs. C. E. Burleson, associational secretary who had worked in the association for twenty-five years.

The members mourn the death of younger workers: Miss Lucretia Page, W. W. G. secretary of the Hartford association, and Mrs. Rena Stanton Smith, C. W. C. secretary of the New Haven association.

He responded to Lincoln's first call for volunteers in 1861, and served through four years of the Civil war.

In 1866 he married Miss Lydia Ann Gates, the girl he left behind when he entered the service. They went at once to Ames, where he became its first grocery merchant. In 1872 he became a traveling salesman for a Johnstown, N. Y., hat and glove house, in which field he continued for forty years.

In his early years Captain Brown was an ardent supporter of abolition, and later enlisted in the cause of prohibition, in the interest of which he made public addresses in nearly every town in Iowa and in surrounding states. He was twice nominated for governor of Iowa on the Prohibition ticket.

The first Mrs. Brown died in 1885. He later married Margaret Mitchell, who, with four children survives him. One daughter, Lydia Brown Hipps, died in 1924, in Shanghai, China. The other children, all of whom were with their father at his death, are Mrs. Lillie Brown Loughran, of Chicago; Dr. Gates M. Brown, of Dayton, Iowa; Harry F. Brown, of Ames; and Miss Daisy Brown, now studying at the University of Chicago, on furlough from her work in the Y. W. C. A. mission field in China.

Captain Brown was a charter member of the First Baptist church of Ames, and secured the ground on which the present building stands. The three passions of his life were his home, the church, and the furtherance of the cause of temperance in Iowa.

Funeral services were held May 2, at the First church, in charge of the pastor, Rev. R. B. Davidson. Among the organizations which attended were a delegation from the Gideons, the local G. A. R., the Daughters of Veterans, and the Women's Relief Corps.

Here, There and Everywhere

DR. A. W. BEAVEN of Rochester, N. Y., gave the address at the banquet given on May 20 by the city association of Cleveland, Ohio. It was held in the Masonic temple and attended by nearly 500 persons.

DR. HENRY TRALLE of New York City supplied the First church of Seattle, Wash., on May 23 and 30.

THE BEGINNER'S DEPARTMENT of the new church edifice at Joliet, Ill., Rev. Ray S. Carman, pastor, is already proving inadequate. The great building teems with life. The vacation school runs from June 14—July 9.

THE WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA Baptist Young People's Assembly will be held at the Kiskiminetas Springs school, Saltsburg, Pa., July 12-19, Rev. Raymond G. Pierson, 1249 Peermont ave., dean. The Eastern Assembly will be at Ursinus college, Collegeville, Rev. F. W. Tomlinson, 1701 Chestnut st., Philadelphia, dean. Twenty courses of study in Bible, evangelism, stewardship, history, missions, psychology and methods in Sunday school and young people's work will be given under excellent instructors. Rev. Floyd L. Carr of New York and Rev. C. Wallace Petty of Pittsburgh will be among the evening speakers at the Kiski assembly and Rev. K. De Blois, D.D., New York and Rev. J. Sherman Wallace, Philadelphia, at the Collegeville assembly.

REV. AND MRS. DRYDEN LINSLEY PHELPS announce the birth of a daughter, Edith Margaret, Apr. 3, 1926, in Chengtu, West China. She is the granddaughter of Doctor and Mrs. Arthur Stevens Phelps, niece of Celeste Phelps Morse, grand niece of Rev. Dryden William Phelps and Prof. William Lyon Phelps. Mr. Phelps is a professor in Union university, Cheng Tu, where he went with his bride in 1921. Mrs. Phelps is the daughter of Rev. Hallenbeck, professor in San Anselmo seminary.

DR. AND MRS. ARTHUR STEVENS PHELPS sailed for Central America, May 19. They will visit their brother, Prof. William Lyon Phelps, in New Haven, Conn., and their son and daughter, Prof. and Mrs. Marston Morse of Cambridge, Mass. Professor Morse has been called to teach in Harvard university.

FIRST CHURCH, Wichita, Kan., has adopted a budget for missions for the coming year equal to that of current expense. At the annual meeting of the church, May 11, the financial report showed that the net expenditures of the church for the year had been $58,088.48. While the records show that the church had given more for itself than for missions this is not the case for there has gone to missionary work direct from various departments sufficient money to make the missionary giving of the church equal to that of current expense. The Bible school average attendance for the past fiscal year was 959. The men's Bible class of which the pastor, Rev. W. H. Rogers, is teacher and which meets in one of the down town theatres, has averaged 223. There have been 294 additions to the church during the year. The membership is now 1902. Mr. Rogers assumed this pastorate last September. The membership of the church is divided into eighty-eight groups over each of which is a captain, and by this organization the pastor and staff are able to keep in touch with the entire membership.

DR. HOMER J. VOSBURGH is now president of the Baptist Pastor's conference of Los Angeles and vicinity.

AN ECCLESIASTICAL COUNCIL was called to consider the advisability of setting apart Howard Paskl Weatherbee, pastor-elect to the Mount Holly church (Vt.), to the gospel ministry. Rev. W. A. Davison of Burlington was elected moderator and Rev. Wm. C. Dudley of North Springfield, clerk. The council was composed of the pastors and delegates from the churches of the Woodstock Association. Brother Weatherbee related his Christian experience, call to the ministry and views on Christian doctrine. The council recommended that the church proceed to ordain. Parts were taken by Brothers Brown, Bowser, Dudley, Wood, Rankin, Michelson, Maxwell, and Pomfrey.

NINETY-SIX WOMEN and girls sat down to the first annual Mother and Daughter banquet of the Community Church of Dover, Idaho, on the evening of May 14. The young ladies' class furnished and prepared the banquet, and a number of young men did the serving.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Elgin, Ill., Rev. A. C. Tunison, minister, raised $32,138 last year of which $5857 was for missions. 7000 was paid on the building and organ fund. Only 4 per cent of the pledges made for these funds are delinquent.

THE FIFTY-NINTH COMMENCEMENT of Storer college at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., was held May 29—June 3. Annual sermon was by President W. J. Clark of Virginia Union university.

THE CLOSING EXERCISES of Spelman college of Atlanta, Ga., were held May 23—June 2. Annual sermon by Rev. D. D. Crawford of Atlanta.

REV. E. J. SMITH, student pastor of Iowa City, Iowa, was the preacher at the Iowa State Teachers college on May 9.

REV. ALEX REXION of Magna, Utah, ministers to a church of thirty members in a Mormon community. During the past year parsonage costing $2500 was secured, $670 was raised for salary and an aggressive work was carried on. The meetinghouse is only 18x30 feet and the average Sunday school is sixty-five with a maximum attendance of 125.

ON MAY 11, Rev. F. W. Fitzpatrick, pastor of the church at Belmont, N. H., was presented a five passenger Buick sedan by loving parishioners. With the car was handed over a balance of $400 cash after the machine had been secured from the "love gift fund." Reverend Fitzpatrick has been with these people fourteen years and has served the community wisely.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Omaha, Neb., Dr. A. DeLarme, minister, raised $42,046 for all purposes last year. Eighty-nine new members were received, fifty-four by baptism. The pastor was given a sixth raise salary on the tenth anniversary of his work with the church and with his wife was sent to Washington with all expenses paid.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH, Rochester, N. Y., Rev. Clinton Wunder, minister, raised $12,000 for all purposes last year. The offerings amounted to $12,000. 181 new members were added. There are twelve paid assistants to the minister. This church is sending twenty-five delegates to Washington and recently broke a precedent by electing a woman, Miss Marguerite Snyder, to the board of trustees.

THE CHURCH at Eugene, Ore., Rev. C. Trawin, minister, has begun the erection of a new edifice to cost $100,000. 118 new members have been received during the first seven months.

THE BETHEL CHURCH, Kalamazoo, Mich., Rev. H. S. Bullock, pastor, has installed a new lighting system, taken steps to secure pipe organ and reports seventeen additions to membership by baptism. The past has been here seven years.

THE CHURCH at McMinnville, Ore., Dr. E. E. Henry, minister, is taking active steps to resume building operations and to complete its new edifice.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Fairfield, Maine, Rev. Alex. Henderson, minister, paid its missionary quota in full by adding from the current expense funds enough to make up the deficit. Splendid action. It should become contagious.

THE FIRST CHURCH of Greenville, Pa., Rev. H. W. Funk, pastor, received sixty-six new members last year, forty-seven being by baptism.

THE TABERNACLE CHURCH of Bloomington, Ind., five years old, has 150 members, and has completed a new edifice costing $14,000 free of debt. Rev. Rollo C. Speer of Milwaukee will preach the dedication sermon.

FIFTY NEW MEMBERS were welcomed into the First church of Springfield, Mass., the first Sunday in May.

THE SIXTY-FIRST annual commencement of Ottawa university was held May 28-June 2. Baccalaureate sermon by President J. Erdman Smith and graduation oration by President D. D. Weeks of Bacone college.

MR. JACOB H. FLAMING, missionary of the American Sunday School Union working out of Marshall, Minn., was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry, May 18, at Minneota, Minn. The council was called by the Minneota church, of which the candidate was a member, and was attended by delegates from the churches at Breckenridge, Montevideo, Granite Falls, Canby, Lake Benton, and Tyler Danish. Rev. Chas. H. Davies was made moderator and Rev. Albert Mygatt clerk of the council. Rev. E. A. Valiant of the state convention staff was chosen to lead in the examination, which was thorough. The candidate gave a good account for himself, and the vote to ordain was unanimous and enthusiastic. The ordination services proper were held in the evening, the following having part: sermon, Rev. A. F. Malmberg; prayer of ordination, Rev. Sorenson; presentation of certificate, Rev. C. H. Davies; charge to the candidate, Rev. Albert Mygatt; charge to the people, Rev. E. A. Valiant. Rev. Jesse Rickel is pastor of the entertaining church.

PASTOR A. H. C. MORSE of the First church, Denver, Colo., gave the hand of fellowship to twenty on May 2 and baptized three others.

PASTOR W. H. GARFIELD of Webster City, Iowa, makes a special effort to dramatize Bible stories in his Sunday evening services. These dramatic monologs draw large audiences. The drama sermon and the pageant are also used.

THE CHURCH AT CLARION, PA., has voted a salary increase of $250 for its pastor, Rev. Wayland Zwayer.

REV. WALTER I. FOWLE gave the hand of fellowship to more than thirty new members at Greeley, Colo., during May.

REV. R. C. SPEER of the Tabernacle church, Milwaukee, Wis., baptized thirty-one persons during the past year.

New Books

The English-Speaking Peoples, by Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield. New York: Abingdon Press. 50 cents.

An address of fifty-eight pages in which the historical place and mission of England and America is set forth. A challenge to every Christian is found in its commanding message from one of Methodism's great bishops. It is a call to world-vision and lofty internationalism.

—JOHN SHADE FRANKLIN.

To Measure of a Youth, by Rollin H. Ayres. New York: Abingdon Press. 75 cents.

A series of eight stimulating addresses full of wise and practical advice to the young people, aiming to steady and guide them in solving many of their problems, choosing a life vocation, and finding the Jesus way of living. The author's approach is that of the pastor who has had considerable experience with students and other young people. The idealism, heroism, ambition, noble disposition of youth are their primary assets, and constitute them the capitalized hope of the world.

—W. C. DEER.

Enduring Salvation, by Charles Forbes Taylor. New York: Revell. $1.

Charlie Taylor, the "boy evangelist" of a few years ago, gives another volume of typical revival sermons. You may find a few new stories or illustrations. The sermons are good of their kind, and if you like this kind of book, why, this is one of the books you will like.

—FRED E. DEAN.

Ten Greatest Words about Jesus, by C. Masee. New York: Doran. $1.50.

A fine marshaling of the witnesses of the Gospel to the messiahship and deity of Jesus. Ten of them are called, making a deep impression; the angel, the forerunner, the baptizer, the critics, etc. Each brings out in a clear way Jesus as God-man. It is a new and striking presentation of Jesus' claim for himself.

—J. W. CLEVENGER.

Living On Immortality—Reflections on the Life Beyond, by Clarence Edward Macartney. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.50.

This book is written from a very conservative point of view as is everything of this author's concerning religion. "Reflections" too often become arguments for a theological position. They are unconvincing. The writer shows poor judgment in selecting his subject in presenting it. But in spite of its faults the book has value. It will doubtless be widely read because of the common interest in the subject of immortality.

—JAMES R. SHANKS.

The House of God, by Ernest H. Short; illustrated. New York: Macmillan. $7.50. It is with the ever-changing experience of man, bodied forth in ever-varying architectural and sculptural forms, that this story of 'The House of God' is concerned. It seeks to show how the chief manifestations of religious art are connected with outstanding social, political and geographical circumstances; to gauge the emotions and thoughts embodied in various types of buildings, and the actions and reactions which created the different national styles; always striving to penetrate through the artistic production to the intellectual and emotional circumstances which shaped it and vitalized it. Convinced of the general sameness of human lot through the ages, we would know how the human constants—hunger and labor, seed-time and harvest, love and death, faith and doubt, operated to produce this temple or that cathedral. Though the primary interest is Christian, no religious architecture is excluded." This in brief gives the purpose of the book, but it is only a study of the book itself that can give any idea of its scope and of its fascination as revealing the striving after God through the ages. The pages are ten by six inches—which gives length to display better the half-tone illustrations of houses of worship the world over. There are 110 illustrations.

There is nothing of the technical architectural book about "The House of God"—it is a fascinatingly told story of how man has attempted to express his faith in stone and marble, by line and design. It most charmingly imparts all manner of worth-while information. For instance: "Many of the Christian churches in the days of Michael Angelo were built from the ruins of the Roman buildings—such as the baths of Diocletian." We learn that the use of the column and the arch started with Diocletian. "The Pantheon is beautiful and original in a high degree. But behind its sublime unity and brooding loveliness lies the wonder of the engineering skill of the Roman builders to which its invention testifies. This is the organization which the Romans added to the artistic insight of the Greeks. Thanks to Rome, architecture was fitted for many purposes which had not arisen earlier. . . . The use of cement for walls and domes dates from about the first century B. C."

"When religion became the sport of political factions, the religious arts suffered. Apart from a diminished art fund, the enthusiasm of believers turned from the expression of religious emotion to controversial theology and other side-issues of belief. The Reformation mood had such an effect, direct and indirect, upon religious architecture that between 1520, the date of Bath Abbey, and 1670, when Wren commenced to build St. Paul's, say 150 years, no great church or cathedral was built in England."

These brief quotations taken at random give but a faint suggestion of the interesting contents and the beautiful style of the work.

Chapter headings give the best clue to the detailed contents: The First God's House; Ancient Egypt; Pyramid Temples; The Legacy of Greece; Jewish Faith and Roman Organization; Coming of Christianity; Churches of Eastern Christendom; Art of Ancient India and China; Islands of the North; Architecture of Islam; Romanesque Architecture in Italy, France and Germany; French Gothic; Norman Architecture in England; English Gothic; German and Spanish Gothic; Post-Reformation Architecture; Religious Architecture in the Nineteenth Century.

come pastor of the Linden Avenue church of Dayton, Ohio.

THE CHURCH at Anoka, Minn., Rev. L. E. Brough, minister, raised $5432 for all purposes last year. There was a net increase of fifty in the membership which now is 390.

At ORD, NEB., 25 persons signed the tithers' covenant and at Kearney, Neb., 213 were enlisted as tithers. Both campaigns were led by Rev. B. B. Braden of Grand Island.

IN THE WINTER of 1923 Dr. Birney S. Hudson, after closing a successful pastorate with the Free Street church of Portland, Maine, came to Los Angeles to visit relatives and to spend a few months in Southern California. The Temple church was then seeking an associate pastor. Doctor Hudson was offered the position and he has filled it with distinction. Now that Doctor Brougher has gone to Oakland, Doctor Hudson has announced his purpose to retire at an early date. He should be invited to the pastorate of a strong church for he ranks with our most efficient men. He supplied the pulpit of the First church of Oakland while Doctor Brougher was at the Washington convention.

A NATION-WIDE movement to serve the unchurched patients in hospitals has recently been started by the Corning (N. Y.) Ministerial Association. The movement has grown out of the hospital experience of one of its members, Rev. Walter F. Cranston. The plan is to appoint a pastor, or other recognized religious leader in a given community, to have charge for one month. He is to call to his aid such personal workers as may be needed. Regular visits twice a week are suggested, and emergency calls when needed. The local ministers' union is to serve as the unit of organization for carrying on the work. The movement has met with favorable response from hospital authorities and the press. Full information can be secured by addressing Rev. Walter F. Cranston, Beaver Dams, N. Y.

a faculty made up of Christian men; the Bible may be included in the curriculum, and yet the institution not be Christian. Christian teachers make an atmosphere which shows Christ at work in human life. Such a college conserves the faith of the households. The denominational college should strengthen the denomination which supports it, and train workers of power who shall add efficiency to its ministry. Such workers can never be supplied by all the state institutions of the land.

President Million presented a printed report showing the number of missionaries sent out by nine Baptist colleges. The list was impressive and heartened those who feared that our colleges were failing to supply men and women with missionary outlook. Of these, one college has sent out nearly one hundred missionaries, seventeen of whom have gone in the last ten years. Des Moines university had its long list hung where all could see it, as a vivid witness of the truth which its president proclaimed.

The speaker also called attention to the increasing share which students are compelled to bear of their own education and the need of increased endowment if opportunities are to be given for education such as the past generation knew.

Rev. F. B. Igler spoke with confidence of the number of college teachers who believe the degree which the college gives to be small value unless Christian motives are inculcated in the student as well. He drew a skillful picture of the interests which claim student lives outside the curriculum, but added that these apparently absorbing interests are shot through with the influence of high-minded teachers and with the conscious presence of Jesus Christ. Then Mr. Igler turned to the other side and in a paragraph of great impressiveness summoned students to bear witness of those home factors which determined the bent of college life, all the way from the student who declared himself an "agnostic" to the student who, with greater intelligence, declared that he had never been able to get away from the teachings of a Sunday-school teacher who made Jesus Christ real to him. The Northern Baptist Convention is trying to preserve the ideals of Christ before these men and women who are spending their student days under new surroundings.

Dr. Allyn K. Foster, himself a worker among students, proposed that the address in some way be given the constituents of the denomination.

The report of the committee on social service, prepared by Rev. U. M. McGuire, was read by Pres. Clifton D. Gray of Bates college. After paying just tribute to Prof. Albion W. Small and Dr. Samuel Zane Batten, the report declared that more and more Christian ideals are permeating society, and human values are coming to be recognized as the supreme values of the social order.

The Baptists are proud to own as one of their number the president of the American Federation of Labor, who bore testimony that Baptist teaching had been good for him as a boy, good for him as a man, and good for him as a leader of American labor.

Excerpts from the address by William Green, follow: "The Baptist church is a sturdy church and all during its career it has triumphed the indomitable courage, iron will and firm conviction of its founder in America, Roger Williams. It has made great progress in the face of great obstacles and tremendous difficulties. It has increased its numerical strength in a most surprising way and has carried out a most progressive educational policy, as represented in the establishment and maintenance of numerous schools, colleges and universities.

"The Bible states that the common people heard the teachings of the master gladly. So, it seems, the Baptist denomination has ever made a strong appeal to the masses of the people. Its membership has been drawn from the ranks of working people who seemed to be attracted to the teachings and doctrine of this great denomination.

"While it is true you are the chosen representatives of a great religious organization, in a larger sense you are more than that. You are the spokesmen andponents of a great cause. It is difficult to give expression to those spiritual emotions and feelings which move men and women to accept the teachings and doctrine of the Bible. They are deep, indescribable and undefinable. This cause has influenced the lives of people and has called forth acts of heroism and devotion in its behalf and for its sake. It has been impossible for the casual observer to understand the sacrificial acts of men and women who have been inspired and moved by the cause which you represent.

"We cannot ignore the fact that there is a lack of personal contact between the masses of the people and the church organizations. The cause for this state of affairs is found in the feelings of distrust that have arisen and developed out of the clashes which have occurred between capital and labor. If working men and women could be made to understand that the church was sympathetic to their righteous aspirations and would show interest in their material welfare, corresponding to the interest manifested in their spiritual welfare, there would be no doubt, a much larger number of working men and women identified with and connected with the church.

"The growth of industry and the increase in the wealth of earnings of corporations and individuals have tended to increase the difficulties of the church and labor. This is due to the fact that many men of wealth and power, highly influential in the business and industrial world, prominent members of the church, have failed to apply the principles of religion in their business dealings and in their relationships between employers and employees. The work of the church would be easier if the common problems of industry were correctly solved. For that reason it is clearly evident that the church cannot escape its responsibility and can it remain aloof, ignoring the problems which have developed out of our ever-expanding, industrial life. . . .

Missionaries (to China) have been used if many of the capitalists who control and dominate industrial affairs are representatives of Christianity. These missionaries have been asked to explain why these men coming from Christian countries, men who profess Christianity, should not apply Christian principles and Christian practices in their dealings and in their relationships with Chinese workers. The church must demand that Christianity should not only be taught and professed but also that it must be applied in human, industrial and business relationships.

"While it may be impossible for the church and labor to be in accord on all matters, there are some great humane undertakings which compel cooperation and coordination. The greatest of these is the policy of the American Federation of Labor which has for its purpose the conservation of child life and the protection of children. This is a subject which is very near and dear to all the membership of organized labor and a subject in which the church ought to be greatly interested and in support of which it should be untiringly active. . . .

"These two powerful organizations, these two great forces, the church and labor, ought to be strong enough to overcome the prejudice which seems to exist, to dispel the ignorance which clouds the minds of people and to go triumphantly forward in the achievement of this great humane purpose, the adoption of the Child Labor amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Their efforts will be given impetus and they will be assisted by the numerous progressive, public-minded groups which are giving close study to this question and the best and quickest way of solving it. . . .

"Let us strive together, the church and organized labor, in making the lives of the people brighter and better, in bringing both material and spiritual blessings into their lives and into their homes! Let us unite in a common effort, developing a citizenship of such a high standing as to guarantee the perpetuity of American principles and American institutions."

The stalwart form of the great labor leader, his passionate utterance, his evident conviction and his large Christian sympathies made this an outstanding address. We are proud to claim him as one of us.

At 4:40 the convention went into business session, President J. Milner Wilbur presiding on the part of the board of education. The nominating committee offered its report and on motion the following officers were elected for the board: President, J. Milner Wilbur, of Pennsylvania; vice-president, J. M. Wells, of Nebraska; secretary, Rev. R. A. Ashworth, of New York.

The report of the committee of nine on the report of the advisory committee was made by Dr. D. J. Evans of Kansas City, Mo. Doctor Evans reported progress and left the continuation of the work of the committee to the convention. The report brought forth hearty applause and on motion of Dr. H. N. Gleiss the committee was discharged. While the vote was far from unanimous, the convention seemed to breathe a sigh of relief when this was done.

The session closed with prayer by Dr. Baker of the board of education.

Tuesday evening Dr. Harry S. Myers gave one of his inimitable stereopticon lectures on: "Whose I Am and Whom I Serve." It was a lecture on stewardship, the value of which was found in the great things which it purchased in human life and spiritual values in mission lands.

Mr. Percy Foster, who is senior deacon of Immanuel Baptist church, the National Memorial to Roger Williams, introduced the choir of the church who enriched the hour with two songs. Then Mr. Foster took the congregation over the border into the Southern territory by asking them to sing one of the real songs of the South, "On Jordan's Stormy Banks I Stand."

At this point the Ohio delegation interrupted the session by asking for a few minutes. They used their brief time for the cheering of the president of the convention, Mr. Rhoades, and then bringing a beautiful basket of flowers to the platform, offered them with a tribute of affection. President Rhoades was greatly moved by this unexpected exhibition of love from his own state. He declared that he loved those Baptists whom he had served for ten years as president of their state convention, and then that he loved all the folks, and nobody doubted it. The little incident added a sweet human touch to the hour.

After prayer by Dr. G. W. Cassidy, Mrs. H. E. Goodman of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society took the platform and presented the report of the year. Great as has been the work, Mrs. Goodman refrained from reading the report of accomplishments in order to give the evening to missionaries who had been on the foreign field and each of whom brought a single incident in missionary life. As each stood to tell her story, there stood by her side some girl dressed in the costume of the field represented and in some instances some native of the land where the missionary had worked. It is impossible to repeat these thrilling incidents of daily missionary life. They have been printed by the society for free distribution. They made vivid the work in which these women are engaged and made impressive its spiritual values. Those who spoke were Jessie M. Wilkinson, of Japan; Charlotte Wright, Assam; Olive E. Jones, South India; E. Louise Jenkins, Japan; Dr. Martha J. Clifford, Burma; Dr. Carrie E. Slaght, West China; A. Verna Blakely, Assam; Jennie L. Reilly, South India; Arcola I. Pettie, East China; Marie A. Dowling, East China and Melvina Sollman, South China. It was a rare evening for those who were not too much wearied by the long day's program to remain for it.

Wednesday Morning, May 26

Two thousand people were in their seats at nine o'clock Wednesday morning to hear the first of a series of studies by Dr. George A. Huntley on "Baptist Missions in Foreign Lands." The studies are running sketches of the current textbook on the subject. This one covered the first two chapters outlining the injurious effects of the war on missionary work and indicating some consequent problems. As usual Doctor Huntley shows himself a master of clear, analytical and elegant statement, and was heard with close attention. The study was followed by a lively song service.

The finance committee of the convention in its report recommended a total operating budget for the year ending April 30, 1927, of $8,543,338. Of this amount it is expected that $2,183,338 will come from non-donation sources. The donation receipts will be distributed as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society	$1,246,100
Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society	542,975
The American Baptist Home Mission Society	510,000
Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society	364,821
The American Baptist Publication Society (exclusive of Business Department)
Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board	533,608
Board of Education	208,236
Schools and Colleges	400,000
Northern Baptist Convention	31,650
Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America	10,000
Baptist Young People's Union of America	25,000
State Conventions	1,329,471
State Conventions, promotion	203,928
Standard City Mission Societies	497,000
Board of Missionary Cooperation	375,411
National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen	17,000
Swedish Conference	9,600
Danish Conference	7,500
Norwegian Conference	6,500
American Baptist Historical Society	2,000
Miscellaneous and Contingent	39,200
Total	$6,360,000

Among the deficits stated by Mr. Walter Straub, chairman of the committee, are approximately $93,000 for the Foreign Mission Society, $120,000 for the Home Mission Society and $12,000 for the Woman's Home Society.

At this point came the event for which the whole denomination has been on the tiptoe of expectation—the great debate. Representatives of the Associated Press and special reporters of metropolitan papers were drawn to the scene and alert for the battle. The subject was the consideration of the amendment proposed at Seattle to define the rights of churches to representation in the convention. Leaders of interested groups had been in conference with President Rhoades and had agreed upon an order of procedure and a limitation of time for the speakers.

A motion by Dr. James Whitcomb Brougher to lay the Seattle amendment on the table carried. Then he gave a short account of the Chicago Beach conference of April 13 and moved the adoption of the resolution recommended by that conference, called "The Chicago Resolution," as follows: "The Northern Baptist Convention recognizes its constituency as consisting solely of those Baptist churches in which the immersion of believers is recognized and practiced as the only scriptural baptism; and the convention hereby declares that only immersed members will be recognized as delegates to the convention." On a time limit of ten minutes he argued the necessity for some fraternal concession for differences of view not involving essential principles for the sake of the largest and most effective cooperation in united denominational program.

Following him, Dr. W. B. Riley moved the following substitute: "The Northern Baptist Convention recognizes its constituency as consisting solely of those Baptist churches in which the immersion of believers is recognized and practiced as a prerequisite to membership." Dr. Joshua Gravett seconded the amendment and the whole debate centered upon the substitute. Speakers for the substitute were Doctor Riley, Rev. Earl B. Pearce, Dr. John Roach Straton, Mrs. Day, M. Max Schimpf and Dr. Frank M. Goodchild; against it: Dr. J. C. Massee, Rev. Herbert Whiting Virgin, Dr. A. W. Beaven, Mr. Corwin S. Shank and Doctor Brougher.

Courtesy Rules

The debate was marked throughout by great earnestness but also by courtesy and good order. In but one or two instances did any speaker depart from the highest standards of propriety. There was a profound feeling among both speakers and the great audience that an epochal event was transpiring in the history of the denomination and that vital and far-reaching consequences were involved in the decision to be reached. A number of the various angles of reasoning were presented. Fundamental questions of both authority and policy were canvassed. The deepest religious loyalties were invoked by passionate appeal. The audience responded in like spirit with enthusiastic applause from the partisans of either side as telling points were made by speakers. But the "jeers and hisses" reported in the newspapers did not occur except in a single moment when a small group of persons forgot themselves. In fact, increasing earnestness was accompanied by increasing good humor, and the last telling points in logic or sallies of wit from the speakers brought applause without partiality from both sides.

When the vote was taken on Doctor Riley's substitute by a standing vote, the count showed that it had lost by a vote of 1084 to 2020. Then the Chicago resolution unamended was put to vote and carried by a vote so overwhelming that no count was made or requested. So far as it is legitimate to consider personal values in the result, the action of the convention may be regarded as a vindication of Doctor Brougher's leadership and even more perhaps as an exhibition of remarkable poise, correctness and courtesy on the part of President Rhoades.

The debate had taken up time allotted on the program for hearing distinguished visitors and for Dr. F. E. Taylor's devotional period. But on the platform was one visitor who could not remain for the later session, namely, Dr. George V. McDaniel, president of the Southern Baptist Convention. The convention gladly remained beyond the time for the noon adjournment in order to hear a short greeting from him, which was delivered with fine humor, and gave a cheering sketch of the work among Southern Baptists.

the college dinner on Monday evening. Commencement is reunion time for alumni, and during the three-day celebration the annual meeting of the alumni association is held. Baccalaureate Sunday, June 13, opens with class breakfasts and reunions in the early morning. The baccalaureate sermon that forenoon will be preached by Dr. A. W. Vernon of Dartmouth college, a former member of the Carleton college faculty. In the afternoon there will be an organ recital by Henry Fry, F. A. G. O., in Skinner Memorial chapel. A memorial service for Mrs. Margaret Evans Huntington, who passed away in March after having given thirty-four years of her life to the welfare of Carleton students, will be held in the evening. Mrs. Huntington retired in 1908, but her devotion to the College continued to the time of her death. Sir Robert Falconer, president of the University of Toronto, Canada, will deliver the commencement address, Monday afternoon, June fourteenth. A reception for two alumni members of the faculty who are retiring this year, will be held in the forenoon. Professor Herbert Couper Wilson, '79, has given almost forty years to mathematical and astronomical work with Carleton. Miss Isabella Watson, '85, who also holds the rank of professor, has been in the language department for thirty-three years.

The thirteenth anniversary of the Northern Baptist Theological seminary was observed this year one week earlier than usual, on account of the meeting in Washington of the Northern Baptist Convention. The baccalaureate sermon was given by Dean Julius A. Jensen of the Danish department, Sunday morning, May 16. The annual missionary sermon was delivered at the Tabernacle church by Rev. William Kuhn, general secretary of the German Baptist Conference of America, who received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity on commencement night. On Monday afternoon at the seminary chapel, the annual theological conference, which each year at this time entertains the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago, heard with deep interest an address from Pres. H. C. Wayman, of William Jewell college on "The Fellowship of Learning and Religion." A reception by President and Mrs. Taft followed the conference. The alumni meeting, trustee and faculty meetings and examinations were sandwiched into the busy week, until its culmination in the graduation exercises on Friday night at the Tabernacle church. A large audience, undeterred by a torrent of rain, greeted the splendid class of forty-four, most of whom have already accepted pastorates. Six speakers represented their class in orations, and President Taft spoke impressively on the ideals of the seminary. Northern has this year reached a registration of 185, of whom 155 are men. With eight fulltime and six parttime instructors the seminary now has definite prospect of securing another able fulltime professor. Five of the faculty families are already occupying the admirable apartments of Heinrichs hall, now owned by the seminary.

"Oh, then, we'll tak a walk," said Sandy, as he led her away.—Youth's Companion.

She: "Do I remember you? Oh, yes. We met at that miserable affair given by the Lehmanns!"

He: "Probably. I am Lehmann."

"Jock, will ye sup wi' me taemorrow night?"

"Aye, Sandy, that I will, wi' pleasure."

"Guid. Then eight o'clock at your hoose."

Editor's Notes on the Lesson for June 13

JOSEPH'S FIDELITY

Lesson Text: Gen. 39:1-33
Golden Text: Prov. 22:29

We make a long jump from Jacob meeting Esau to Joseph in Egypt.

Joseph's Trials

His first trials were domestic. His own brothers were jealous of him and jealousy moved them to get rid of him. Sold into Egyptian slavery, Joseph rose to a position of great responsibility in the household of Potiphar, his master. The writer of Genesis, true to his purpose, records the fact that Jehovah was with Joseph. But Jehovah was with Joseph because Joseph was with Jehovah. That is to say, Joseph had learned the secret of obedience to the law of life. He must have known that to do right when the heavens fall is the only path to peace and prosperity. If trials come in the path of duty they are only detours that bring the traveler into new experience which enrich his life. His fidelity to the right as he saw the right was his strength and support in the greatest trial of his life which came to him in the very hour that had honored him. The answer which Joseph gave to the suggestion of his temptress is full of sound wisdom and honest valor. It was both social and spiritual. His social duty lay in fidelity to the man who had placed him in a position of trust, and to this side of his testing he responded like the needle to the pole. He recognized the rights of Potiphar and respected them. And he also recognized his responsibility to God and refused to sin against him. This twofold consciousness gave Joseph a double safeguard against a fall. His consciousness of social responsibility was hardly enough to make him stand against the test, but augmented by his consciousness of God, Joseph was able to escape from a trying situation.

Joseph's Triumph

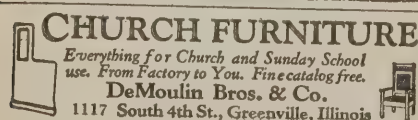

His triumph was wholly moral for the time. Physically he lost his comforts in the house of Potiphar and took his place with others in the unspeakable environment of an Egyptian prison. Imagination must fill in the horrors which prisoners suffered in Egypt in the time of Joseph. Potiphar's wife seemed to be enjoying the real triumph of a successful falsehood. She, the real offender was vindicated, while the innocent victim of her wiles lay in a dungeon. But in his heart and conscience Joseph was a free man while his temptress was a slave. And because he was a free man in his heart, Joseph soon rose again from his temporary humiliation and became the jailer's right hand man in the management of the prison and the prisoner Joseph bore no malice toward anyone not even to the temptress. He was too busy in constructive service to harbor revenge. One can imagine that he treated Potiphar's wife with the same gracious generosity that he extended to his erring brethren after he became premier of Egypt. Joseph was more than a conqueror.

AN INTERESTING FINANCE PLAN

The Calvary church of Omaha, Neb., has recently completed its canvass for current expense funds and benevolences for the fiscal year 1926-27. By dividing the membership of the church into thirty groups and placing a financial director over each, the pledges have been secured much more readily. The directors of the groups have been given two weeks in which to complete their work. This allows more time for personal cultivation and acquaintance with group members and affords opportunity for the entire completion of the canvass prior to the beginning of the new fiscal year. The plan also makes this a permanent organization in the church so that in the event of delinquency in the payment of pledges, the financial director will have opportunity for going back to stimulate payments. The men themselves who are serving as financial directors are enthusiastic about the organization.

TWO SUCCESSFUL YEARS

During the past two years, the First church of Paterson, N. J., Russell Morse Hughes, pastor, has received 361 new members, and has increased its budget of current expenses and missions from $2000 to $27,000. This year the church has repaid its denominational missionary budget by about $700, besides giving $100 to the Lone Star fund. For the past year or so evening congregations have averaged 1200, and many are often turned away, unable to get seats.

DOES YOUR MISSION SOCIETY NEED ROUSING?

The use of stereopticon slides in the Baptist church of Ocean City, N. J., increased the attendance at the Woman's Missionary society from four to seventy members, all with an awakened interest in Baptist missions and a keen desire to help in the work of supporting them.

WHY?

Why should we give money to save these in other countries when there are none in our own country to save? There are other "Whys" equally logical.

Why should I give money to save these in other parts of this country when there are needy ones in my own state?

Why should I give for those in other parts of the state when there are needy ones in my own town?

Why should I give for the poor in the town when my own church needs money?

Why should I give to the church when my own family wants it?

Why should I waste on my family what I want myself?

Why? Because I am a Christian!—from the Bulletin of the First church, by a Barbara.

This page is conducted by the Board of Missionary Cooperation, New York City, as a medium for circulating items about local churches which are carrying on their own and denominational projects in an effective way. If your church has developed any interesting ideas or methods we shall be glad to have you write about them to the Board, at 276 Fifth Avenue. Brief outlines of denominational plans, important news, etc., will also appear here from time to time.

LARGE CONFERENCE OF CHURCH OFFICERS

Dr. Frederick A. Agar of the stewardship department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation conducted a large and successful church officers' council in the Fifth Avenue church in Troy, N. Y., Apr. 25. The officers present numbered 240 and represented twenty-six churches of the Hudson River association. Various matters concerning changes of programs for the churches were discussed.

A THRIVING CHURCH

An Every-Member canvass taken in the Broadway church of Providence, R. I., proved such a success that there was great rejoicing at the annual roll-call supper held there on Apr. 12. Approximately 300 new pledges were secured which increased the missions budget of the church by $3500 and that for local expenses by $3000. The entire budget for the year was practically underwritten by the canvass. Under the pastorate of Rev. Ralph Taylor Andem, the church continues to grow and plans are being made now for the largest daily vacation Bible school in the history of the church.

MISSIONARY INTEREST AROUSED BY CURIOS

The Baptist church at Attica, N. Y., recently had a "missionary maze." Curios from the Board of Missionary Cooperation were exhibited and over 300 people crowded in. The exhibit room was decorated with wall charts and several of the young ladies of the church were dressed in the native costumes of foreign countries. A mother of one missionary had a table there and explained the curios. The missionary map of the world and the literature table were added attractions. The exhibit was such a success that Doctor Dutton, executive secretary of the Buffalo Baptist Union, asked the pastor to reproduce it at the associational meeting.

The church at Corvallis, Ore., also held a fine exhibit of curios from the Board of Missionary Cooperation not long ago. These were shown in connection with a missionary institute in the church.

BOTH SIDES OF THE ENVELOPE

The Baptist church in Burlington, Utah, reported last month that the pledges which it had taken for its 1926-27 budget were, with one exception, on both sides of the envelope. It is now a perfect 100 per cent as the one person who was the exception has made an additional pledge for missions. This is the first time in the history of the church when this condition has prevailed. In addition, the state of all pledges for the year is on a higher standard than ever before in the history of the church.

VOLUNTEERING THEIR BUDGET

The Freeport church, Illinois, Rev. Irving A. Fox, pastor, recently completed an every member canvass which may offer a suggestion to other churches. Instead of holding a house-to-house canvass the trustees decided to ask the church members to come to the church and voluntarily make their pledges for the year. The budget for 1926-27 was adopted and with it the slogan, "Bills all paid, and budget all pledged at our annual meeting on May 6." Several weeks before the pledging, the finance committee had set up in the front of the church a large picture six by eight feet in size, covered with white paper and bearing the sign, "To be unveiled April 18." Concealed beneath the white paper was a picture of the church building, the Baptist educational building, and a mission church, representing respectively the current expenses of the local church, the educational building fund, and the church's missionary budget. Each strip of paper which hung over the picture represented $260, and the total strips amounted to the budget total. On Sunday morning, April 18, pledge cards were distributed and the paper strips were removed as the pledges came in, thus unveiling the picture. Nearly $8800 was voluntarily pledged by the church members, leaving only $1200 to be secured before the annual meeting.

GOOD SIGNS IN CONNECTICUT

The Connecticut state convention office notes an increase in the number of churches adopting the monthly remittance plan over the previous year. Last year only twenty-three churches reached or exceeded their quotas, whereas this year sixty-five made the honor list.

A SURE WAY TO GET THERE

Two hundred and one of the Baptist churches in New York state, exclusive of the metropolitan district, met their full quotas for the fiscal year 1925-26. It is a significant fact that all the churches who used the monthly one-twelfth payment plan, about sixty altogether, were included in this number. This fact seems to show that if a church wants to make absolutely certain of reaching its goal for this year, it will do well to adopt the monthly payment plan.

Keeping Step with the Nation's Growth

The organization of the Society on April 27, 1832, proved to be a great event in the history of our denomination and in the extension of the Kingdom of God. Men, women, and children, won to the service of Christ, are the rich fruitage of the years.

Constantly Expanding Fields

1832 During the first year of its existence the Society, having its birth in faith, appointed 89 missionaries to carry the gospel to the frontiers of the west. Of these only 18 received money grants for service. $2,918.97 was expended for all purposes. As the frontier grew these missionaries increased in number and evangelistic zeal.

1840 Work for foreign-speaking people began in 1840 with missions for Mexicans. The Society's missionaries are now laboring among 20 different racial groups not including Negroes or Indians.

1853 The Church Edifice Work of the Society began when from needy and promising churches in rapidly growing sections of the country came requests for aid in securing suitable houses of worship that could not be denied.

1863 The Society sent missionaries among the multitudes of ignorant and almost helpless freedmen soon after the Emancipation Proclamation was issued.

1865 In this year the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society discontinued its work among the North American Indians and turned over that labor to this Society. There are now fourteen tribes among whom we are laboring, and two Indian schools to train Indian youth for Christian leadership.

1867 The educational work of the Society began in 1867 when Dr. Nathaniel Colver opened a Christian school in an old slave trader's pen called Lumpkin's Jail, in Richmond, Va. Several of the 13 Negro schools the Society now helps to support have within the last few years leaped into the stature of accredited colleges.

1899 Immediately at the close of the Spanish American war the missionaries of the Society entered Cuba and in succeeding years other Islands and Republics in Latin America. Today our missionaries are toiling not only in Cuba but in Porto Rico, Jamaica, Haiti, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Mexico.

1903 At its annual meeting in Buffalo, May, 1903, the Society took action leading to the promotion of Evangelism on a large scale in cooperation with State Conventions and other affiliating bodies.

1907 The Society at this period encouraged the independent organization, initiative, and self-reliance of certain Western State Conventions, cooperating with them in the prosecution of certain types of missionary work which the Conventions themselves were not able independently to perform.

1919 The Society in this year began its cooperative relations with the American Baptist Publication Society in sustaining Colporter-missionary and Chapel Car Work.

1920 The Department of Architecture beginning June 15, 1920, has persisted in its efforts so to guide churches that they will erect edifices pleasing in appearance and architecturally worthy. The architectural service is on a self-sustaining basis.

In this year also was organized the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J.

1925 At the suggestion of the Home Mission Society, representatives of our State Conventions, City Mission Societies, the Woman's Home Mission Society, and the Publication Society, met in Chicago on December 14, 1925, to study for the first time in the history of the denomination the entire work of these associated home mission agencies.

1926 The missionaries of the Society now approximate 500; teachers 300. The expenditures of the Society during 1925-26 for all purposes, including funds received and disbursed for other organizations, amounted to $1,302,984.25.

The Next Step

Tremendous and sudden movements in our population furnish open doors for our next opportunities of service.

People from the country side pouring into the city. . . . Old Americans fleeing to the suburbs from congested areas of the cities. . . . Vast numbers of foreign-speaking people finding homes in rural sections.

100th Anniversary

1932 In six years The American Baptist Home Mission Society will celebrate its 100th ANNIVERSARY. We believe that on April 27, 1932, we can record that the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention caught the vision of their new opportunities and by prayer and Scriptural giving made possible A HOME MISSION PROGRAM COMMENSURATE WITH THE NATION'S GROWTH.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Wives in the village of Vertheyevka, Russia, tired of receiving bodily chastisement from their husbands, held a meeting and issued to their husbands a collective ultimatum that the thing must stop and declaring that they would not return to their homes until assured of decent treatment. The husbands called in and notified, walked up to the table and signed on the dotted line.

According to recent investigations by the United States government, there are 526 institutions in the country for the treatment of mental diseases, with 290,456 patients registered. Insanity is increasing more rapidly in the city than the country, and is far more prevalent among foreign-born people than among natives. The ratio for the whole country is 241.8 per 100,000 of the population. The highest rate is among the foreign-born in Oregon, namely, 840.7 per 100,000.

"Daniel Dare," staff correspondent of the Friend of Missions, Doctor Fetler's paper, gives this fine statement of "the fundamentals of Christianity": "I discovered that the very first fundamental of true New Testament Christianity was not at all some head knowledge about the virgin birth, the Inspiration of the Bible, the Deity of Christ, etc., but the personal experience of a new birth by the power of the Holy Spirit. I found, on the authority of plain Scriptures, that Christianity is not knowledge about certain truths, but the truth itself; not certain well-founded theories about life, but life; and that this life did not consist in having certain ideas about Jesus as the Son of God, but in having Jesus Christ."

The advance in community thinking in the United States may be gauged by two facts. The eighth national country life conference held at Richmond in October devoted its main efforts to a consideration of "how to increase farmers' incomes; how to attain to a higher standard of life in the country; the relation of farm groups to other groups; the problem of integrating rural community life; the adjustment of agencies to each other; how to get effective political action by farmers; the attitude of country people toward country life and of city dwellers toward the country." Not less significant is the rural life program of the Catholic church which concerns itself with a wider diffusion of land ownership in the hands of bona fide operators, with the cooperative movement, safeguarded "against becoming merely capitalistic," and with the aim of creating "the self-sufficient community, eliminating the economic waste of unnecessary transportation."

The administrative committee of the Federal Council of Churches questions very gently the proposal to register all aliens in the country. Also, still gently, albeit in terms that if carefully applied will raise blisters in some quarters, it proposes that "laws dealing with the deportation of aliens should provide adequate checks on mere routine procedures in order to prevent, as far as possible, the tragedy of having people railroaded out of the country who have a legal right to residence; and should make every possible provision to prevent the law from being used as a means for blackmail and intimidation by unscrupulous knaves and cunning sharks."

One hopeful view of the proposed disarmament conference is set forth in the Commonweal by Elmer Murphy, who says: "There is a rather definite opinion in Washington that the conference will carry forward the work begun at Locarno by laying the basis for a series of regional security agreements—in effect promises to recognize one another's territorial rights and disavowals of aggressive purpose. The first objective will not be to abolish war but to fortify peace; not to disarm but to make armament unnecessary. To recognize that other nations are entitled to what they have is to disclaim any intention of taking anything away from them."

Twenty years ago Dr. Henry C. Mabie wrote: "It is with me a profound conviction that as a matter of method in some of the more primary stages of the foreign missionary's work among the heathen, relatively too much emphasis has been placed upon the mere matter of communicating a body of theological truth as such, and far too little use has been made of loyal action upon some one truth already known. . . . It is not true that people in heathendom or elsewhere need to have before them a great variety of abstract theological truths before they can be spiritually renewed and become inducted into the school of Christ. It is amazing how little truth is essential to salvation. The missionary often can well afford to presume upon the fact that many all about him in regions where the gospel has been preached somewhat widely, already know enough to be saved. The practical thing needed is that by the help of the Spirit in some tactful way these should be led to commit themselves to the truth they know. To do this, is in principle faith, the belief of the heart and the executive act of the entire soul. To those who will thus act, Christ himself will lift the veil and through his own miracle, stand self-disclosed."

Rationalism seems to Mr. Joseph McCabe, according to the California Christian Advocate, to be slumping badly. Mr. McCabe is a British rationalist. Last summer he attended the International Congress of Freethinkers in Paris. He found a far smaller attendance than in former years, there being not more than 300 present at any session. "And not a man of science in Europe supported the congress." He finds a similar condition in America and complains that the scientific men of the country are arrayed almost solidly on the side of religion. Habitual wailers about the decline of religion may find some comfort in his tale of woe.

In the "Life of William Carey" written by S. Pearce Carey, his great-grandson, is a message from the mission field of that early day which may serve as a monitor to the men of today who fret over sects, forms, and creeds. It is this declaration of William Ward, an associate of Carey: "I am more than ever anxious to know no man after his sect, as an independent, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Methodist or Baptist. Every one who wears the image of Christ, and brings beauty and fertility into the spiritual desert around him, is my 'brother and sister and mother.' Let us conscientiously profess our own convictions; but let us love the man of our own sect but little who possesses little of the image of Christ; whilst we love him exceedingly, in whom we see much of Christ, though some of his opinions are contrary to our own. So shall we know we are passed from death unto life, and sectarian quarrels will cease."

Dean T. Lawrence Davis of the College of Practical Arts and Letters, a college for women in Boston university, has announced that the rule against smoking will continue to be enforced. A questionnaire sent recently to approximately 700 parents brought only one vote requesting the permission of smoking. Dean Davis says: "I have made it clear that in our college, with the support of the parents, we have asked that a certain ideal be upheld—an ideal which recognizes refinement as a quality of inestimable value, an ideal which makes it impossible to reconcile refinement with cigarettes or alcoholic liquor. In fact our college environment is to be open only to those who are willing to support this and all other ideals which we have accepted as representing the inherent principles of our college for women." He states further that the students have shown a fine spirit of cooperation in accepting this decree of the administration, realizing that there is more involved in it than a mere arbitrary prohibition.

Prisoners in state and county prisons held for federal offenses cost the government a total of $5400 a day. This of course does not include prisoners in the federal penitentiaries. There are more than 8000 prisoners who are awaiting trial or serving sentences under federal law in state and county institutions.

An attempt is being made to secure congressional legislation which will place corn sugar on a par with cane and beet sugar in the United States. This legislation is intended to help the farmers in the corn belt, and very little opposition has been met so far. Senator Cummins of Iowa is sponsoring the measure in the senate.

President Coolidge has placed himself on record as opposed to national censorship of motion pictures. He believes that reform in the motion picture industry should come from within, as it has already done to a considerable extent, due to the efforts of the "movie czar," Will Hays.

It is feared by leaders among German women that the number of intellectual women there and those who are interested in problems of importance that concern women is decreasing. Economic conditions are such that many German women have had to hurry through their education or stop before they should do so in order to take their places in industry and support themselves. The total number of women students decreased by 200 from 1923 to 1925. The total number of women studying jurisprudence, geology, and mathematics dropped by 10 per cent within the last year.

Dr. N. A. Bryan of Hwangshien, China, reports a successful year for the hospital there. There were 546 in-patients with 812 hospital days. The number treated in the out-patient department was 7881. The total number of treatments administered was 31,631. There were 1286 operations performed. A large part of the operating is done by the two Chinese doctors. Doctor Bryan cites one instance of a ninety pound tumor removed from an in-patient, who became a Christian after he was healed. He expresses appreciation of the work done by the White Cross in furnishing supplies for the hospital.

Mariano H. Cornejo, distinguished lawyer and statesman of Peru, gives to the world his thought of the United States in terms highly gratifying to American idealists. Writing on "America and Peace" in Inter-America, he says: "America has developed the European idea of the free determination and cooperation of people as Europe has developed the Christian idea of individual fraternity—an idea born in Asia. . . . The United States in the end will carry out Wilson's program and take her place in the league at Geneva, the noblest and greatest creation of the American genius and the French genius united. On that day, America will impose on the world the ideal of peace and will realize the dream of the French revolution and the American revolution."

A "committee of American business men" of New York is distributing through the country the recent address of Mr. Otto H. Kahn in praise of Mussolini and the fascist government of Italy. Mr. Kahn's address is a panegyric upon the greatness and achievements of Mussolini and an apology for the fascist revolution. There may be some question of the wisdom of starting a propaganda for Mussolini and fascism in this country by a particular class of persons whose exclusive patronage is already the subject of general suspicion. Such an effort, if it is to free itself from suspicion, ought to seek a more representative support. But why laud Mussolini and fascism in the United States? Is anything resembling either needed in this country?

All modernists, fundamentalists, middle-of-the-roads and nondescripts are invited to note a fine and clear discrimination suggested by the Presbyterian Advance, namely: "The assertions of Scripture are not always understood in the same way by all people. There are differing interpretations. Furthermore, many statements made in the Bible are not subject to the confirmation of human experience. It is impossible, for instance, for any reader to confirm a historical statement by personal experience. But when we find a declaration of the Word of God the meaning of which is admitted by all, and then find that all Christian experience confirms that declaration we may be sure that we have found a divine truth which proves itself in human life." It follows easily that in such truth so certified by common experience lies the ground of Christian fellowship. All religious opinions beyond that field may go for whatever they will bring in the market.

The Smithsonian institution has bought fish fossils eight million years old to exhibit at the Sesqui-centennial exposition at Philadelphia. The fossils have been dug from the upper cretaceous chalk formation of Kansas.

Discovery of extremely rich deposits of potash in Texas and other parts of the Southwest is announced. A bed of potash salt, having 10 per cent pure potash, has been located which is 200 miles long, 125 miles wide in thick veins and within practical mining distance from the surface. The deposit is estimated to be worth $20,000,000,000.

Secretary Mellon has protested against the custom of coining money for commemorative or memorial purposes. He opposes this plan on the grounds that non-government agencies have commercialized this money by selling it at increased prices. He contends also that the coinage of so many different varieties of money lends added opportunities to counterfeiters.

The following states made an increase in the year 1926 over the amount paid in 1925 to the Foreign Mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention: Arkansas, Florida, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma, South Carolina, and Texas. The total receipts for the period from May 1 to Apr. 1 were less than those of the same period in 1925 by $35,722.03. That the lack of adequate funds and the necessity which is almost inevitable of a cut in the budget is a source of continual distress to missionaries is evident.

In England they have a rather more discriminating way of using epithets than the average fashion exhibits in America. Instead of classifying believers as modernists and fundamentalists, they call them by preference modernists and traditionalists, without any disparaging reflection upon either class. The Christian World thus defines their common bond of faith: "The point on which traditionalists and modernists find common ground is that the broken and cowed disciples of Good Friday had an experience on Easter day which convinced them that Jesus, whom they had believed to be dead and defeated, was alive, unkillable and triumphant."

Shanghai college has never had a better year than the last. While there are thirty students less out of a total of 700, there is a larger and better balanced enrolment in the four college classes. In spite of a slight falling off in enrolment, the Middle School is much improved in morale, both among students and teachers. The college heretofore has sent its best graduates to help the other Baptist Middle Schools. For the first time there have been enough to furnish our own needs as well as those of other schools. The enrolment of women has gradually increased from four in the beginning, five years ago, to sixty-six this year, making one of the two few fine bodies of women college students in China. Over half of the approximately 200 graduates of the college are now in the work of the four Baptist missions supporting the college.

The Northern Baptist Convention

Wednesday Afternoon

THE afternoon was devoted to the Baptist Historical Society, the Baptist periodicals and the Board of Missionary Cooperation, with a visit to the new National Baptist Roger Williams Memorial church.

In the absence of the president, Dr. Harry Watson Barras called the meeting of the Baptist Historical Society to order and read the annual report. The board reported that the collection of this society has become too large for the space available at Crozer Theological seminary and expressed the hope that some wealthy donor would be moved to give a separate building to house the valuable historical material which has been gathered by this society. The new officers elected were as follows: president, Dr. Spencer B. Meeser; vice-president, Dr. L. C. Barnes; secretary, Dr. H. W. Barras and treasurer, Dr. C. G. Stevens.

Dr. John W. Herring who was to have spoken in the morning was given a brief time to tell of the work of the international justice and goodwill commission of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Himself a Congregationalist, he complimented the Baptists on the good will displayed in the intense discussion of the morning. His is a committee to express in concrete form the good will of the Christian churches toward members of the non-Christian faith.

Baptist Periodicals

The reports of the three Baptist periodicals made an interesting hour. Dr. Howard B. Grose spoke of the task of Missions to give a world view to Baptists and to interpret world movements from a Christian and missionary point of view. He has given to our denomination the most admirable publication of its kind belonging to any American church.

The assistant editor of THE BAPTIST outlined the purpose of the paper which he represented. He set forth an ideal of a religious newspaper which would go far toward building the denomination into greater strength. It was an admirable report, and justified the experiment which the Baptists have made in a denominationally owned paper. Interesting also was the setting forth of the ideal of the Watchman-Examiner by its new assistant editor, Dr. Austin K. de Blois. He defined the task of the denominational paper as that of giving to its readers a paper that is interesting, informative, impartial and yet which holds deep convictions.

Before offering the report of the Board of Missionary Cooperation, Dr. Charles W. Gilkey paid a tender tribute to Dr. John Y. Aitchison under the title of "Our Fallen Leader." He said that while democracies are proverbially ungrateful, the Baptist democracy will never cease to lift up a heart of gratitude for Doctor Aitchison. As a woman member of the board of promotion said of him after a long and tense meeting, "If ever there was a Christian gentleman, he was one." It was a just characterization of his quiet Christian spirit. Again and again after intense opposition had been evidenced, he would say "They don't understand," a sentence which was significant of his attitude toward those who disagreed with him. His gentleness was never weakness, and when the time demanded he could let his mastering strength appear. That which won loyalty was creative leadership such as he exhibited in the trying days of the formation of the board of which he was leader. With his gentleness and strength, he gained in a peculiar degree the love of those whom he served. So lovable was he, that even those to whom he went asking money for the university which he served seldom failed to ask him to come again. His loveliness was rooted in a certain sacrificial quality. Few suspected the price he was paying, giving not only service but life to the causes he loved even better than his life. After this tender address on Doctor Aitchison, the president called for a few moments of silent prayer of thanksgiving for the gift of such a man.

Board of Missionary Cooperation

The report of the Board of Missionary Cooperation was read in part by Dr. W. H. Bowler. This was his first appearance as executive secretary of the board. A vigorous speaker, with a clear grasp of conditions, he aroused the confidence of the new constituency which he serves. While he was there to speak of budgets and quotas, he said that they stand only as symbols of the healing and salvation which they purchase. He read the brief report of the board only in part, commenting on its salient features. Its purpose is to enlist the whole denomination in the kingdom task. Only 51 per cent of the members of our churches contribute and of these only 32 per cent are giving to the missionary enterprise. For this there is only one panacea, that is the spirit of Christ. He went on to state:

"The board offers a definite program for the accomplishment of its task: 1—that every church be induced to accept a quota representing its responsibility for the denomination; 2—that the local church have a well prepared every-member plan; 3—that the money collected be forwarded on the basis of one-twelfth every month. The board has had the cooperation of the women's and laymen's organizations, and has enlisted the organized groups of young people in its great task. Despite its efforts, while it has been able to check the downward trend of missionary contributions which has marked the last four years, receipts have fallen $720,000 below the operating budget. Financial reports show that in the amounts raised annually for current expenses the churches of the denomination have not only maintained but far exceeded the givings for local requirements in 1920-21, the peak year of the New World Movement. That year marked a new high point in both departments of giving, but whereas the annual item of current expense donations has mounted steadily in five years from $16,752,293 to $25,627,771, the missions side of the ledger records a decline in the same period from $11,290,642 to $5,431,869. Moreover these figures take no account of the many millions contributed during the same five year period for investment in church property. Including the Lone Star fund, our receipts from donation sources in the year ending Apr. 30 were not quite equal to the receipts from the same sources in the preceding year, or approximately $4,904,000. If we exclude the Lone Star fund received by the two foreign societies, then our receipts would be $346,000 short of the record for 1924-25."

Effect of Lessened Contributions

Doctor Bowler was followed by Dr. H. D. Gleiss of Michigan who called attention to the practical effect of the lessening of missionary contributions in the cutting down of work among the Jews, Poles and Mexicans at home, and the hampering of work abroad. Even the M. & M. board has been obliged to borrow from its funds over $90,000 to aid worthy men who have retired from the ministry.

Dr. A. W. Beavens and Hon. Corwin S. Shank pointed the way out of this dilemma. Doctor Beavens said that the question ought to be faced by the local churches. "In general, churches will do that which is held constantly before them. This is no time for a small world policy and a large local program. Who will speak for missions if not the men who lead our churches? The church itself is useless unless it generates excess energy to be flung out. Giving is measured less by ability, more by the spirit. Rich spiritual life means financial success. The two-thirds who do not give furnish the territory for advance."

Mr. Shank pointed a second way out. He said: "Past church conditions have developed church beggary. Generations have been taught to give according to their will to give, instead of according to the demands of the enterprise. We have accumulated financial dead-heads." He spoke of the loss in interest paid and estimated that the interest lost in the last ten years would pay our deficits and build one or two missionary buildings. The way out is to do as some churches do, send one-twelfth of the missionary budget every month, borrowing for that

Baptists Face the Future

BAPTIST consciousness in its multitudinous aspects found full and free expression at Washington. Whatever may have been the wishes of members of the Northern Baptist Convention as to things done, proposed or said, nobody complained that his wish had been smothered by adverse management of any sort. There could hardly be a more perfect vindication of democracy. Divergent were the views of different persons and groups either before or after the convention, no group went home with a rankling sense of having been the victim of injustice or unfairness. Even the great debate over conditions of membership, except in one or two minor incidents lacking a good taste, was characterized by a decorum of which the whole denomination may be proud. As the days passed at Washington there was steady gain in the direction of a better common understanding, of unity of purpose, of mutual respect, of genuine fellowship and of general cooperation and of hopefulness.

At certain vital points the confusion which has prevailed in the constituency of the convention is clearing up. So far as votes can settle anything among Baptists it is settled that the Northern Baptist Convention will not accept and put its imprimatur upon any official creed, nor prescribe either the membership or the practice of any local church, nor admit to membership as a delegate in the convention any person who is not a baptized believer, nor impose upon workers supported by it any test of orthodoxy except a genuine personal loyalty to Jesus Christ. Through a series of years and with vast debate the convention has been settling its way slowly to this position and by deliberate and decisive majorities has registered its advance step by step. Probably the position thus attained is not precisely that which any group would have projected as its own full ideal. But it is that which has resulted from honest and patient attempts to arrive at such understandings as will facilitate cooperation in the promotion of common and fundamental Christian aims. And the hopeful fact is that this position, having been so attained, seems to be that in which the thought of the denomination tends to a stable equilibrium. As each specific point at issue arose for discussion, differences of opinion seemed so intense and the apprehension of disastrous consequences so pervasive as to raise a question whether the denomination would be able to hold together. But it has held together. While in each case the vote of a majority has not produced uniformity of opinion it has widened the area of definitely ascertained cooperation and fellowship and has reduced the danger of divisive misunderstandings. Probably never since the convention at Buffalo has there been less danger of division than at the present time, more confidence in the future of the denomination or a more cordial purpose to cooperate in the regular program of the convention. Certainly no convention within that period has closed with such a general feeling of gracious expectancy.

Consider the points at which actual unity is both vital and obvious so far as discussion and voting can reveal such unity. The officers of the convention proper were elected with perfect unanimity, and with no hint from any quarter that the election was set up in the interest of any partisan faction or accomplished by the method of the steam roller. The proposal of Dr. J. C. Massee for a united ministry of evangelism was adopted with universal approval, with the single proviso on the part of certain brethren that they would not, as indeed no Baptist would, agree to be silent concerning any matter about which they might find it their duty to speak. The reaffirmation by President Anderson of the inclusive policy of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society as that policy has been previously defined seems to have been accepted as settled, and under that policy, graduates of some of the most widely divergent schools of theology in the country have accepted appointment this year. The report of the advisory committee on reorganization is receiving careful and deliberate consideration with a view to a discriminating appraisal of its recommendations for future use.

From all indications the indefinite and sprawling dispute about modernism and fundamentalism promises for the future to show more reason, less acrimony and less relative importance than in the last few years. The discovery that the field is the world and that the missionary enterprise is one, with its implications as to the relations of nations, races, faiths and cultures, seems to be accepted and increasingly apprehended. That conception of the gospel as a message of redemption not merely for the individual but also for everything in this world that can have for human life a spiritual, ethical and social significance, is clearly destined to determine henceforth the evangelistic, missionary and educational program of the denomination. A docile loyalty to Christ is coming to transcend a dogmatic loyalty to either an ecclesiastical or a creedal system in the spirit of the Baptists, and this higher loyalty as it comes more and more to dominate our denominational life is affecting and will hereafter more profoundly and beneficially affect our fellowship and program.

An elation of spirit that began to appear in the convention at Washington and grew day by day to the close, sprang less from any reasoned analysis of the proceedings than from a sense of intimate spiritual touch. "Victory through Christ" was the slogan of the convention. Perhaps it might have remained merely a slogan. But the daily interpretations given at the devotional period by Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, accented by the daily experience of the convention, made the slogan vital and victory became real. It was in no sense a petty matter of partisan triumph. It was rather, as expressed again and again by persons who had voted on opposite sides of questions in dispute, the achievement of a deeper spiritual unity in Christ.

All of these things present an augury of hope. For years prophetic spirits in the denomination have been proclaiming the advent of an unprecedented opportunity for the Baptists to render a great service to the world and to the kingdom of God. Now, more than ever before, the denomination seems to be sensitized to that opportunity. It may be that the time is at hand when the Baptists, united, comprehending their mission and yielding to a Christly urge, will rise up together to make their full contribution to the enterprise of a world's redemption.

Has the Day of the Layman Come?

EIGHT hundred men or more sat down to a banquet at Washington, and no man could tell by external signs the difference between ministers and laymen. They looked, acted, ate and talked alike. What was the difference anyhow? This question goes more deeply into spiritual values, and into denominational policy than its casual asking. Christianity originated as a laymen's movement and in its essence it has never ceased to be anything else. Jesus never made any provision for an order of clergy. The highest order recognized by him is that of believers. To them he committed all and promised all. Clerical orders from pope to pastor are a traditional or utilitarian product whose validity depends upon their utility. They derive their existence from the will of the laity. But the essential priesthood and royalty within the kingdom of God belong to the believer exclusively, inalienably and completely. Consequently the position of the Christian layman is big with all of the authority, the responsibility and the promises of the gospel. The minister is simply a layman specializing on some job.

Signs multiply that laymen are coming to recognize their fundamental position in the scheme of Christianity. This is the meaning of the men's conferences, banquets and leagues. Such efforts originate usually in some desire to aid and strengthen the church as it is already organized and operating. But virile men when they get to talking and working together make discoveries. They find themselves insisting on practicality and on doing big things in a big way. Just because they were self-inhibited from such original inquiry and endeavor, many earlier efforts to enlist laymen as mere auxiliaries in reenforcing set programs have died of inanition. The present movement, however, exhibits a sense of self-discovery, an apprehension of the meaning of Christian life and a spirit of initiative that promise a new release of power for the promotion of the kingdom of God.

The Display Advertisement

IT IS interesting to learn that ten per cent of the space of THE BAPTIST is occupied during the year with display advertisements. Worthy institutions that have something worth while to offer the constituency reached by our paper are eager to use this medium of publicity. Evidently results are secured or they would stop sending us copy. We are proud of the fact that THE BAPTIST maintains a high standard of ethics in selling its advertising space. Were we willing to accept low-grade advertisements and exploit through the paper the hundred and one things of little or no value that seek publicity we could greatly increase our cash receipts from that source; but there would be probably a greater decrease of our income from the loss of dissatisfied subscribers. Therefore we strictly maintain the ideal of service and scrupulously insist that only articles of real value sold by reputable firms shall find advertising space in THE BAPTIST.

Among the best patrons of our advertising columns are our own boards and societies. We pride ourselves on the fact that the Lone Star fund last year was more than fully raised because THE BAPTIST was one of the channels through which the Foreign Society reached many of the contributors. While the Board of Cooperation did not fare so well in raising the full amount of the general budget, yet we comfort ourselves with the thought that it might have been much worse had not the denominational papers and THE BAPTIST in particular rendered heroic service through their editorials, news columns and advertising space. Had our denominational papers reached ten times as many Baptists as they now do the results last year would have registered a surplus much bigger than our general budget deficit.

Once every month there appear in THE BAPTIST two columns of most interesting display ads. Each column is headed "Our Societies and How to Reach Them," and under this caption our three boards and five societies call attention to partnership opportunities in service and in investment. Two of the boards and four of the societies advertise annuities. From four to nine per cent, according to age, is offered on the annuity plan. We know of no better way to assure regular income while one lives and yet make provision to help substantially Christian education, Christian missions and Christian philanthropy. A bequest in a will is the least satisfactory method of posthumous benevolence. But by the annuity plan one becomes his own executor while he lives. We therefore call the attention of our readers to the display advertisements in THE BAPTIST and especially to the boxed columns presenting our own societies and boards.

The World in Transit

BY THE ASSISTANT EDITOR

Walter L. Fisher Prophecies With the Insight of College Days

Mr. Walter L. Fisher, even in his old college days at Hanover, exhibited a tendency to do his own vigorous thinking, like his distinguished father, President Fisher. According to the news report he is still keeping the old gait. He was a member of the cabinet of President Taft and is therefore both conservative and careful. But his philosophy of the tendencies in civilization as set forth in a recent address contains such a formula as this: "Modern industrialism, if left to its own inherent tendencies, moves inexorably toward collectivism," bringing as the obvious result, "so great a change in our civilization as to constitute an economic revolution—a civilization so different as to be a new civilization." Thus the soap-box philosophy of 1900 becomes the philosophy of the cabinet in 1926—of the cabinet indeed, for Secretary Hoover has a statement in the papers this very day in which he welcomes the larger combinations in business and proclaims that the practice of competition and anti-trust legislation has become archaic. Thus, the god of things as they are, begins to totter in its own temple.

What Kind of a Church Must My Church Be?

To this question, different persons give different replies. The Baptist ideal includes the immersion of believers as the only baptism, the baptism of all believers, all baptized believers members of the church, all members of the church baptized believers, all members of the church participating in the Lord's Supper, all participants in the Lord's Supper members of the church, all church members church workers, all church workers church members, all filled with the spirit of Christ, all fully taught of Christ, all fully obedient to Christ. But no church fulfills this ideal. If one cooperates in fellowship at all he must tolerate some un-ideal things. He finds in the Bible no limits to fellowship except manifest immorality, a rejection of Christ, or an effort to cause division or to compel conformity. He is free to cooperate on terms of cordial fellowship with anybody in anything which tends towards the achievement of ideal Christianity. Hence a consistent Baptist cooperates by reference happily and loyally with Baptist churches, but holds himself equally free to cooperate with any other church as far as such cooperation can serve Christian ends. He bars from his fellowship no church that offers him opportunity for such cooperation. He believes that in the exercise of such free fellowship he will achieve in the maximum degree the Baptist ideal of the church.

Applying to Intelligence Agencies The Law of Common Carriers

The radio has raised some interesting questions of common rights. The committee having charge of the radio control bill in congress proposed the following amendment: "If any licensee shall permit a broadcasting station to be used as aforesaid, or by a candidate or candidates for any public office, or for the discussion of any question affecting the public, he shall make no discrimination as to the use of such broadcasting station, and with respect to said matters the licensee shall be deemed a common carrier in interstate commerce: Provided, that such licensee shall have no power to censor the material broadcast except so as to prevent false, fraudulent, obscene, indecent, profane, libelous or slanderous statements." The time may come when the news function and the propaganda function of periodicals will be separated and no newspaper of general circulation will be permitted to discriminate in its news, advertising or editorial columns for or against any political party or candidate or any measure or proposition in political dispute. The United States Daily now operates under that rule. The general newspaper is in effect a common carrier and should be so treated.

An "Unconscionable Philippic" Surprises One Reader

By the phrase quoted a reader characterizes a recent editorial in THE BAPTIST in support of prohibition. He favors temperance but not prohibition. He says: "Intemperance is sin, but it is not confined to intoxicants. The same hand that presumes on a God- or Constitution-given right to snatch a glass of wine from the European's, the ale from the Briton's, the lager from the German's, has an equal right to deprive you and me of our coffee and tea, of our tobacco, of our meat rations, and compel obedience to other faddish laws." The argument is as old as the temperance movement, but it misses the point at issue. Prohibition is a method, not of prescribing a diet but of dealing with a business which experience has proved to be incurably damaging to society, which is inherently and incorrigibly lawless, and which no measure short of prohibition has been able to control. Business rights end where social damage begins. That is the principle of prohibition. Arguments about personal liberty and table rations are beside the question. Even if they were involved, it is remembered that when public necessity arose during the war the government told us what we might eat and drink. Did patriots complain?

A Selective Nullifier on Selective Nullification

Senator Borah is gently jabbed by one of the leading daily papers because he stands for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. It thinks he ought logically to oppose its enforcement in view of the fact "that there is and has been for half a century notorious nullification of constitutional mandates and it ignores the fact that nullification is unblushingly supported by the forces which are responsible for prohibition and its worst excesses. There is nullification of the constitutional right of suffrage and there is nullification of the right of equal representation." But why did its enumeration stop there? The constitutional guaranties of free speech, press and assemblage have been and are unblushingly nullified by congress, police and courts, as in the war prosecutions and in the proceedings currently taking place at Passaic, N. J. What have this paper and its kind been doing about such acts of nullification? It has consented to such acts and condoned them, just as it is doing in the case of prohibition. Senator Borah may or may not be consistent, but concerning its own consistency there is no question. It has been the consistent ally, as papers of its class generally have been, of the forces of nullification and lawlessness. The only right position for either a senator or a newspaper is to stand for all of the constitution all of the time.

The Laodicean Lament

Sermon preached at the Northern Baptist Convention, May 27, 1926

By J. C. MASSEE

I HAVE a great sorrow in my heart for the Lord Jesus Christ. His must be a continual and inexpressible disappointment. That he is not discouraged with us we have reason to thank God. We know that he is not discouraged from the prophecy of Isaiah 42:1-4:

"Behold my servant, whom I uphold; my chosen, in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the nations. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause it to be heard in the streets. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the dimly burning wick he will not break: he will bring forth justice in truth. He will not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set justice in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law."

But think of His infinite patience, of the centuries of waiting, depending upon the smoking flax and the dimly burning wick. We can only estimate it when we put together the price He paid for the world's redemption, the risk He took in shutting himself up to us as the only means of telling the world of the price He paid, and the so-long Laodicean condition of the church, a condition preeminently in evidence now. This Laodicean condition is evidenced in a coldness toward His Person; a complacent attitude of contentment with our spiritual condition and service, and a complacent disregard of the wounds He is daily receiving in the house of His friends. All of these result from a perennial heedlessness to His warning to the Ephesian church: "I have this against them, that thou didst leave thy first love."

The Refrain of Love

The glowing passion of first love has always had one refrain: "Tell it! Tell it! Tell it wherever you go!" So it was under the impulse of the first persecution that scattered the disciples. They went everywhere telling the good news. There is no surer indication of cooling passion toward Christ and of the weakening of the personal element of faith in him than the waning urge to tell the story of redeeming grace to others. Spiritual men have long recognized the fact that the very necessity to operate successfully the machinery of church organizations often proves a means for the dissipation of spiritual enthusiasm. The whole missionary and money raising program of the present day comes very near to becoming an indictment of a backslidden and back sliding church, in that the machinery of these things commands the time, compels the interest and exhausts the labors of the leaders of the Christian church and of the vast majority of its members in a proxy effort to reach a lost world with the gospel of Christ. It is easy enough to give money if giving money relieves one of the necessity of giving a testimony. It is easy enough to manage machinery, to administer an office, to direct activities, if these things will absolve the conscience from that imperative passion of first love that requires one to endure the labors of an ambassador of Christ beseeching the world on his behalf to be reconciled to God. . . .

It is said that an old negro who had been saved from drowning by a Mississippi steamboat captain waited on all occasions for the appearance of the boat to shout in excitement: "Dar is de man who saved me. I shore does love to pint him out."

I would remind you of a promise, bring you a testimony, submit to you a proposal, and when I have done that ask at your hands an answer for my Lord.

The Master left for his church one inexpressibly precious promise: "Lo, I am with you all the days even unto the end of the age." But that promise was predicated upon the command: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you: and lo, I am with you all the days, even to the end of the age."

Therefore, the one premise upon which I may confidently claim the abiding presence of the Lord Jesus with me is that I shall be busy at this task of making disciples to him. There is another promise of similar preciousness, perhaps involving the very same thing as this promise, in Acts 1:8. "But ye shall receive power the Holy Spirit coming upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Companioned by Christ

Here is the constant guarantee of personal fellowship between us and Him. The first principal underlying the activity of Christ in his new body, the church, from Pentecost on, is that the whole church shall be engaged upon the task of winning men to Christ. When Pentecost was fully come, when the Holy Spirit had descended upon the church, they of the upper room were immediately thrust out into the throngs of Jerusalem to speak every man in the tongue of some other the wonderful words of life. So Paul was consumed by an unfailling passion of soul seeking that made his life the very life of Christ, so that he was able to say: "The life I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God." He could wish himself accused for his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh, that they might know Christ. When in Corinth he was tempted to flee from his enemies and the dangers which they built around him, the Lord Jesus came down and stood by him, in a new vision commanding him to remain and promising him again to abide with him. We all know the story of Peter and "Quo Vadis." You may have Christ with you every day upon the simple condition that you make every day a day of soul winning.

I was born into the kingdom of heaven with a passion of Christ that has known no cooling through forty years of blessed experiences. From the very beginning of my boyhood faith there has been upon me a divine imperative to tell to others the story of His redeeming grace and power. I do not set my ministry forth as the ideal or pattern one, but such as it is it has never varied from the evangelistic emphasis, message and invitation. It is a teaching ministry. It is a pastoral ministry. But such as it is it has been made what it is by the evangelistic passion, both personal and public, which has characterized it from the beginning. Now, after thirty-two years of ministry, certain features and results of it seem worthy of note. Every open door of opportunity to preach the gospel has for me been opened by this evangelistic passion. . . .

An evangelistic ministry has demonstrated its effectiveness in maintaining harmony in the churches. Before it old divisions passed away. Long-standing estrangements were healed, factions lost their place. Running sores of contentions were mollified with the oil of a divine grace. Unsurmountable problems somehow found solution. In the words of a wise deacon in one of these churches it seemed that all we needed to do was to keep the current deep and strong enough and the current would eddy the friction, the problems, the difficulties. My deacons often say to me: "Keep the baptismal waters troubled frequently and you will find that all church problems will be solved in the interest of that symbolic testimony."

Thirty years of evangelistic ministry have also demonstrated the fact that sufficient money for the conduct of the local church, and a reasonable amount for the support of the gospel at the ends of the earth will be provided without special drives, campaigns or nagging reminders and solicitations. An evangelistic ministry has proved efficient as a social gospel. Its powers and efficacy have not been limited to the individual. That gospel as it has been preached through the years has resulted in the settlement of scores of domestic estrangements, the prevention of many divorces, and the reestablishment and reconstruction of many homes. I well remember preaching in a certain cotton mill section to a crowd filling every available inch of space in the room, both sitting and standing. An invitation was given at the close of the message. Many people came seeking and confessing Christ. Two people met at the altar, one coming from one aisle, and the other from another, neither knowing that the other was coming, both finding Christ there. And they found each other again for they were an estranged husband and wife and were about to be divorced. But there was no divorce after that.

A By-Product of the Message

That evangelistic message has as one of its by-products economic readjustments. In the midst of an evangelistic meeting in a southern college a minister known on two continents arose in his place and asked the privilege of making a statement. He declared that thirty-seven years before he had been entrusted by that church with seven dollars to take to a Baptist association. He did not know what had become of the money save that it had not been used according to direction. Twelve years before after in unusual spiritual experience he had promised God to make restitution. He did not find courage to do so until that moment. He laid the money on the table. The immediate result was the conversion within thirty-six hours of twenty-two of a company of twenty-five college boys who had deliberately set themselves to destroy the meeting.

At Dallas, Tex., a Presbyterian elder under the impulse of this gospel message went back to his factory, called in his foremen, and said to them: "We have been running on half time. Call in your men. Start all your work on full time. I heard a gospel today which I believe. I want to run this business so that I shall not be ashamed at the appearing of my Lord."

The evangelistic message has sent into the colleges for further equipment a reasonable contingent of young men and women recruits for the leadership of the church and for its ministry and missionary forces. It has demonstrated beyond question that a truly evangelistic message as in it a perennial freshness; that the people of the churches universally approve and support an evangelistic astorate; that an evangelistic ministry is the surest means of attracting and holding the crowd. . . .

The proclamation of a redemptive gospel is as effective and efficacious now as ever it was. Successful evangelistic preaching depends more upon the message than upon the method. A perennially effective evangelistic message takes account of, and solves all the practical problems of church administration—social, financial, missionary. An evangelistic message enlarges the horizon, increases the efficiency and keeps alive the passion of any minister. Any preacher who has the will to do it may become an effective evangelist in his own pulpit. The invitation habitually given for public confession of Christ brings frequent response and there is no other source of spiritual joy for a church comparable to that experienced in a perennial revival.

That evangelistic passion, a living flame, fed by the oil of divine grace has determined the minister's attitude to a number of questions about which many serious mistakes are made. It has kept him from the bitterness of contentions; from a censoriousness of judgment and from the public castigations of those from whom he has differed, that has left for him an open door to preach to Catholics as well as Protestants, to men engaged in the liquor business as well as other questionable enterprises, and has made him somewhat patient with those who hold different opinions in the realm of theological controversies in which we have been engaged.

Six Months of Soul Winning

On the basis of my experience as an evangelistic pastor I submit to the convention a proposal that from Oct. 1 to March 31 of the current year the convention devote itself, its energies, interests, efforts, agencies, machinery and resources exclusively to the business of winning lost souls to Christ under the following agreement:

1. A moratorium on money raising. That is not to ignore the needs nor to disregard our obligations to our ministers and missionaries, to our schools and hospitals. It is not, indeed, to fail in making the appeal. But we must face the fact that the method of direct import in money-raising has not been a complete success during the past seven years. The proposal that I submit is for six months to present the doctrine of giving as an act of worship, as a part of the evangelistic message and appeal. To seek money as a by-product of a tremendous spiritual quickening rather than to pursue it as the program of a great denominational enterprise. When Jesus needed money for the temple tax he sent Peter down to catch a fish with the promise that he should find money in its mouth when he opened it. Is it too far a stretch of the imagination to remember that Jesus made his disciples fishers of men and that when we catch from the troubled waters of this world fish with the gospel drag, we shall find in the open mouths of their purses adequate money for all the enterprises of the kingdom?

I propose the indirect method of preaching the money question under the impetus and inspiration of an evangelistic ministry that counts God in and gives him a chance under the very best possible conditions to give instruction, create conviction, produce conversion, and bring about a practical response to a new spiritual life. Every minister in this convention who has maintained a constant evangelistic ministry will bear testimony to the fact that that ministry produces money sufficient for all local and missionary needs, if we have the courage to do it, the faith to venture it, the willingness to risk it upon the Word of God.

2. An agreement to declare an armistice on controversy. This does not mean the surrender of a single conviction, or the abandonment of a single position. It does mean that we agree to hold controversy in abeyance for six months, to put ourselves distinctly and definitely in grace for a service which cannot be accomplished by the direct contentions and the controversial issues.

I would like this convention, its ministers and missionaries once again so to realize that they are on duty; that in the midst of provocation, the big stick, and the strong arm, and the loud voice, would be turned aside in the conviction that in proclaiming the gospel of Christ with a definite purpose to win lost men we are on duty.

I heard a charming Irish story a bit ago. An Irish-woman had been to confession. She had been absolved according to the mode of her church and was on her way home, when another fishwife with whom she was in perpetual controversy, came out to her gate and as the first woman passed began to fling on her the foul epithets known to the Billingsgate of that community. The first woman moved on serenely for nearly a block without answering, while the stream of vituperation continued to flow from the foul lips of her antagonist. Then suddenly she stopped and faced about and said: "Ah, go on with you. You know full well that I am in grace today. But just you wait till I am out of grace and then I will be more than a match for you."

I would we might be in grace for a period of six months in which we should be too busy in proclaiming Christ as Saviour and enthroning him as Lord to bandy words with each other. May we not profitably engage every day and every hour of that period in reviving every cardinal Christian doctrine, in preaching Christ for the purpose of winning souls to him? Oh, I know that there are many wrongs which need to be corrected, that there are many giants abroad who need to be slain with David's sling, that there are reconstructions to be made in our methods and machinery. A great loss of revenue and of life has been occasioned by mismanagement and anger, but I would remind you of the story connected with a son of Gideon. Jehu had seized the kingdom. He had slain Jezebel. The kingdom was in turmoil. The chief men sent to Jehu. He required them as a mark of good faith that they slay the seventy sons of Ahab. When the heads were in two heaps at the date Jehu stood before the people with this challenge: "Behold I conspired against my master, and slew him; but who slew all these?"

I grant you that some are lost by political irregularities and social disorders, by the crime waves that sweep the country; by war and pestilence for which we might find some remedy. But here are millions whose souls go out into eternal death. If crime, and war, and neglect have slain their thousands, who has slain these millions? At whose hands will God require the blood of those who perish unwarned by the watchman on the tower? We must save this generation. If we would save the church we must create a new passion for men out of the old passion, the first love passion for Christ. Did I say we must save this generation while saving the church? No. Our Lord was insistent that we could only save the church by saving this generation. We are losing men and destroying the church in our own persistent effort to further a program.

A little lad went home to his mother recently to say: "Mother, this morning the pastor began to tell us about the cross and the crucifixion of Jesus. I was so interested that I could hardly sit still. And then just when he came to the most interesting part he stopped and went on with his sermon." Is not that what we have done? We have come to the cross and we have stopped and gone on with the debate. We have stopped and gone on with the controversy. We have stopped and gone on with the money raising. We have stopped and gone on with the program.

3. A rededication of the denominational machinery and agencies to the one task of winning men to Christ. Let us here and now rededicate our boards, organizations and societies, our secretaries, agents and editors, our pastors, teachers and evangelists, our churches, missions and schools, our publications, books and pamphlets, our seminaries, colleges and hospitals, our students, missionaries and leaders, to the one definite purpose of making disciples to the Lord Jesus Christ. For one six months let us enthrone Christ Lord over all as we all go forth in obedience to his great commission command: "Go ye and make disciples of all the nations"—at home, and abroad, in the city, the town, the rural section, wherever men and disciples of Christ meet.

4. Finally I propose that we employ the method of the men and religion forward movement with 100 cities as centers of organization for themselves and their outlying territory. Let there be gathered about some city church, or churches, all the pastors and church officers of all the churches in one mighty inspirational effort to preach the gospel for the purpose of winning men to Christ. Let the first week in October be devoted to a conference for every city and its territory in which prayers shall be offered daily for a revival of interest in soul winning; in which instruction in the method of soul winning shall be offered; in which testimony to the efficacy of preaching and personal work shall be given; in which forces shall be organized to supervise and direct the effort to set forward the program of gospel preaching in every church in the territory of every one of these 100 cities. Then let us go forth to the task in the confident assurance of the presence of Christ and the fulfillment of his promise: "My word shall not return unto me empty; it shall accomplish my pleasure." . . .

The Sword of His Mouth

BY M. P. BOYNTON

Excerpts from the Memorial Address delivered before the Northern Baptist Convention, Sunday, May 30.

"And there issued from his mouth a sharp two-edged sword." "Come, behold the works of the Lord and the desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth, he breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear in sunder, he burneth the chariot in the fire. Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen. I will be exalted in earth. The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

THE word of God had a great deal to say about war. There are those who have so misread the word of God as to make it support war. The resort to force has made a mighty appeal to human flesh and where the Bible refers to war it is in interpretation of it, showing how the war came about and how it was over-ruled and used by God to further his apparatus. It is in hard denunciation of such methods for settling the disputes between individuals and groups. A thousand years before Christ was born the psalms gave the Jewish church this one from which I have read the text: Psalms 46:7-11. Notice the invitation: "Come, behold the works of the Lord and the desolations he hath made in the earth." God was inviting his people out to look on the desolations made by war. Since that time, 1000 years before Christ, nearly 3000 years ago, what colossal desolations have been made in the earth by war! . . .

"Behold, the works of the Lord." They are not of this sort. His work is not built upon a foundation of graves filled in acts of violence, but desolations he hath made in the earth in judging the breaks of fellowship and these awful feuds of families, tribes, nations. "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth. He breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear in sunder. He burneth the chariots in the fire." There is a commission 1000 years before Christ for disarmament. There is a decree gone forth from the throne of the universe to ground out, to utterly destroy the instruments of death; to put away from the possession of men the things with which they can accomplish such desolations in the earth. "Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the nations. I will be exalted in the earth." There is a remedy; that's the program by which we can learn. We can listen and hear these desolations of the earth speaking to us in an eloquent silence, and go about in the accomplishing of the demolishing of armaments and war materials and great engines of death, in the air, on the sea, under the sea and on the land until we have burned them in the fire and swept these engines of man's wrath and greed and lust away. "The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge." There is the assurance and here is the prophesy of victory to a faithful church. This is the sword of his mouth. What does that figure of speech mean? It means the appeal to the reason, to the affection and to that deep sense in which are the elements of reason and affection we call fair play. It means that we must recognize the other man's estate, the other man's right, that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof and all who dwell on its hills and in its valleys are his people, that God is no respecter of persons, and hath made of one blood all the nations for to dwell on the face of the earth. God is speaking. It is the sword of his mouth, the word is the sword, it is a sharp two edged word, and it is flashing on every side and everywhere in behalf of no age and no race and no particular interest, but rather in the interest of all combined. The sword of his mouth as seen in Revelations is the gospel, the glorious gospel of the Son of God. It is a challenge to-day to this church. What do we have calling for this militant response of the church of Christ in our own time that will give us the equivalents for war that will supply to man all that urge, all that brain and all that energy to his deeper self that we find so terrible in time of war? . . .

The Slacker Vote

The slacker vote or slacker citizenry of America is constantly voting rascals into office in every election. By remaining away from the polls you become an active participant in the organized crime in America. The challenge to the church in this day of memorial when we would be every day soldiers, is to arise and be live soldiers in defence of our liberties that are rapidly slipping from us. We have already lost 50 per cent of the voting population in America even in presidential elections, and it falls down as low as 20 and 16 per cent in other elections. The decline is rapid and doom is here unless we answer that challenge of organized criminal society.

Now the church has the sword. This sword unsheathed and flaming can drive from America those aliens who have no interest in our institutions, who have no love for it rather hatred for our flag, and who are here to exploit what has been freely and generously given them by an idealistic people. They are snakes that have been stiffened in Europe, brought and laid at the firesides of America and warmed into life and strength, only to strike to death the very principles in which they have been warmed back to life. Where is that keen sword that can cut off the heads of all these snakes? We should gently put them on board some steamer and keep them right on going until they are willing to come back, pay taxes and obey the laws here. Aliens by the thousands are thus exploiting the hospitality of America. The church must take that sword and go forth into the political parties and flash its sharp edges on these selfish, unpatriotic traitors, quickest and blackest in political parties, and help those parties for this is a government party. The churches must go in and help them cleanse themselves of the poison and of the rot and of the promise of sure doom that is in both parties in America. . . .

Put America into the family of the nations in a fellowship where unsuspected and trusted and loved in the earth she can teach the world to do what she has already done on this continent. If we can gather all the nations here under one flag with state lines obliterated, so we don't know when we go from one state to another unless we are very watchful; if we can have an international frontier to the north of us 4000 miles long coming out over the waves of the rocky coast of New England, down through the waters of the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, an imaginary line so that a farmer on that line can drive one horse in America and one in Canada and not be certain whether the dirt falls on American soil or English, a line without a gun and without a soldier patrolling it. If we can do that at home as we have done it so magnificently, then we ought to be able to go abroad and teach the other nations to do it and disarm and forever destroy the instruments of war; cleanse the seas of the warships; pull out of the skies those death-dealing, bomb-carrying planes; fish from the sea the submarine and make it unlawful to manufacture submarines; we have no use for them, we don't need to go under the water. Nobody should build a submarine, there is no need for it in commerce and certainly they are no good for picnics. We have lost more men in accidents to submarines than we have lost because of submarines. Our own submarines have killed more of our men than those of the enemy have.

The church of God must go out into the world, and teach the nations. Nobody else has the courage, nobody else has God to help them do it. We believe the church has the commission of God. Now if we remain silent and are pacifists only between wars, and if we let the militarists go on with their system of armament and international conquest at the price of the hatreds that you saw growing in the East and in the Orient, then it will be too late. Now is the time to go out. Now is the call to go forth into the ballot box. The church must go forth with the sharp two edged sword, and the flaming cross. We have nothing to lose, everything to have faith in and gain. "Behold, the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. I will be exalted among the nations. I will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of Hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge."

THANKS be to God for roses rare, for skies of blue and sunshine fair;

For every gift I raise a prayer, thanks be to God!

Thanks be to God for lovely night, for mystic fields with stars bedight;

For hours of dreams and deep delight, thanks be to God!

Thanks be to God for love divine, the hopes that round my heart entwine;

For all the joy that now is mine, thanks be to God!

The Northern Baptist Convention

purpose as for the necessities of current expenses.

After the adjournment many went to inspect the new building of the National Baptist Roger Williams Memorial and to listen to the speakers who interpreted that great monument to our greatest American Baptist. The exercises were held in the impressive auditorium of the church which is still unfinished. Pres. Emory Hunt presided and introduced in turn Dr. E. B. Jackson of Virginia, President Rhoades, Pres. Clarence Barbour and the pastor of the church, Dr. Gove G. Johnson. President Barbour announced the gift of an organ by a donor whose name was not to be given. Altogether it was a heartening service to those who are members of this church and who have struggled so bravely to achieve the task which their pastor's vision set before them.

Wednesday Evening

At no meeting of the convention since the organization of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board has this board been so strikingly represented on the program of the convention as on Wednesday evening. The program opened with a stereopticon lecture by Mr. Harry S. Myers on "The Shepherd of the Shepherds," a role very naturally assigned to the board in its care for helpless ministers and their dependents.

Rev. Herbert W. Virgin spoke on "Denominational Consciousness." His discourse covered a wide field and evoked frequent applause as he pointed out the value of Baptist principles, the importance of teaching them to Baptist young people, and the romance of Baptist history. He never dreamed of closing his talk in a gale of laughter from the audience, but that was what happened. It came about in this fashion: he is an impassioned speaker, also conscientious about keeping within his assigned limits of time. A glance at his watch in the middle of a sentence resulted in this peroration: "O, my brethren—my time is up."

Rev. E. T. Tomlinson presented in connection with the fifteenth annual report of the M. and M. board, an elaborate financial exhibit prepared by the treasurer, Mr. Arthur Harris. It appears that the book value of all investments is $12,788,911.87, but the market value exceeds the book value by $1,276,146.74.

The permanent fund shows in receipts, a balance reported last year, $7,509,800.45; contributions, $2,306.00; legacies, $8,753.53; annuities released by death of donors, $15,000.00; profit on sale of investments, $34,799.26; total, $7,570,659.24.

Disbursements consist of an annuity loss of prior years transferred, $2,382.24; securities revalued on lower rates, $30,592.50; total, $32,974.74.

The balance Apr. 30, 1926, was $7,537,684.50.

The annuity fund reported receipts consisting of the balance reported last year, $440,543.34; received during the year, $68,300.00.

The pension guaranty fund had a total reserve reported last year of $3,343,558.45, and received from the general fund $440,285.77.

Permanent trust fund assets are $11,321,528.72; annuity fund, $496,225.58; retiring pension fund, $959,733.19; current and temporary fund, $103,090.92.

The day was fitly closed by a drama, "The High Calling," which traced the career of a young missionary and his family from the day of his graduation through a thrilling experience in Africa to his final breaking down and death and the subsequent care and support of his loved ones by the board.

Thursday Morning

Morning papers came out Thursday with startling accounts of the preceding day's debate and with interesting interpretations. They say: "Modernism is victorious." Yet nearly all of the debaters on both sides avow themselves fundamentalists. The papers say: "The whole issue is whether the Rockefeller millions shall control the denomination." Yet neither Mr. Rockefeller nor his millions was mentioned in the debate. They quote Dr. W. B. Riley as stating the issue in these terms: "The great fundamental is not loyalty to Christ but loyalty to the Bible as the basis of our religion." Yet all parties in the controversy stood pledged to full loyalty to both Christ and the Bible. Perhaps it is naive to suppose that the issue in the debate was the resolution upon which the convention voted. It sounds too simple for a headline.

"The New Nationalism in the Orient" was the subject of the Thursday morning mission study by Dr. George A. Huntley. He gave a luminous portrayal of the two wars now going on in China, one a military conflict among ambitious war lords, the other a struggle led by the student class to create a free and united China. He traced also the course of the somewhat similar effort for national self-realization in India.

After prayer by Mrs. Orrin R. Judd, Rev. Fred Gracey, president of the Baptist Union of Ireland, was introduced. In five minutes bubbling throughout with fine Irish humor, he brought warm greetings. He said: "I represent the greatest little country in the world, and the strongest Baptists, tracing their denominational ancestry back to primitive Christianity. It was interesting to an Irishman to be here yesterday and to see how peacefully you can fight." He sees the dawning of a new day for the 4000 Baptists in Ireland. A great revival is in progress there and the Baptists are its chief beneficiaries.

In the absence because of illness of Mrs. George W. Coleman, president of the Woman's Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. John Nuveen, the vice president, directed the program of this society. A message of sympathy was sent to Mrs. Coleman. In an address which was largely a cry of distress over trenchments, over withdrawals from important fields and over the crippling of work still carried on—all made necessary by the diminished missionary gifts from the denomination, Miss Mary Howard reviewed the work of the society. Mrs. Katherine Westfall presented the annual report which gave a survey of the many fields and forces of work, noted the death within the year of Miss Ada Morgan, and presented the financial situation in these terms: "At the close of the fiscal year 1924-1925, when the final reports were made, there was a cash deficit of $24,176.26.

"Before the close of the year the budget $413,340 submitted by the society had been tentatively approved by the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention. However, before the annual meeting was held in Seattle the board of managers had been advised that this budget must be reduced, by making the amount from donation source 80 per cent of the sum requested, and further to live within 90 per cent of that amount. This reduced the working budget of the society to $321,811.00. The effect of this reduction was most disastrous to the work on the mission fields and in the schools. The budget of the society largely consists of salaries of missionaries and teachers, with no appropriations for emergencies or unexpected contingencies, consequently when the budget is reduced, missionaries must be discontinued, missions closed, vacancies remain unfilled, and appropriations to schools withdrawn.

"On Nov. 1, 1925, the society had eighty-six less missionaries and teachers on the field than at the close of the year 1919-1920. No new work has been undertaken in more than five years and work which had been established with much promise of success, has been discontinued."

Miss Alice Brimson, the new president of the Missionary Training school in Chicago, read an impressive roll of the graduates of the school who are now at work in many parts of the world, voiced appreciation of the retiring president, Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham, and stated her own ideals for the future work of the school. Mrs. Mary M. Kinney, secretary for Americanization, gave a line of striking incidents in that work. Mrs. George Caleb Moor sketched the progress and significance of the Golden Anniversary movement. Four missionaries were introduced for a few words each. Miss Mildred Cummings of the Chinese school in San Francisco said: "A missionary teacher complained to a Chinese woman that teaching her was like pouring water into a sieve; but received the reply that clean water poured through a sieve cleans the sieve." Miss Helen Hadley of Managua, Nicaragua, said: "Our high school is the only one in the country which is not controlled by the nunneries." Miss Louise Adams of Rankin Christian center, Pittsburg, told the story of a number of boys in her orchestra who struck because Jewish boys were admitted; but later the same boys wanted to come back and the Jewish boys voted to receive them. Miss Ethel Ryan, missionary to the Hopi and Crow Indians had time for nothing but a word of greeting.

An inspiring feature of the program was singing by the Storer double quartet, a musical organization of negroes. Negro "spirituals" are something of a fad, becoming perhaps a trifle stale. But here was more than a group of negro singers. It was a group of artists in sacred song. Melody, harmony, expression, ensemble, were combined in such "spirituals" as "Were You There?" with such power as to lift the audience out of itself and carry it away to Calvary and the resurrection.

Doctor Taylor's devotional half-hour, shut out yesterday by the pressure of debate, had a chance for twenty minutes this morning, and a precious time it was. He knew what he was talking about and stuck to it, but the rest of us did not know and do not remember. He stirred our hearts too deeply for analysis.

At noon all of the assembled thousands went over to the White House to meet President Coolidge and to pose for their collective picture. They sang a few songs, tramped over the president's grassy lawn and waited for him to appear. Presently, he emerged from a side door with a dignified body guard, skooted silently through a lane in the crowd, everybody standing with hat in hand, the camera swept around the scene, the presidential entourage skooted back into the house, and it was over. We had visited the president. A few minutes later he, Mrs. Coolidge, John and the household dogs all appeared amiably on the veranda to give the Baptists a friendly greeting. It was said to be the largest crowd in which the president was ever photographed. The whole affair was so simple and so friendly that these Baptists found a warm place in their hearts for the Coolidges.

Thursday Afternoon.

The afternoon session opened with prayer by Dr. C. W. Brinsted of California. We were reminded of the large factor of home mission work still to be reckoned with in the foreign population which still speaks old world languages. Dr. H. C. Gleiss of Detroit made the report of work done among these peoples. Despite the decrease of those admitted to our nation, there is still demand for work among these newcomers. We believe that these groups should be led to form new contacts and that American local churches should cooperate in work among the various peoples near by, and open their doors to them in Christian hospitality. Only when a sufficient number has been gathered should they be organized into separate churches. Suggestions were offered which should govern these mutual relations. Young people of these groups should receive special attention. A list of thirteen foreign-speaking conferences under the Baptists was appended to this report. Interest was given the hour by a brief word of gratitude from the head of the Swedish seminary.

In reading the report of the delegates to the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, Dr. R. A. Ashworth reviewed the efficient work of the commissions, emphasizing the activities of the new commission on international good-will which, under the chairmanship of Dr. Alfred Williams Anthony, is seeking an approach to our Jewish citizens. Progress has been made in relieving the religious minorities in Europe and over 100 students for the ministry have been aided. In essence the Federal Council is spiritual—emphasizing the oneness of the churches in the deep realities of truth and life.

In order to enlarge the powers of the convention in handling properties which may come into its possession, it was voted to petition for changes in the articles of incorporation, and the by-laws were amended to meet the new requirements.

The young people were given the remainder of the session, until the convention broke up into various conferences.

The young people of the Columbia Association, the name under which the Washington churches serve, presented a unique and highly impressive tableau of work accomplished in a well organized young people's federation. It was a record of great accomplishments under the inspiring leadership of one man, Mr. John Ruthven. Boys and girls, representing the junior unions filed upon the platform with shields spelling the word "Junior," while a lad still far below the teen age, interpreted their work. These were followed by boys and girls from the intermediates representing 230 members. On their shields they told their story of 83 per cent Christians, 78 per cent Bible readers, with 96 per cent givers. It was a wonderful record of interest. These in turn were followed by the seniors with their report of work done. They have attained a remarkable percentage in the various activities. One significant fact stood out above all others, namely, that the senior societies of the association have attained a level of 91 per cent in missionary benevolence. The last group was a tableau of the athletic activities. Rev. Perry Mitchell gathered up the ideals of the young people in this large group, saying that its supreme task is to make disciples; all other interest and activities are subordinate to this.

Interpreting the whole young people's movement of the association, Dr. Henry W. O. Millington, executive secretary of the association, said that the tableau had indicated variety and unity in the work of the young people; it had furnished a complete program of activity and discipline. No other institution affords such a complete training school for any section of the Christian fellowship as the young people have in their unions. It is developing a denominational consciousness, and solving Baptist problems for the next generation.

Mr. John Ruthven, leader of this great young people's movement in the association, was introduced and spoke of its power as in consecrated young people.

After a song led by Robert H. Coleman of Texas, Rev. Mark F. Sanborn of Detroit gave the closing address on the work of the young people of the Baptist denomination. Expressing gratitude that this year a large part of the session was for the first time given the young people, Mr. Sanborn pointed out the growing emphasis on work among the younger people of the churches. It is largely a work among young people led by young people. The average age of the members of the board of managers is thirty-three. In view of the fact that thousands of our young people are denied higher education, there has been created a life work department with a trained secretary, who seeks the consecration of young men and women, not to special and leading tasks, but to the great work in the home churches. The last vision has been the vision of evangelism among the young people and a special department of evangelism has been formed and is now seeking a competent leader. Young people are ready to respond to the call of a Christian democracy; for this a complete program is offered by Christ and his teachings.

Dr. C. A. Brooks read the preliminary report of the nominating committee and the meeting adjourned with a word of prayer by the president of the convention.

Thursday Evening.

Thursday evening opened with interest and closed with enthusiasm. A series of moving pictures displayed the methods and benefits of church vacation schools. The 102nd annual report of the board of managers of the American Baptist Publication Society, distributed in print was discussed in short, incisive and interesting addresses by Revs. Owen C. Brown, Wm. E. Chalmers, Samuel G. Neil and Wm. H. Main. Progress was the uniform keynote. Mr. Neil brought a roar of laughter when he announced that the work of the chapel cars and autocars "is not standing still." Miss Meme Brockway announced prizes awarded to several states for noteworthy Sunday school work.

Dr. J. C. Massee stirred the assembled thousand deeply with a sermon on "The Laodicean Lament," taking for a text the words, "I have this against thee that thou didst leave thy first love." After skirmishing a few minutes with the occasion and meaning of these words, he swung into an impassioned plea for evangelism. (Dr. Massee's address is given elsewhere in this issue.) When he had finished he sat down trembling with emotion and for some minutes a deep hush pervaded the hall. It was broken by a motion of Doctor Brougher that a committee be appointed to consider ways of carrying the proposals of Doctor Massee into effect. Such a committee was created by the appointment of Doctor Massee together with secretaries Frank A. Smith of the Home Mission Society and Samuel G. Neil of the Publication Society. The proposals to be considered were "a moratorium on money raising, an armistice on controversy, a rededication of the denominational machinery and agencies to the one task of winning men to Christ and the employment of the method of the men and religion forward movement with 100 cities as centers of operation." Formerly Doctor Massee co-operated actively with the Bible Union group, but with great frankness and tenderness he explained that he had found in those activities the danger of a loss in himself of spiritual power for an evangelistic ministry and had therefore withdrawn from the Bible Union movement, though abating nothing of his desire to promote purity of faith and life.

Friday Morning.

The matter came up on Friday morning with a report from the special committee recommending the appointment of a working committee of fifteen for the promotion of evangelism on the general lines proposed. At that time Drs. Earl Pearce and W. B. Riley, speaking for the Bible Union expressed themselves as favoring evangelism but refusing to enter into any agreement that might impose restraint upon the freedom of their organization in carrying out its program. The motion for the appointment of the committee of fifteen was carried without a single dissenting vote. Later the committee was named by President Rhoades as follows: F. A. Smith, New York, convener; W. H. Main, Pennsylvania; S. C. Neil, Pennsylvania; H. F. Stillwell, Ohio; J. C. Massee, Massachusetts; W. E. Chalmers, Pennsylvania; William Reid, Rhode Island; G. R. Baker, New York; Mrs. K. S. Westfall, New York; H. E. Dutton, New York; J. F. Herget, Ohio; W. C. Coleman, Kansas; F. M. Goodchild, New York; E. V. Pierce, Minnesota, and Edwin Phelps, Illinois.

Friday Afternoon

Home missions was the main topic for Friday afternoon. Secretary Charles L. White submitted without reading the printed report and addresses followed. Rev. Eugene E. Smith, a negro, spoke with elegant and powerful eloquence for his people as beneficiaries of the home mission work of northern Baptists. At the close of the civil war, he said, the five million emancipated slaves found themselves in ignorance and poverty, but faced the future with courage, resourcefulness and faith. The Home Mission Society has earned from them an everlasting gratitude which "notwithstanding the mouthings of a few malcontents," still lies like the deep sea in the heart of the race. The need for help continues and is intensified by the northward migration of the negro people.

Mr. J. J. Zmrhal, one of the six district principals of the Chicago public schools introduced "The Second Generation of New Americans," and reviewed some of the problems connected with them as these are revealed in the work of the public schools. He traced evil influences at work upon them to two general sources, namely a decline in the restraints of home life and the bad environment of the city streets. As a school man he declared his conviction that there is no adequate nor highly hopeful remedy short of the influence of the Christian religion personally experienced and brought to bear practically upon the life of the individual.

Rev. W. O. Samuelson, who is doing a significant piece of rural work, sketched the varied and manifold activities which an adequate program for such a field requires, and which he is putting into effect. Rev. Frank L. King sketched gospel work among the Indians; Rev. E. F. McNeill, "The Gospel on Wheels"; and Rev. Oliva Broulette gave an interesting report of work among the French in New England.

Of special interest was an address by Dr. Andres Usuna, a Protestant educated in the United States with the degree of Ph.D., former governor of one of the largest Mexican states, and now head of the united Protestant Publishing Company in Mexico. Introduced by Doctor White with an appropriate statement of the significance of his appearance on the program of the convention, Mr. Usuna discussed in a careful and analytical manner "The Changing Religious Order in Mexico." He interprets the current agitation as essentially a struggle to make both religion and the state serve harmoniously the life of the Mexican people. This address will appear in THE BAPTIST.

The death of Dr. Wallace Buttrick was announced and suitable reference was ordered in the minutes of the Home Mission Society.

Dr. S. O. Sycamore of Holyoke, Mass., was presented as fraternal delegate from the Ontario-Quebec Baptist Conference, was warmly welcomed and voiced brief greetings.

Election of officers was the main business of the afternoon. The committee on nominations, created in the impartial manner provided in the by-laws by the election of one from each state delegation was thoroughly representative, as appears from the following list of its members:

Rev. Rallam Butler, Rev. J. West, Rev. S. J. Skevington, Rev. A. H. C. Morse, Rev. F. P. Freeman, Rev. H. C. Broughton, W. W. Everett, Rev. R. P. Douglass, Rev. C. A. Brooks, Rev. P. J. Morris, Rev. J. F. Catlin, Rev. W. H. Rogers, Rev. F. F. Peterson, Rev. F. M. Swaffield, W. G. Spencer, Rev. Arthur Hoag, Rev. W. L. Smith, Rev. Henry Van Engelen, Rev. H. C. Whitcomb, Rev. A. J. Archibald, Rev. A. H. Stanton, G. H. Estey, Rev. R. H. Barrett, Rev. C. W. Finwall, Rev. I. N. De Puy, Rev. H. L. Kempton, R. I. Levering, Rev. A. W. Cleaves, J. M. Coon, F. J. Lucas, Rev. C. J. Oxley, Rev. O. T. Day, Rev. C. O. Johnson, Rev. J. W. Ayres, Rev. R. A. McMullen, and Rev. Steve Pyle.

The committee offered its list of nominations without any expression of dissent from any member. Great applause followed the announcement that Doctor Brougner had been nominated for president of the convention. The full list of nominations follows:

Officers of the Northern Baptist Convention: president, Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougner, Oakland, Calif.; first vice-president, W. C. Coleman, Wichita, Kans.; second vice-president, Ray L. Hudson, Philadelphia, Pa.; corresponding secretary, Rev. Wm. C. Bitting, St. Louis, Mo.; recording secretary, Rev. Maurice A. Levy, Pittsfield, Mass.; statistical secretary, Rev. Chas. A. Walker, Dover, Del.; treasurer, Orrin R. Judd, New York City.

Members of the executive committee, term expires 1929: E. Y. Booker, Worland, Wyo.; Rev. D. J. Evans, Kansas City, Mo.; Rev. A. H. Gage, Brattleboro, Vt.; J. T. Kraft, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. F. L. The Devotional Life

Enthroning Jesus As King

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matthew 28:18

BY HOWARD CHANDLER ROBBINS

THE first followers were not exceptionally good or gifted in the beginning. They were a fair cross-section of the folk that Christ found about him, in Capernaum and Bethsaida, common people in the acceptable sense of that good word. They were more or less selfish than we are; more or less quarrelsome; more or less hard-hearted; more rather than less obtuse. Christ was obliged to rebuke them for human frailties. They possessed not only common faults, but common virtues of humanity. And they had the fundamental virtue of loyalty, the instinct of hero-worship, and were capable of deep affection.

The Influence of Jesus

Their hero was Christ, and it was this that changed them. As time went on, under the influence of Jesus all but one of them became holy.

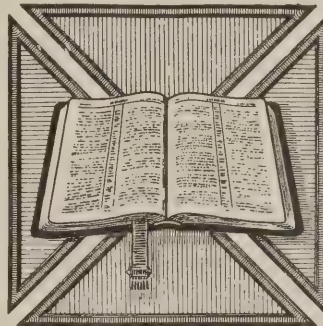

The most wonderful thing about human personality is its latent power of loyal affection, its unexplored resources, its ability to improve in response to the ideals of one beloved.

Love draws loyalty into almost physical resemblance to its object.

So these fishermen and taxgatherers grew holy in association with Jesus. He recognized and called forth the resources of their natures. Of the unstable Peter he made a fortress of righteousness. Of Mary Magdalene he made a saint. He spoke a royal word of pardon to the penitent thief; then opened to him the gates of paradise.

Even before they discerned who it was whose suffering they shared, the disciples of Jesus showed themselves willing to share it.

Peter said that they had left all to follow Him. James and John professed their readiness to drink His cup and be baptized with His baptism.

But these first willing followers had serious limitations. In Gethsemane, while Jesus prayed in agony, sweating drops of blood, they slept. When Judas with a kiss betrayed their Lord, all of them forsook him. At the cross only John remained.

We are in no position to blame. We are just as eager as they were for short cuts into the kingdom. We want the triumph without the passion, the victory without the cross.

It is this humiliating lack that hinders the progress of the kingdom and its establishment on earth. We Christians hesitate at the fellowship of suffering.

So Jesus still suffers in the humanity with which he identified himself in the earthly life and forever.

The Sufferings of Jesus

Jesus suffers in the tortured negro, burned without trial at the stake. Jesus is suffering in the convict camps in the South, where though a terrible war was fought against slavery, a form of it still exists, and where lonely, overworked men sometimes are beaten to death. Jesus suffers in little children, who toil long hours to gratify the cupidity of mill-owners and stockholders, who find child-labor profitable.

Jesus suffers in the youth tempted to vice by bootleggers, pedlers of narcotic drugs, leering billboards and managers of theaters who pander to lust.

What would it mean if the followers of our Lord entered into these, his sufferings?

It would mean the elimination of a thousand frictions in economic and industrial life, the end of banalities of social ostentation and display, the cessation of racial and religious strife, the lifting of public morals to a higher plane on the part of journalists, publishers and managers of picture-shows.

It is time that the good will and humane sentiment of the country should protect the common decencies of life.

Our Task

More than this we should be doing, we who name Jesus as king. Less than this we could not do. For Jesus came to his disciples and said: "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations."

The man of Nazareth, the friend of sinners, the victim of Calvary, the meek and lowly Jesus claims for himself as a matter of course the most awful prerogative of the Godhead—universal empire. "For as the Father hath life in himself, even so gave he to the Son to have life in himself; and he gave him authority to execute judgment." "For as the Father raiseth the dead and giveth them life, even so the Son also giveth life to whom he will."

It will be by acceptance of this divine kingdom, by enthroning Jesus as king in our hearts and in our modern world, that men and nations will find immortal life.

The Chimney Corner

The Conversion of the Revered Judge

BY JOHN WINTHROP

IN that first, swift glance the Rev. Thomas Peters thought his church official might not be like a bending tree planted by the rivers of humanity, but like a cast-iron pillar erected in the temple of the Lord.

"If thy heart is as my heart, give me thine hand," the famous Judge Yantis welcomed, gravely smiling as his new pastor alighted from the train.

"Glad to be here, Judge," responded the pastor, looking down from his slender height with an answering smile. "This is Mary, my wife, and these are the children, Sarah, James and John."

"Hail, daughter, and the children the Lord hath given thee!" Then, "You are—all of you—to come with me to my home." The Judge lingered with his greeting of Mary, who met him in her best grace.

The home proved to be some ancestral house, splendid, no doubt, in its day, but struggling now to retain its departing glory. It was situated on the street which led to the city cemetery in what was once the elite section of Huntsville, but revealed its pristine respectability in neglected pillared mansions toppling down over the heads of the coarsely-clad tenants.

The large family had assembled to greet the new pastor, and his family. There were nine of the Yantis scions. Whatever their differences, all of them made a show of reverence for their father. The new minister thought he detected slightly more response in the Judge toward prim Mary, the eldest, and toward precise Frances, the youngest; almost aversion for the sprightly Thomas junior; perhaps tolerance toward the others. Mrs. Yantis seemed to be a fussy little woman, but her bark in the thought of the children, it soon became evident, was far worse than her bite.

Greetings over, Dinah, the old cotton-headed, black cook, announced dinner. The head of the house, his ancient Prince Albert swinging gracefully led the way through dim, winding halls to the dining-rooms, his carriage erect, his step measured, and his white hair and long, patriarchal beard flowing like that of Moses.

When all were seated about the rectangular table, he gently opened a well-worn copy of the scriptures from which he read solemnly an Old Testament episode, then asked the pastor to invoke the blessings of the Almighty on the food. Following this the household under the leadership of the voluble mother set up a clatter which continued throughout the meal, lulling only as "pater familias" uttered some oracle. Though one of the Judge's eyes was glass he might have seen well through the one which was alive. His only jesture was that of stroking his august beard.

After dinner the entire party returned to the living-room where the Judge sat in state beside the hearthstone, a little table at his elbow on which rested his ash-tray and his Bible. He held aloof from talk, the several members of his family not lacking in zest in keeping the conversation lively.

"Of course, you are not an old scold like our last pastor," observed Mother Yantis.

"I'm glad you are not sour nor bald-headed nor hook-nosed either," spoke up Elizabeth.

"And don't have a yard full of rowdy children," chimed in Frances.

In their eagerness to impart guiding information every one clamored for an opinion or a construction. The Judge with benevolent tolerance quietly smoked his cigar, perused his Sunday-school quarterly or drowsed over his Bible. He quite abandoned the pastor to his entertaining flock. At length, when the hour for retirement came, he read another passage from the Old Testament, a thundering word from one of the prophets, and requested Thomas to offer prayer, throughout which he breathed unctious Amens.

Awaking next morning with mind unfettered in the Sabbath stillness, Thomas Peters experienced a disturbed feeling. A cold, clammy hand out of the dead past seemed laid upon him. Was it awe of the mere fact that this was an historic church? Was it the lingering spell of the late illustrious Isaiah Paulson? He recalled Doctor Paulson as being the most orthodox minister of his denomination, his standardized correctness extending not only to the great doctrines and practices of the Baptists but to the most minute details of conduct, manners and dress. That life-sized portrait of him which hung in the Judge's study gave one the impression of absolute finality.

And Judge Yantis would demand the same quality in all successors. He remembered the widely current report that the Judge had been sensationally converted as an exceptionally lively youth under one of that mighty preacher's sweeping polemics, ever after to be the soulmate of Doctor Paulson, the deacon who would carry out his slightest wish. In the estimation of the Judge the world would never see Doctor Paulson's like again—"he was a pattern saint, whose policies can never be surpassed, if ever equalled."

Upon retiring after thirty years in the ministry of the First church, Doctor Paulson had urged Judge Yantis to take the church. The arrangement had not prevailed, because the Judge, then a young man, had not felt divinely called. True, his law practice had since been closely associated with his religious vocation—for he maintained a profitable office which was augmented by his secretarial and fiscal relations to several religious boards. The prefix to his name was purely honorary. There had been at least six successors to Doctor Paulson in the past seven years, no one of them able to satisfy the scrupulous standards of the devout Judge.

Thomas Peters wondered in the early hush. Strange, the call in his case had been unanimous. Why had the Judge at last consented to the plea for a younger, less experienced man in reversal of the church's late policy of calling only celebrities? Of course, it was because the church had been floundering on the rocks and had turned to a young man with some reputation for piloting sinking craft into safe harbors. But what if the Judge would not cooperate?

A fair congregation saluted the new pastor that first Sunday morning. The unusual text proclaimed, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." The preacher stressed a new aspect of religion, presented it as being, not primarily a creed but a life, a personal relationship with Christ. He made it plain that the abundant life included all of life—physical, mental and spiritual—the church must minister to all. And the supreme test of a church's worth is in whether or not it really ministers to life. The few young people pricked up their ears, and gave admiring attention. The austere Judge stared up from the family pew out of his one live eye. Thomas Peters, atingle with impulses to win, profoundly convinced of his thesis, could not be sure what the Judge was thinking.

The appealing invitation to church membership followed. Fourteen candidates offered themselves—dream of a growing church come to pass already!

"These all bring letters from other churches of the same faith and order," Thomas announced. "I will ask the clerk to read the first letter and certify the rest," he said before taking the congregational vote.

"Brother pastor, I beg pardon," spoke up the Judge solemnly, "but it is our custom always to read each letter separately before taking the vote, and to vote on each individually."

British Baptists are having something of the same financial experience as those in the United States. Their Baptist missionary society is wrestling with a debt that has grown to nearly £35,000.

BOYS and Girls

Boys and Girls Who Have Done Things

Dear Boys and Girls:

I hope that you read in last week's issue about the new story contest of boys and girls who have done things. It seems to me it is always fun to know what others have done at our age, and sometimes it makes us realize: "Why, I could do that!" Just as if we had never thought of it before. So do send in your letters to me, and remember there will be a book prize for the best account sent by a girl, and another book prize for the best account sent by a boy. Meanwhile there are some stories of great people which you probably do not know.

He Wrote Operas.

His name was Richard Wagner, and nobody thought he was an unusual little boy. He was not even a good student, he hated study, just as some boys still hate it; and as for music lessons, he had a great loathing for practicing, so that his mother feared he would never learn to play at all.

But there is always one thing which everybody especially enjoys, and you will be amused to know that little Richard Wagner's one special thing was the writing of poetry. At a very early age he wrote a deep tragedy which made his family open eyes and mouths, for in the first four acts he killed off forty-two of his characters! This was far too many for he soon discovered that there weren't enough left in the play to finish it; but a poet knows a trick or two, so Richard brought back all the characters he needed as ghosts, which was clever of him.

Then he gave up being a poet and began to study music seriously. This meant the hardest kind of practicing hour after hour, day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year. It meant poverty, too; it meant failures of all kinds; it meant defeats and disappointments; once it came near meaning starvation. Then he wrote an opera named "Rienzi" which was accepted and the unknown composer became famous, writing many other beautiful operas. You have heard of "Tannhauser," "Parsifal," and "Lohengrin" which are the best-known of his works. Indeed, almost every bride in the United States is married to the tune of the famous wedding march in Lohengrin—"Here comes the bride, see how she.....!" You know it yourself, don't you? Although I assure you that those particular words were not written by Wagner.

The Boy Who Became President.

His name was Theodore Roosevelt. We are so used to thinking of him as a very strong, robust person, the head of the Rough Riders, that it is always a surprise to remember that he was a delicate child, and was not expected to ever be strong. But special exercises which he practiced steadily for several years helped him to become a very vigorous sort of person.

The Explorers' Club

When he was a boy he liked nothing better than to visit the market not far from his house. There he would gaze earnestly at all the queer fishes and animals for sale, and in a special little notebook he used to jot down interesting facts about the queer specimens he had seen. This was the beginning of his lifelong interest in natural history. As he grew older he studied a great deal about animals and plants and trees, and learned so much that he became quite an authority.

I do not need to tell you all the other things he became: secretary of the navy, head of the Rough Riders, vice-president of the United States, then president. One of the splendid things about him was that, although everyone knows what a fine soldier he was, he was a strong believer in peace. He was the winner of the Nobel prize of $40,000 for helping to promote peace between Russia and Japan. He gave all this money to benefit great public institutions.

The members of the Roosevelt family were devoted to each other, and Mr. Roosevelt wrote so interestingly to his sons and daughters when he was away from them that his letters were published. Mr. Roosevelt said of them: "I would rather have this book published than anything that has ever been written about me." To his son, Theodore, he wrote: "I need not tell you that character counts for a great deal more than either intellect or body, in winning success in life."

Mark Twain

His real name was Samuel L. Clemens, and it was not until he had grown up and begun to write books that he adopted the pen-name of Mark Twain. He was born in a little town in Missouri where there were only twenty-one houses, and many negro families. He never liked school, but he did like spelling. The things about which he had wonderful knowledge were curious items as: the best place to hide during hide-and-go-seek; the most wonderful caves, where, how to reach, etc. Life on the Mississippi river was full of thrills, and the adventures in "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn" were many of them true events in Sam's own boyhood.

When Sam Clemens was twelve, his father died and the boy left school for good in order to earn money to help his family, for they were poor. He started in as an apprentice to a printer, receiving only his board and his clothes at first, but he learned all the phases of the printing business until he was worth real wages to his printer. By the time he was seventeen he had saved enough to take a trip to Philadelphia and New York to see a little of the world. There was nothing in his boyhood to make anyone guess that here was a boy destined to write such humorous books and to deliver such humorous lectures that everyone would soon know his name. But he had packed into his mind all sorts of curious, lovable, laughable, usable facts about people and places that his special way of talking was a delight to all who heard him. I remember how a friend of his, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, wrote to him once saying that he would like to have a picture of Mark Twain. And would you believe it? Every day, for fourteen days, Mr. Aldrich received a picture of Mark Twain through the mail!

The Boy Who Put His Finger in the Dike

Not very long ago in a certain school, the teacher asked her pupils to write down whom they would like to have been, if they could choose some famous person in the past. One boy wrote on his slip of paper: "I would like to have been the boy who put his finger in the dike that time when all Holland would have been flooded if the water had gotten through that hole. A thumb isn't much to save a country with, but if you can use your thumb for such a big purpose I should like to have done it."

It seems to me that's a pretty fine thing to want—to use your thumb for your country. You can use yours, too! And you can use your voice, especially your voice. You can say things, kind things about the people who live within our gates, those people who dress a little differently from us, who speak a little differently, and think a little differently, but who are really like us, after all. We can do the biggest thing for our country by holding out not a thumb, but a whole hand to these boys and girls, being friends. Then we can use our voices and tell everybody: "My friend so and so." America would be saved much trouble if you would put your hand and your voice into the hole of "Racial Misunderstanding!"

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on C. L. P. Topic for July 4

True Patriotism

If you can possibly do so, have "Makers of the Flag" by Franklin Knight Lane, read in your meeting. If you live in Canada, perhaps you could, by changing a few words, adapt this talk to suit your needs. Perhaps you cannot secure a copy of this from the library. If you will send a two cent stamp to the Baptist Young People's Union of America, they will be glad to send you a copy of this little address.

Have two of your members prepared to give "bombastic," "soap box" addresses, bringing in phrases about "our liberty" and so forth, telling how to "save the flag." Have three others prepared to give quiet but thoughtful, and interesting talks on doing good deeds, reading good books, being true to ideals, etc.

In meeting, one of the members could come up to the front and give his high-sounding speech on the country, followed by one with a quiet little talk. Perhaps another quiet one could follow, with a noisy one and then again a quiet.

When these addresses are finished, the leader could tell the members that there are two kinds of "patriots"—those who "save the flag" by talking and those who "carry the flag" by doing what is right. Have the young people decide which of the speakers were "savers" and which were "carriers."

In open discussion, have the young people speak on which of these two attitudes is better.

That Summer Slump

Are you wondering how you can overcome that usual summer "slump" or have you resigned yourself to its inevitability? The young people of Temple church, Detroit, Mich., have a good idea for holding interest. These young people organize a club for the summer. Certain fees, which are used for paying the rent of a cottage at a near-by lake, are taken up for the entire season. In addition to this, the members pay a small sum, used for food, for each week-end spent at the cottage. Young people who are not members of this club may spend their week ends at the cottage by paying a larger amount than members.

The cottage is rented for three months, and each week-end it is filled with a large group of Baptist young people. These week-ends are regular picnic times, with swimming, hiking, singing, eating, or just plain "loafing" as the chief sports. On

"We are all 'dee-lited' with the Young People's Leader and read it enthusiastically and are very much interested in it. It is the best thing we have ever seen."

—V. Stanley Silke,
H. K. Langdon,
Oakland, Calif.

Sundays the young people go to the little church in the town and there take part in the services just as they would in their home church.

In this way the young people are kept together throughout the summer. Although they are not working in their own church, they are keeping on with their Christian service, getting new ideas and perhaps imparting some of their ideas to those in the church they attend. At the same time they are having an enjoyable social time; they are being refreshed for their days in the city; and they are adding to their lives the beauty of friendship with other Christian young people.

The First church of Detroit has a different plan for holding the interest of young people throughout the summer months. Each week the young people of First church publish a little paper called "The Password." This gives all the news about what has been and tells of what is to be. Little personal items about the members of the society, explanations of actions or conditions within the church, news of what other societies in Detroit are doing, announcements of what the young people of First church have done and are going to do—all these are included in "The Password."

When the young people of First church go out on their vacations, issues of "The Password" are to be mailed to them wherever they are. These vacationers will be kept informed of what is going on in the church and young people's society by means of this little publication. It will be a veritable "letter from home" telling about what Johnny and Susie and Jimmy are doing and where they are going, and possibly what they are wearing. In other words, these young people will not feel as if they had been "out of things" when they get back. They will be acquainted with what has been going on during their absence. They will be held together in spirit even though they are separated in body.

Perhaps your summer program has already been arranged. Perhaps you have decided to drop things altogether for the summer. If you have done the latter there is yet time to change your mind and changing one's mind is no longer considered a weakness. Your young people will probably be glad to do either one or both of these stunts for keeping away the summer separation which usually attends hot weather. Or you can probably think of other ways for keeping your young people together, if not in body then in spirit. You'll find that it pays, no matter what effort it costs.

Convention Hall of Fame

who is a secretary of the commission on international justice and good will of the Federal Council of Churches and whose particular responsibility is to correlate the youth groups of our churches in the cause of peace, will conduct the forum on peace and international relationships at the Los Angeles Convention of Baptist Young People, July 7-11.

"There is a foolish notion today that respect is maintained by the manifestation of the ability to resist and to punish aggression," T. A. Wigginton states in the Presbyterian Advance. "It is a great mistake. The display of power may cause others to delay attack, but it arouses a suspicion which makes an eventual clash all but inevitable. It was in this way that a race between European nations in increased armaments was fostered for years, with the inevitable result of a world-shaking conflict. A story is told of a man who purchased a piece of land which had been in litigation for years. When the new owner was confronted with the same old claim he told the claimant to take double what he claimed, with the result that the claimant refused to take it, saying that is was 'only the principle of the thing' which had kept him fighting."

Among Ourselves

India Also Moves

By ADA R. FERGUSON

It has been thrilling these past months to see how India is coming along towards prohibition. There are many forces at work and it is a part of the propaganda of many different societies and organizations. Not least is the Women's Christian Temperance Union which is at work in India. Perhaps some of the readers of THE BAPTIST have been fortunate enough to hear Miss Mary J. Campbell who has been living, while on furlough, in Waterloo, Iowa, and has done much speaking for the Baptists as well as others.

The National Convention was held in Bombay in January, and for six days a group of women was busy morning, noon and night, for evening meetings began about nine o'clock.

Delegates were present from each of the nine divisions of India. From far-off Assam came a retired Welsh missionary accompanied by a Bengali woman who is inspectress of schools and an honorary organizer for the W. C. T. U. North, South, East and West were all represented and women of all kinds were there. The Indian women are coming to the fore and are acting as presidents, secretaries and treasurers of the divisional unions. They served on committees and took part in the program in a way that made us realize how much they will be able to accomplish.

Papers were read and discussions held on vital topics of the day: mothers-in-law, child welfare, social purity, and kindred subjects, showing that the same problems claim attention in India as in Western lands. The cinema called forth severe condemnation because of its false presentation, especially to youth, of life in the West. Resolutions were passed asking that the government establish a board of censorship and control to be in the chief port city and thus prevent the entry of undesirable films.

A paper on citizenship by one of the young Indian organizers, was an innovation. Indian women are already on city councils and will soon be in the legislative councils of the state.

Because the city of Bombay offered a good field for propaganda, groups of women held meetings in various halls and Y. M. C. A. lecture rooms. One meeting was held in the social service hall of a society which is doing welfare work among the mill hands. At this time a drama on the evil of drink and its eradication was presented by a group of mill boys and was witnessed by an audience of over 600 people who, in spite of working all day, were eager to play and listen to lectures.

Vice in Bombay is notorious and we had an opportunity to see the disgraceful way in which it is displayed, but the vigilance committee is making a desperate effort to clean things up and we feel sure that if there were less drink there would be less prostitution.

Among the pieces of work attempted was the circulating of a petition to the viceroy and his council, asking that the various provinces be given the right of local option, so that the people might have an opportunity to say whether they wish to have liquor in their part of the country. This has been circulated in about a dozen languages and had over 31,000 signatures. When one considers that no one under twenty-one years of age was allowed to sign, no one but British subjects—cutting out all non-British missionaries and all residents of native states—this is a good showing, especially since most are afraid of signing their names to a paper.

The convention elected as president Miss Mary J. Campbell who has been in India over forty years and knows "more about the opium and drink traffics than any one else in India and has done more for prohibition than any one else." A cable was sent to her and her reply accepting the office delighted the convention. Young girls from different schools sang and helped in the meetings. The convention was a success and those present felt that India is moving toward the goal of prohibition.

Some of us went from Bombay to Delhi, the new "white city" which is to be the fairyland of India. It, too, has a drink evil. Here the All-India Prohibition League of India was formed. It was great to sit in that gathering and listen to earnest men and women, for here too, Indian and European men and women gathered to discuss ways and means for freeing India from the thrall of drink.

The president was a Madras Brahmin, member of the legislative assembly; the secretary, an English Baptist missionary; the treasurer, an Indian Christian, the acting national secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and also a member of the legislative assembly. Many other members of that body were present and delegates, Hindu, Brahmin, and non-Brahmin, Mohammedan and Sikh, Englishman and American, sat side by side and planned for the better day in India. No bitterness was shown, the dread "color" question was not raised. It was India and her good which was filling the minds and thoughts of all. At the public meetings, addressed in more than one language by men and women, there was a sense of dignity and moderation. They were in earnest, and they mean that prohibition shall come to India. It is only a question of time, and ways and means.

There was a meeting for purdah (veiled) women in their own park, attended by more than 200 veiled women, and presided over by one of their number, a Begum, who read an address in Urdu and had copies of it printed and circulated.

This all shows how India is coming on; how she is coming to the place where she will assert her right to decide such questions as to whether her youth shall have this temptation before them or no; as to whether revenue or souls shall weigh the most in her councils. Her men and women are beginning to see that they must work together for her freedom if it is to come.

India is going to have prohibition. She is watching America. Will she find a friend and ally or one who has failed?

Progress of Evangelism in Latin America

MR. and MRS. FRED J. PETERS are continuing their campaign of evangelism in Latin North America from whence many reports of their successful labors have come during the past three years. They are now (April) in San Salvador. It is expected that before they leave this republic they will have visited several of the stronger Baptist churches.

Stirring letters recently were received from Mr. Peters in which he described conditions under which the missionaries of the two Home Mission societies must work in order faithfully to present the claims of the gospel in this land. It appears that the police and authorities, since the revolution of Oct. 25 last, are favorable to the Jesuits who won the revolution and now dominate politics. In one inland town it was evident that the police exceeded their duty for they drove away all who stood outside the building where the meeting was held. Each night, apart from the congregation inside the hall, there generally was a large group, mostly men, outside, who were eager to hear the truth although too timid or not interested enough to enter. From these were gained converts. When the pastor protested against the rough tactics of the police in driving away these seekers, a guard pointed his rifle at him and threatened to shoot him if he spoke another word. On a subsequent night the police searched all who were standing outside and if a person had even a walking stick it was taken from him. In spite of all these difficulties in this small town twenty-four made decisions for Christ.

In Managua, the capital city, there was no interference from the police. In Masaya, however, as the people from the rural districts came in to attend the meetings, they were stopped by armed guards, searched and warned to get home early. "I must not fail," writes Mr. Peters, "to record the baptism of twelve believers which took place in Masaya on a recent Sunday afternoon. Six of these believers were from Masaya, five from Masatepe, and one from San Marcos, these latter two places being many miles from Masaya. Several of these will make valuable additions to the gospel forces in Nicaragua, especially Don Teofilo Marcado, a well-to-do farmer of Masatepe. Up to this date we have baptized thirty-three believers while in Nicaragua, and there are twice that number now ready to be baptized in churches that have no ordained pastor. Besides this there is a much larger number in candidates' classes not yet accepted for baptism. And I should like to add that Pastor Parajon has baptized twenty-eight of those who made profession of faith in his church during January."

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. COON

THE West Central district of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies met in annual meeting at Grand Island, Neb., May 11-13. This includes the states of Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska. An elaborate program was given covering the three days, the appointees being present with scarcely an exception. One disappointing item was the failure of the radio addresses; one from Mrs. H. E. Goodman of Chicago and one from Mrs. G. W. Coleman of New York. For some reason connection could not be made. Besides many of the offices and leading workers in the district, three from beyond the territory gave addresses of value and interest.

Miss Sumire Okazaki, a Japanese student in Seattle, gave two addresses illustrating the customs of her people. Miss Isabel A. H. Crawford a missionary among the Indians, described the pioneer work among the original American. Miss Hattie V. Petheram from Burma gave two appealing addresses. One statement was startling: "Worn by overwork we sent to the board for helpers direly needed. Reply came that there were no funds to pay new missionaries. We said, 'If the board can send helpers we will pay their salaries.' Reply came, 'no fund even to send them.'" And this while a large part of the wealth of this rich nation is held by members of churches.

The attendance of outside delegates was excellent; enrolment 103. Among resolutions passed was one advocating the strictest defense by voice and vote of the eighteenth amendment. The officers were reelected with one exception; Mrs. J. N. Atkinson, of Topeka, Kans., was elected vice-president of the Home Mission Society.

Pastoral changes seem always in season. Rev. Parker Smith moves from Tekamah to Broken Bow. Rev. J. W. McDaniels has resigned the pastorate of the Temple church, Lincoln, and Rev. W. B. Bancroft will supply the pulpit for a time. Rev. Frank F. Bock, of Tobias, became pastor at Loup City, May 1. Rev. E. M. Owing, late convention pastor, has settled at Farnam; he also supplies the church at Antelope Center. Chapman and Prairie Creek churches have called Rev. R. Dunbar, of Danville, Ill., who will be on the field soon. Rev. Wm. Cain of Adams becomes pastor at Halbrook. Rev. B. H. Ward, formerly director of evangelism, has become field representative of the Board of Missionary Cooperation in Ohio.

The Arnold church held several days' meetings as dedicating services for its completed church which has been used in part for three years. Pastor W. G. Hoover and his people have a hopeful outlook. Rev. A. C. Downing closed a short but successful pastorate at Tilden. We hope he will remain in the state. At Norfolk revival services closed on Easter Sunday. Fifty were converted and forty have united with the church. The two churches, Mead and Pohocco, held revival meetings resulting in ten conversions. Rev. J. M. Whisler held services in the Middlebranch church. The church is revived and eight converts await baptism. Twenty-six were baptized on Easter Sunday in the First church, Omaha, and forty-one new members were received. At Bridgeport, Evangelist Richards aided Pastor Sturdevant in revival work that much strengthened the church. Seven have been baptized.

Bawden's Work at Kavali

By FRANK H. LEVERING

I WRITE of the work as located at our mission station Kavali, although there are three settlements—the headquarters settlement at Kavali, one at Bitragunta and the other at our mission station Allur. We refer to the work as among the Erukalas but there are a few people belonging to the Dasaris and Kathiras. The number from these other tribes is not large and it is correct to call the settlement at Kavali the Erukala industrial settlement. The full names of these tribes are Donga Erukalas, Donga Dasaris and Donga Kathiras—Donga meaning, in Telugu, thief. These thief tribes are a bit proud of the designation. These three mentioned are far from being the only thief or criminal tribes. In addition to these tribes, in the extreme southern part of India, there are several thief castes.

It is a mighty work that Bawden is engaged in at those settlements. The chief reason why he succeeds so well is that Jesus Christ is at the center of the effort. The people he is transforming were nomads, wandering from spot to spot on the open plains of India, camping in the hot sun, in grass mat covered shelters not four feet high. How do they shelter themselves in such quarters? They are out of doors all day and creep under shelter at night, and not always even at night. Why do they live so? I asked one of them once why he lived in that sort of a tent. The reply was, "My ancestors lived in such tents; am I better than my ancestors?" Do you notice lack of desire to improve?

About fifteen years ago the government decided to make these wanderers stay one place, learn some form of industry that is honorable, support themselves instead of living by what they can steal, send their children to school—to make them reverse their whole former code of life, then centuries old. For ten years Mr. Bawden has been on the job.

Has the kingdom of God been advanced by what he has done? The question that an American Christian would ask is, "Have any of them been converted?" Yes, several hundred. Many have not been, but many of those converted have been won to lives of respectability and are no longer thieves. Several hundred of their children have been educated in the schools at Kavali. These, as well as their parents, are taught to do industrial work. Even though many reject the offers of salvation made to them, as people in America do, it is still a great achievement to make them honest and industrious and to win them from crime as a sole means of livelihood. Such was their former condition; under Hinduism they were doomed both for the present and the future.

I wish I could make you see these things as I see them. Think of having 3000 people, predestined by birth to criminality, under your personal care to make over. Bawden is also the missionary in charge of the Kavali mission station; field, and has the preachers and workers among the Telugus, for the Telugu Mission, under his hands.

This mission is carrying on thirty-lines of work. At the Bitragunta settlement there is a little church that has its own pastor and gives to several outside objects.

The Doctor Barnardo Home

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

ONE of the wonderful works of faith discussed in our missionary book, "Prayer and Missions," is thephanage work in England begun by Doctor Barnardo seventy-five years ago.

They are just celebrating their diamond jubilee and are reviving the prayer bands founded by Doctor Barnardo thirty-eight years ago. At that time had 11,000 members in every country of the world. As a feature of the jubilee they are reviving and extending the prayer bands. Over 100,000 children have been rescued from lives of misery; the great majority of these have been brought into a vital faith in Christ.

The original covenant of prayer has been reprinted and is now ready for distribution. In it the members promise to give five minutes of audible or silent prayer each day. Four topics of prayer are given in behalf of these needy children of the world: first, for their conversion; second, for wisdom, love and strength to be given to those in character; third, that the hearts of God's children may be touched to give as they have opportunity and fourth, for guidance and blessing on the Sunshine department. Anyone who wishes to join the prayer band, or to know more of the present status of the homes may write to Miss Fie Bentham, 37 Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, London, N. W. 8, England.

A British Causerie

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

The Great Strike

FOR the first time in history, England has been smitten by a general strike nearly all grades of workers. The story of the dispute is very simple. The mining industry of this country has been slowly reaching a crisis. Many of the mines are nearly worked out, and others are so costly to work that the owners declare they can only lose money by continuing them. Certain negotiations have been proceeding for nearly a year with a view to discovering a way out.

To carry us over the period of parleying the government gave subsidy out of public funds of £23,000,000—roughly one hundred and fifteen million dollars. When the period of the subsidy expired no settlement had been reached. A commission had been appointed and had presented its report. One of the things recommended was a temporary reduction of wages and an extension of working hours. The leaders of the miners flatly declined to consider either of these two things. A deadlock thereupon ensued. Again and again members of the government met the men and tried to come to terms. At the eleventh hour when it was hoped that an honorable settlement had been reached negotiations were broken off, and at once the Trades Union Council took the grave step of ordering a general strike. Railroad men, printers, transport men, and workers of other grades left their work and thus challenged the entire community. On the first day of the strike everything was paralyzed. Neither trains, trams, nor buses ran. We were taken back in an hour to a period of a 100 years ago.

The nation as a whole has condemned the strike as wholly illicit. It is a blow to a constitutional government and if the principle which underlies it is admitted to be sound then farewell to all liberty. Henceforth it would be open to any disaffected group to hold the nation to ransom. England would have to take down its sign, and go out of business.

After a fortnight of misery and inconvenience the strike has ended. But its full consequences have yet to be borne. Industry and trade have been seriously dislocated and it will be a long time before things return to normal. Unemployment has greatly increased and many private people have been hit. Even the strike leaders now realize the thing was a costly mistake. The agreement drawn up between the railroad men and the companies reveals this quite clearly. Terrible as the experiment has been, it may yet prove to be a blessing in disguise, for it has clearly proved that force is an illicit and wholly useless method of settling disputes. The general strike on paper was an attractive thing to many;

in practice it has proved to be a crime and a blunder. I venture to say that it will be the last we shall have, and other nations may well profit by our bitter experience.

One man stands out above all others in this unfortunate affair; he is the prime minister, Mr. Stanley Baldwin. His greatness and goodness have won the affection and admiration of all parties. To him, more than to any other man, we owe the happy settlement. Had certain other men been at the head of affairs we should have been involved in civil war. Mr. Baldwin's name will go down to posterity as one of the greatest in our history. He is definitely a Christian man and in this affair he has been inspired by the true fear of God. For this we cannot be too thankful.

The Case of the Miners

It may be said at once that the strike has not lessened sympathy for the miners who have certainly a good case to bring before the public. The lot of many of them is undoubtedly very hard and it deserves the greatest consideration. Many of them are God-fearing men and by no means inclined to anarchy. Without them England's power would be crippled. Their occupation is hazardous and the stage upon which they work is set in darkness. In days gone by they have suffered many hardships not the least of which has been the knowledge that snobbish people have regarded them as an inferior race of beings, simply because their occupation condemned them to a dirty task and to an underground life. Until recently many of their homes were unfit for human habitation. Others made millions out of them while they received as little as they would take. Those days have gone but the memory of them remains and it is only reasonable and just that men upon whose labor the nation depends should live in comfort and happiness. There are many who believe that the mining industry should be in a measure nationalized, as coal is a commodity unlike any other. This, however, I shall not discuss. The ending of the strike will leave us where we were. The mining dispute will still have to be settled, and we believe it will be settled honorably to all concerned.

The Social Order

One thing has been made quite clear by this strike; when all is over we shall have to begin an intense work of education among the young. We are suffering from two things: first, a great ignorance of the very elements of economics, and second, a moral restraint resulting from the irreligion which has crept over us like a deadly plague. It is significant that the communist party in this country is almost entirely anti-Christian. One of the hymns taught its youth in the Sunday schools is a blasphemous parody of a Christian hymn and has for a refrain the words: "the blight of the world is Jesus." Others who are not communist are wholly out of touch with the churches, yet as children they were in our Sunday schools. They have grown up ignorant of Christ and the Bible.

Whose is the fault?

The only hope for the future is the evangelization of youth today. The church has played at this work and often treated it as an addendum to adult work, leaving it sometimes to the least competent of its members. Not until we concentrate upon the work among the young shall we overtake our losses and prepare for a worthy future. Beyond this we have the obligation to set forth a new social order based upon Christian principles. Neither communism nor conservatism represents the mind of Christ; they are both based upon selfishness. Christ's law of service as the law of all life has been ignored or derided with disastrous results. The social unrest in Britain is not wholly due to wild men, it is the natural reaction from the un-Christian social order which has marked so much the industrial epoch. In a bigger sense than ever we must get back to Christ.

The Baptist Union Meetings

The Baptist Union is generally first in the field for the May meetings. This year they were held at Leeds under most trying conditions. On the first day of assembly the general strike was called. This meant that delegates who were billeted at any distance from the city could not travel to and fro save under great difficulties. Others seeing trouble ahead, returned home at once while trains were available. Consequently the meetings suffered in attendance, although not so much as might have been expected. The spirit of the gatherings was wonderful. While there was an undertone of genuine anxiety there was also a spirit of hope and sympathy.

The large auditorium was crowded to hear the address of the president, Doctor Rushbrooke, and also for the missionary meeting. Space prevents me from giving a résumé of the week but I am bound to report one or two things. The chairmanship of the president evoked the greatest admiration from all. He had a difficult task which he carried through with distinction. His address from the chair was rich, varied, yet one, and was a vindication of the underlying evangelical principles of the Baptist church. I think it would be generally agreed that while it was frankly denominational it was devoid of anything like secretarianism. Several valuable papers were read on such subjects as conversion, the communion, discipleship. The paper by Doctor Underwood on conversion was a masterpiece. I hope it will be printed in a convenient form and obtain a wide circulation amongst all classes. It was the work of a scholar who has the gift of an exceptional lucidity. Doctor Cameron came all the way from Canada to represent American Baptists. His sermon for the missionary society although starting from a threadbare text was a fresh and virile deliverance and it made a profound impression.

The one utterance which above all others for sheer importance stands out was the address of Dr. Everett Gill of the Southern Convention on the color question. Calmly and deliberately this authority set before us the case of color and made it plain beyond doubt that this is the question of the near future. Americans and Australians are especially involved in it although it is, of course, a world question. The audience listened spellbound as it learned that there are nearly forty millions of red Indians in the world for whom a new race consciousness is awakening. The proportion of colored peoples to white folk is at present two and a half to one; in fifty years it will be five or ten to one if the white races continue to practice birth control while the rest increase at their present rate. It is the white man as well as the colored man who needs Christianizing if the greatest clash the world has ever known is to be avoided.

The great business of the Leeds meetings, Mr. Aubrey thinks, was the reply to Lambeth. It is the first denominational reply to be given. Some will think it closes the door to all further negotiation. This is not so. It invites cooperation, but it makes it clear that free churchmen, while not denying the validity of Episcopacy as a method of church government, cannot accept it as the only one or even necessarily as the best. And there the matter rests for the present.

May 20, Birmingham, England.

Charles Lyman Rhoades

An Appreciation

By G. A. LEICHLITER

On Mar. 31 Rev. Charles Lyman Rhoades left this earthly way for the morning land. He had served faithfully and exceedingly well for many a year and his going was without any hesitancy. He knew its approach. He talked of the little affairs to be cared for before he went and then in the early morning the day, the new day, dawned indeed.

He was my dear and devoted friend. He was wise in mind and heart, experienced in years and a most kindly and intelligent hearer. He radiated goodness and kindness and no pastor ever had a more loyal supporter. He was my predecessor, yet he of ripe years and careful preparation listened to the declarations of youth, ever with only the most kindly comment.

There remains only one word that seems to cover my regard for him—friend.

Many men felt a catch in the throat when the word came that he had gone. They loved him. He was worth it and worthy of it. And while the veil now hides him they love him still. "He shall not die" to them.

At the Greater Buffalo Advertising club he was held in rare esteem. Only two weeks before he went they called him to speak of the going of two former presidents, and as he declared his unshaken faith in the immortality of the soul "his face verily did shine." Only two weeks slipped by until he himself had joined "the innumerable caravan" of which he then spoke. The men of the club sat in silent tribute to him on the day of the public service.

This church sees in his going the passing of a choice soul and the pastor loses one of his choice and brotherly friends.

The following poem was written by G. A. Leichter for the public funeral service and afterwards published by the Greater Buffalo Advertising club in Doctor Rhoades' memory:

The Severed Friendship

Can it be that he,
My friend, is gone from me?
Gone on, and not again
That kindly, kindly face
Shall greet me in the way?
Can it be that voice is stilled,
That fine heart pulseless,
And those hands
That once pressed mine in a fine friendliness

Are resting on his quiet breast?
Can it be that he
Who only yester morn
Hailed me with a cheer
Is gone, and here
I find his chair unoccupied?
What thief was this
Who in the night stole by
And took my friend?
What vandal infamy
Has shaken into ruin,
Shapeless all and desolate,
The temple of companionship?
What ruthless hand cuts down,
This pilgrim friend
When rich, ripe life
Was in full, later bloom?

"Be still my heart.
He made his gift to thee!
And as the days go by Thou'lt see his life
Lived out again,
For otherwise it cannot be."

He met me in the way
When need was mine,
And friend he was to me.
Ripe wisdom his
Along the path of life
He'd gained rare treasures of the mind.
Rich in thought was he!
High paths he'd found,
Nor stooped to ignobility.
And here and there and there,
Along the road by which he came,
Strong men found him a counsellor
And faithful friend:
And little children loved him
For his great and tender kindness.
And can it be this friend
Is gone and shall not Come again to me?

Aye, he's just passed from sight.
E'en yet I feel the contact
Of his noble life.
No thief, no ruthless hand
No vandal infamy,
Has snatched away nor soiled
His gracious soul.
Did not he live
As not to die e'en though
He pass beyond the limit
Of our measured sight?
Was not his faith fixed high?
Long years that crowned him
With their peopled ministries,
Found not his consciousness
Of the God-presence fail.
Courageously he walked
To yonder shore,
Whispered his last good-bye,
Stepped over and he was at home.
So why should I
Be grieved and sad, disconsolate?
He's gained the crown
Toward which he's moved
Since break of day.

And so 'tis best.
The journey he began in morning time
Is done, and he's at rest.
And good 'twill be
When late the lengthening shades
Shall tell me my day fades
To know that out beyond,
My old friend waits
And through long, long years
Yea, through Eternity
No power shall take
My friend from me.

Crozer Theological Seminary

By FRANK GRANT LEWIS

THE fifty-eighth annual commencement exercises of Crozer Theological seminary were held May 23-25. The baccalaureate sermon on Sunday morning was given by Dr. Sparks W. Melton, of Norfolk, Va., who also preached the missionary sermon in the evening. Both of these services were held in the Upland church.

On Monday morning, according to custom, the Philadelphia Conference of Baptist Ministers met at the seminary and was addressed by Dr. Avery A. Shaw of Brooklyn. This meeting was followed by luncheon in the seminary dining room for ministers and others in attendance the luncheon also being an established custom. This year it was held for the first time in the new dining room on the first floor provided last summer by reconstruction of the former magazine and adjoining class rooms and now an attractive place for such gatherings as well as for students at other times.

Monday afternoon the alumni business meeting was held and the following officers elected: president, W. D. Thatcher 1895; vice-presidents, F. F. Briggs, 1894 and E. J. Radcliffe, 1911; secretary-treasurer, Dr. Charles A. Walker, 1892; and assistant secretary-treasurer, Rittenhouse Neisser, 1902.

At this meeting the alumni appointed a committee to cultivate among the churches interest in the work of the ministry and the work of Crozer Theological seminary. They also expressed their hearty appreciation of the service rendered the seminary by Prof. Henry C. Vedder, who retires according to seminary rules of age retirement. This appreciation was formally expressed by the trustees at their meeting at the same time in which they recorded "their appreciation of the long, faithful and efficient service of Doctor Vedder, as professor of church history; their gratitude for the prestige he has brought to the seminary by his many scholarly publications; their joy that through the thirty-two years he has enriched the lives of so many students by his Christian character, his unwearied industry and unflinching courage; their praise for his championship of the fundamental Baptist principles of spiritual competency of the individual Christian before God, of personal allegiance to Jesus Christ as the true basis of discipleship and of the autonomy of the local church as a company of believers united by common loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ; and their hope that many years may be his in which he shall, through speech and pen, continue to instruct, guide and inspire any who may no longer meet him face to face in lecture room and on the campus."

The exercises of the graduating class were held on Tuesday morning before an audience which filled commencement hall. The exercises included an address by Dr. Charles W. Gilkey of Chicago, an address to the graduating class by President Evans, the conferring of degrees and diplomas on eighteen young men who had finished their work during the year, and announcements by Mr. W. P. Crozer, president of the board of trustees, concerning the plans for the seminary during the coming year. At the time mention was made of the leave of absence of Prof. Isaac G. Matthews to study in Europe and Palestine, and the continuance of extension lectures by members of the faculty in Philadelphia.

Doctor Crannell Becomes President Emeritus of Kansas City Seminary

THE 1926 commencement of the Kansas City Baptist Theological seminary marked the end of its first quarter-century of life. It also marked the close of almost quarter-century administration of its first and only president. At the end of the exercises on the evening of May 26, announcement was made of the resignation of Dr. P. W. Crannell from his leadership of the institution.

For several months, illness had kept Doctor Crannell from his work, and he had tendered his resignation some time ago. The board of trustees, however, was deeply unwilling to accept it. They realized that in Doctor Crannell were combined to an exceptional degree vigorous leadership, ripe scholarship, and wisdom. They made every endeavor to lighten his labors and so make it possible for him to continue his work for many more years, and it was with the greatest reluctance that they agreed at length to release him.

Despite Doctor Crannell's continued illness, the student body had not flagged in its prayers for his restoration and his return to his post in the future. The resignative announcement came, therefore, as an unexpected blow, and the stricken silence that fell upon the assemblage was significant of the depth of its feeling.

At the meeting of the alumni association that afternoon it had been voted to establish a Crannell memorial scholarship fund in his honor. During the evening program a "chest of gold" to the amount of several hundred dollars was presented to Doctor and Mrs. Crannell as a love gift from faculty, alumni, students, and trustees. Now it was announced that the life title of president emeritus had been conferred upon him as a further expression of esteem.
